MR. M. DONOVAN, 100 N. Clark St., Chicago, writes: "When I commenced your treatment I was nearly blind with cataracts. I have no trouble now in reading the finest newspaper print without glasses."

MRS. MARTHA LEFEVOUR, of West Chicago, Ill., writes: "I wish it was within my power to express my gratitude to you for removing cataracts from both of my eyes without an operation, and for returning my vision with less than three months' treatment."

ROBERT McLAREN, of Ludington, Mich., writes: "Your treatment has removed the cataracts, and both my eyes are now perfectly straight and the vision is once more perfect."

TESTIMONIALS

REV. W. E. MILLINGTON, of Keesville, N. Y., writes: "I have been cross-eyed for sixty years, and was nearly blinded with cataracts. Your treatment has succeeded after all others have failed."

HON. EDWARD P. VAIL, ex-Judge, First National Bank Bldg., Chicago, writes: "I am convinced through your treatment of my son's eyes that you can accomplish that, in your profession, which all other noted specialists of our country have failed to do."

CHARLES FREBURG, North Freedom, Wis., writes: "My eye is perfectly straight. My friends are much amazed and surprised."

GEORGE E. DOANE, Contractor, 6339 Champlain Ave., Chicago, writes: "I can not say how you succeeded, but that my eye is sound and well and the tumor is entirely gone. My faith in your treatment is unbounded, for I had been repeatedly advised that the trouble was incurable."

MR. BRAME HOOD, Adv. Mgr. of the Montgomery Journal, Montgomery, Ala., writes: "I would not take $10,000 for the good you have done me."

DR. O. W. F. SNYDER, the famous Obesity Specialist, Chicago, writes: "I want to say again that I believe you have solved the problem of a bloodless and painless cure for eye troubles."

CROSS-EYES STRAIGHTENED WITHOUT THE KNIFE

AND WITH ABSOLUTELY NO PAIN

I am particularly anxious to learn of every case which has suffered unsuccessful treatment or which has been pronounced incurable by physicians or oculists. Do not let your unsuccessful experiments discourage you. Write me a full history of the trouble and I will be pleased to give the matter my personal attention and give you my opinion. THIS OPINION AS WELL AS MY ADVICE WILL COST YOU NOTHING WHATEVER, AND WILL NOT PUT YOU UNDER ANY OBLIGATION OF ANY KIND OR NATURE. This is a fair proposition. You may rest assured that if I consider your case beyond relief that I will candidly tell you so. I have no false hopes to hold out, neither do I make any promises which I can not fulfill. If, later, you decide to place your case in my hands for treatment, you will find my fees reasonable and within your grasp. A moment of your time in writing to me may save you or a friend from a life of darkness.

I have still some copies of my Book, "DISEASES OF THE EYE, THEIR CURE WITHOUT SURGERY." This book is without a doubt the finest of its kind in the world, and consists of eighty pages, sixty pages of which are devoted to eye diseases. Nearly fifty ordinary diseased conditions are treated in separate chapters and the book is illustrated throughout with colored plates. The remaining twenty pages are devoted to testimonials from cured patients all over the country. The book is well worth its weight in gold to any one who is suffering with their eyes. Many books of comparatively no value are daily sold for $5.00 a copy. I offer it to you, however, for the asking. IT IS ABSOLUTELY FREE. Either fill out the attached coupon and return it to me or mail me your name and address upon a postal card. DO IT NOW.

THE WORLD'S APPEAL TO THE CHURCH.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

WE weary of your forms and creeds,
 Your soulless psalms and prayers;
O tell of Him whose words and deeds
 Show forth the love He bears!

We ask to hear of Him who taught
 In blessed Galilee;
We long to know the deeds He wrought
 Beside the silvery sea.

Teach us of Him by children loved,
 Close to His bosom pressed;
Tell how He sought, where'er He moved,
 To give the weary rest!

Tell how He suffered for our gain
 In dark Gethsemane;
Tell of the cross He bore, the pain
 Endured on Calvary!

Sin-weary, we would lean upon
 His arm, who knew no sin;
In darkness, we would know His dawn;
 O let His light shine in!

Teach us no more vain words, we plead,
 But to our sad hearts bring
The words of Him who knows our need,
 Our Brother—and our King!

SPECIAL CENTENNIAL FUND OF $250,000

FOR LAND AND BUILDINGS ON OUR FOREIGN MISSION FIELDS.

IN PERSONAL GIFTS BY THE CENTENNIAL, 1909.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society joins heartily in the Centennial campaign. We want to help to impress the world with its significance.

We can never be a really great people in America if we do only small things in the heathen world. The chief strength of the apostolic church was expended outside of itself. This was one secret of its marvelous growth. God will measure us in 1909 as he is measuring us to-day, by what we are doing to redeem the whole world.

We appeal for a special Centennial Fund of $250,000 in personal gifts for lands and buildings. This is needed, every dollar of it is much needed. Indeed, our splendid army of workers, numbering nearly 500, are greatly retarded in their largest usefulness for lack of better equipment. The missionary in a heathen land must have a home in which to live, a chapel in which to preach, a school in which to teach, a hospital in which to heal, as workers in America. This fact will be appreciated by thoughtful Christian people at once.

YOUR PLEDGE GOOD.

Of course, you will help create this CENTENNIAL FUND. All our people will delight to have fellowship in this magnificent enterprise. We ask your co-operation NOW! Your generosity now will help to provoke many others to a like liberality.

Please sign the following pledge and cut it out or copy on a postal card and return AT ONCE. We hope to make a good report of progress soon. Be kind enough to act promptly and help to insure success from the very start. Make the amount as large as your liberality and purse will permit.

Send to F. M. RAINS, Sec.,
Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

THE PLEDGE.

I agree to donate to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, Ohio, $.. per year for three years beginning June 1st, 1907, to aid in the creation of a special Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollar ($250.000) Centennial Fund to be used for lands and buildings by the Society.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

LOOKING TOWARD PITTSBURG.

There is no other Centennial achievement in which the brethren seem more deeply interested nor in which they are more enthusiastically enlisted than in placing a Christian paper in every Christian home.

The rapidity of the increase in the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist is exciting a great deal of favorable comment, the general trend of which appears in the following communications from Brothers Smither and Russell.

It is our desire that all our other papers gain thousands of new readers, too, and we believe they are. It would diminish the pleasure with which we view our own lengthening lists if we thought it was done to the injury of our editorial colleagues of other papers instead of signifying that myriads of hitherto unread Disciples were weekly gaining that information concerning the meaning and progress of the kingdom and the inspiration heavenward that the people have a right to expect from our religious press.

A source of deep gratification to us in this movement is the manifestly growing popularity of all for which The Christian-Evangelist stands, "In faith. unity; in opinions and methods, liberty; in all things, charity," Bible research, ceaseless evangelism, growth in grace and the knowledge of the Lord Jesus and the unification of all God's people.

There are numerous gratifying features in the report of our Foreign Missionary Society. Two hundred and sixty-eight thousand seven hundred and twenty-six dollars this year shows we are over the quarter million mark to stay. The growing interest manifested by our Bible schools is a prophecy that in our second century we shall sweep far beyond the achievements of the first in world-wide evangelization. Like apples of gold is the statement of a gain of 344 contributing churches. Our people are now ready to believe that the best way of evangelizing the world is perfectly scriptural and a little longer demonstration of the economy and expedition of our Foreign Society will enlist in its support practically all our congregations having more than a name to live.

A Sanguine Convert.

BY WILLIAM J. RUSSELL.

We are stepping upon the wave of a new religious era. It is a joy and an inspiration to be permitted to live at the present time. The throbbing heart of even our own great religious brotherhood is anxiously and longingly waiting and working for the evangelization of the world. Forces that work for righteousness are being utilized as never before. Among these forces is the religious press. In my own ministry I find the people are more eager to get a religious paper than at any previous time. They want to know what the people are doing who are pleading for the Restoration of Primitive Christianity. The Centennial Propaganda has been announced with much fervor, and the people have caught a vision of 100,000 Disciples marching up to Pittsburg in 1909. They want to know what is being done preparatory to that great convocation. This is an incentive to take the paper, which, when once introduced into the home, is going to be read. This is going to mean much to the church in the future. It will increase the interest in all departments of the local work, and cause to be multiplied many fold our general benevolences. As ministers of the Gospel, I fear that heretofore we have been too indifferent toward the work of increasing the circulation of our religious papers. I know of one true and genuine conversion toward this work. The writer has been more than compensated in the part he took in placing fifty-three annual subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist in that many homes of the Frankfort Christian Church. In the future he does not propose to hold second place in this department of our educational work.

The Christian-Evangelist as a religious paper, either for the family, or the student of current and religious thought, is unsurpassed. It is dignified in its dress, gentle and optimistic in its spirit, deep and steady in its thinking. It does not move with fits and starts. There is nothing spasmodic about it. Where you find it to-day, there you will find it to-morrow. The writer has read every copy for more than twenty years. To him it has been equal to a course in any theological seminary. Its beloved Editor stands without a peer. His name has come to be a household word, familiar to all, from the youngest to the oldest. The future generations will rise up and call him blessed for the splendid service he has rendered.

The careful observer can not help but notice the wave of interest that is pointing toward The Christian-Evangelist. The paper, what it is in itself, has created this interest. The people know a good thing when they see it. The writer found many families dissatisfied with the paper they were taking. Gladly did they substitute The Christian-Evangelist. Let controversy continue when it is necessary to make clear our intellectual thinking. But the heart craves for something else besides controversy. It wants a clearer vision of God. It longs for more of that life that was exemplified in the person of Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Son of God. The Christian-Evangelist in its entire history has given much attention to heart culture, and the edification of the home life. This has made it a power for righteousness. It will continue to grow in favor. It is the truest and best exponent of the Disciples of Christ, and its loyalty to the fundamental principles of the Restoration Movement will win for it permanent and lasting praise.

Increasing Circulation of Christian-Evangelist.

BY A. C. SMITHER.

I am delighted to be apprised that The Christian-Evangelist has increased its circulation 30 per cent within the last year. This is remarkable and is a tribute to the sanity and discrimination of the Disciples of Christ with regard to a religious newspaper. The general spirit of The Christian-Evangelist, its sensible attitude on the Church Federation question, its avoidance of yellow journal methods. its Christian and catholic spirit must commend it to the approval of the intelligence of our rapidly increasing brotherhood. It is reported of Lincoln that he said: "You can fool some of the people all the time; you can fool all the people some of the time, but you can not fool all the people all the time." This is surely applicable to newspapers, though we must confess that with humiliation many of the people are deceived much of the time in this matter as in many others. One strong feature of The Christian-Evangelist is that you need never apologize to strangers for it. It does its work quietly but effectively. Let its circulation go on increasing. Enlarge its borders and lengthen its territory that Christ may be magnified as a result of its mighty service.

OUR CENTENNIAL HELPERS.

I am well pleased with The Christian-Evangelist. Its contents are of high order; its spirit amiable; its editorials are able. I admire Brother Garrison as I do but few men.—J. K. Ballou, minister, Sioux City, Ia.

I have taken your paper since the very beginning. Am now in eighty-third year and want to take it as long as I live. I recommend it to every Christian family, as well as those who are not.—V. B. Butler, Denver, Ill.

I am very grateful to be in receipt of The Christian-Evangelist every week. It is a great factor in religious life and work. I hope through the new subscriptions I am sending you to introduce it into many homes.—J. N. Scholes (minister), Lima, Ohio.

I enclose $1.50 to renew my subscription for your valuable paper. I trust that success will follow all your endeavors. God speed the good work you are doing and may your years be so lengthened as to see the fulfillment of your ardent labors.—E. G. Naylor, Louisville, Ky.

We are proud of The Christian-Evangelist as a Christian paper. It has been a constant source of pleasure and education to us for many years. We have been with you in your discussions and leading. May God give you many years of editorial life.—J. H. Fillmore (minister), Cincinnati, Ohio.

I want to thank you for the help I have received from your new book on "The Holy Spirit." It has confirmed former convictions in some things, while in others it has been a revelation to me, being associated on one side by the holiness, on the other by our own extreme legalists. It has helped me "to attain a clearer vision, a decided conviction and a largeness of comprehension."—C. E. Burgess (minister), Columbia, Mo.

Current Events

The President's Next Move.

In his speech at the dedication of the new Pennsylvinia capitol building at Harrisburg, President Roosevelt said some things which may be taken as pointing toward his next great legislative effort. The theme is the control of corporate wealth. No particular plan is yet outlined except that it must be done by the federal government. There must be "adequate supervision and control over the business use of the swollen fortunes of to-day"; and some power must "wisely determine the conditions upon which these fortunes are to be transmitted and the percentage that they shall pay to the government." Here is a program whose magnitude and daring dwarf the railroad rate bill into insignificance. And it is the program which the country needs far more than it needs any particular legislation touching currency or tariff schedules. We do not believe that the country is going to ruin, or that the existence of rich men, even of extremely rich men, is a proof of national decay. But that the peril of plutocracy confronts us, as it must ever confront every prosperous people, admits of no doubt. It is easy to generalize on this theme, but it is not easy to frame wise legislation which will accomplish the ends which the president defines, and it will be, perhaps, hardest of all to get such legislation enacted after it has been framed. The machine men of Mr. Roosevelt's party will feel no enthusiasm over such a measure. But a president in his second term has nothing to fear from the machine, and the present incumbent has never exhibited great deference to machine even in his first term.

Federal Government.

It is a part of the president's belief that the control of great fortunes can be accomplished only by the federal government. "Only the nation can do this work," he says. "To relegate it to the states is a farce." And again: "Actual experience has shown that the states are wholly powerless to deal with this subject; and any action or decision that deprives the nation of this power to deal with it simply results in leaving the corporations absolutely free to work without any supervision whatever. . . . I maintain that the national government should have complete power to deal with all this wealth which in any way goes into the commerce between the states—and practically all of it that is employed in the great corporations does thus go in." This, with much more to the same purpose expresses the president's conviction that henceforth in this country great national problems must be dealt with as national problems and not as state problems, and that any degree of loose construction of the constitution which may be necessary to this end is proper and justifiable. No academic doctrine of states rights, framed to suit conditions which are now wholly altered, must stand in the way of doing the things that must be done. This increase in the federal power is contrary to the traditional principles of the Democratic party, but the better element of that party is so strongly opposed to the rule of wealth that it should not be expected to offer any very serious opposition to the president's program.

The "Hearst Peril."

The Republicans of New York are taking the "Hearst peril" very seriously. They fear the power of Hearst's appeal to the labor vote. No man who has nine newspapers of his own is to be despised as an antagonist in this day of the power of the press. Perhaps, too, they affect a nervousness which they do not quite feel in order to guard against the dangers of over-confidence. The Republican chairman has secured the president's promise to take the stump for Hughes if the situation becomes really threatening. Mr. Hearst's letter of acceptance to the Independence League does not exhibit him as a profound political philosopher. His grand panacea for all evils of the body politic seems to be the election of officials for short terms so that every office-holder may be responsible at very short range to the people who elected him. That public officials should be responsible to the people is a principle fundamental to our form of government. But that this end is accomplished by reducing all terms of office to the minimum, is very shallow doctrine. The public is often impatient. A considerable part of it, being influenced by shrieking newspapers like Mr. Hearst's, is apt to be drawn into hasty opinions, from which, upon reflection, it is forced to retreat. It will not do to subject every day's work of an official to a separate scrutiny and keep him in office to-morrow or put him out according as we approve or disapprove of what he did to-day. It is general results that count, and no public official can properly be brought to account until he has had time to form and carry out a policy. It is particularly futile to expect an efficient and independent judiciary if the judges are, as Mr. Hearst recommends, elected by the people for short terms. Moreover, when elections are controlled by political machines and party bosses, the official is not likely to be the better public servant for being frequently called upon to remember who elected him. If by any chance Mr. Hearst should be elected, for example, it is not likely that Tammany will permit him to forget who elected him.

Taming the Jingos.

The Republican campaign orators are gradually getting it into their heads that it is not good form for them to indulge in spread-eagle talk about the flag going up to stay in Cuba, while the president and the secretary of state and Secretary Taft are busy saying that we are in Cuba only to give her another chance to try self-government. Senator Hemenway, who is an able statesman and ought to know better, has been making public predictions that we will keep Cuba, "because we need it," and urges the probability of annexation with the accompanying problems to be solved as a reason for continuing the Republican party in power. If a forcible annexation of Cuba by a Republican administration and congress were in prospect, it would be the best sort of reason for electing a Democratic congress. The published dispatches from Washington regarding the attitude of the administration, and probably private dispatches as well, are having their effect in taming the fiery jingo campaign orators.

Speed.

Two hundred and ninety-seven miles in two hundred and ninety minutes is the record made by the winner of the recent automobile race for the Vanderbilt cup. The race was won by a French car with a French driver named Wagner. (This is not the Wagner who expounds the simple life. This one is an able exponent of the very rapid life.) Of course a speed of over a mile a minute is no longer considered anything remarkable in a racing automobile. On a short spurt a racer recently covered two miles in fifty-eight seconds and the track was said to be "slow and dangerous." But this achievement of Wagner's was over nearly 300 miles of American road, and his time included the time required to replace a broken tire. There is not an express train in the world whose schedule calls for it to cover an equal distance in an equal time. While the achievement is interesting and wonderful, it is, to a degree, demoralizing to all owners of automobiles. It encourages them to believe that fast time on the road is the great desideratum. The very fast automobile has no legitimate place outside of the race track. At present we have only one set of roads for all sorts of traffic and any vehicle which travels at the rate of a mile a minute, or half of that, on these roads is dangerous to other traffic.

A Big Sale.

The steel trust has purchased a vast body of iron ore from James J. Hill and the Northern Pacific railroad. The amount of ore involved is estimated at 750,000,000 tons, which is a comfortable amount of raw material even for a concern as large as the United States Steel Corporation. It is said to be the largest financial transaction in this country since the buying out of Mr. Carnegie and the organization of the steel trust. It brings the Northern Pacific safely within the provision of the recent law requiring railroads to dispose of their interests in other industries, and it is the first important transaction in which the influence of that law is traceable.

The Grand Duke Michael, brother of the czar, and for many years before the birth of the czarevitch, heir apparent to the throne of Russia, has become engaged to the Princess Patricia, daughter of the Duke of Connaught and niece of the king of England. The princess will have to become a member of the Russian orthodox church, but that will be as easy as it was for the English princess who lately became the wife of King Alfonso to become a Catholic.

Editorial

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—IX.

The Right Use of Money.

It is clear that Jesus recognized wealth as constituting a peril to man's moral welfare. Not that wealth in itself is sinful, but that it is a temptation to luxury, to self-indulgence, to pride and arrogance, and to covetousness which is idolatry. We can only examine a few of the passages containing His teaching upon this subject but these will suffice to show how great value He attached to the proper use of money, or earthly treasures in any form.

In His sermon on the Mount, containing many fundamental principles of His kingdom, He said to His disciples: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust consume, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also." (Matt. 6:19-21.) How are we to reconcile the possession of wealth by a Christian with this statement of Jesus? We once put this question to a Christian man of large means, widely known for his generous gifts. His answer was, "I have not laid up any treasures for myself, but am trying to administer what means I have in the interest of the kingdom of God." How many other men regard their treasures in this light, we do not know, but we fear that a very much larger number of men and women, whose names are on our church books as Christians, regard their means as wholly and entirely their own, to be used for their own pleasure, with small recognition of any claim which God may have upon their possessions. Nor do they seem to be conscious that in spending their thousands for earthly pleasures and enjoyments and in giving a mere pittance to the Lord's work, they are rejecting the teaching of Christ and dishonoring the name Christian. The responsibility for this apparent ignorance of the claims of God upon our substance must rest with those whose duty it is to teach the people their religious obligations.

Again Jesus laid down the fundamental principle—"Ye can not serve God and mammon." (Matt. 6:24.) Mammon was the Syrian god of riches. To serve him is to devote our time, thought, and energies to the accumulation of wealth at the expense of our moral and religious nature, and to the neglect of the claims of God upon us. There can be little doubt that there are thousands of persons in all the churches who are trying this impossible experiment of serving God and mammon at the same time to the wider interests of the kingdom of God." Concerning these conflicting claims Jesus taught, "Seek ye first His kingdom, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Among the causes assigned by Jesus why the good seed sown in the hearts of men often fails to bring forth fruit is "the care of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches," which "choke the word." (Matt. 13:22.) That phrase, "the deceitfulness of riches," is most suggestive. How they lure the soul on with promises of satisfaction and happiness which are never realized! How the love of riches steals into the heart imperceptibly, deadens the moral sense, engrosses the time and thought and interest, until the victim almost unconsciously becomes a mammon-worshiper.

The story of the rich young man who came to Jesus to know "what good thing" he should do to have eternal life, is full of pathos. His moral life, apparently, was above reproach, but seeing the canker that was eating at the heart of this young man—the love of money—He puts his loyalty to the test by telling him to "Go, sell that which thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me." The young man was unequal to the test and "went away sorrowful." Commenting on the incident Jesus said, "It is hard for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I say unto you, it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." (Matt. 19:23, 24.) No wonder the disciples of Jesus were "astonished exceedingly," and asked "Who then can be saved?" Jesus' answer was: "With man this is impossible; but with God all things are possible." It is not impossible, therefore, for a rich man to be saved through the mercy of God, but be cannot be saved trusting in his riches nor while serving mammon rather than God.

When a man approached Jesus, saying, "Teacher, bid my brother divide the inheritance with me"—more concerned, evidently, about his earthly, than about his heavenly inheritance—Jesus said unto him, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" And then, using the incident to teach a lesson He said to His disciples, "Take heed, and keep yourselves from all covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." (Luke 12:13-15). Then follows the parable of the rich man whose ground brought forth plentifully and who reasoned with himself, saying, "What shall I do, because I have not where to bestow my fruits? And he said, this will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater, and there will I bestow all my grain and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, be merry. But God said unto him, thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee; and the things which thou hast prepared, whose shall they be? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." (Luke 12:16-21.) Alas, that such teaching as this should have made so little impression upon the life of the church! How zealous many men of wealth are for their creed, or for the ordinances, who utterly ignore this teaching of Jesus concerning the use of wealth and, apparently, without any twinge of conscience! No doubt there are hundreds of men in our churches who are congratulating themselves upon their accumulated possessions, thinking only of enlarging their barns and business houses, and who are unmindful of the demands which Christ is making upon them for the right use of the means which have been committed to them.

It will require another article to present even the most prominent passages in the teaching of Jesus on this vital question.

Christian Union in Australia.

In another place in this issue will be found an article from "The Southern Baptist" of Australia, entitled "Baptists and Disciples," which we are sure our readers will be interested in reading. The editor of "The Southern Baptist" is doubtless correct in stating that the chief differences hitherto existing between Baptists and Disciples of Christ relate to the "meaning of baptism, and to the personality and work of the Holy Spirit in the regeneration of the soul." Two things have contributed to lessen greatly these differences. One of these is that the position of the Disciples is being much better understood than it was during the days of debate and conflict, when the smoke of battle interfered with clearness of vision. No really representative man among the Disciples of Christ ever denied the personality and work of the Holy Spirit in regeneration, nor has any representative teacher among us ever made the ordinance of baptism an indispensable channel of grace without which there is no salvation, as do Roman Catholics and High Churchmen. The position of the Disciples of Christ on this subject is now much more clearly understood than in former days. On the other hand, it is only true to say that there doubtless has been, by many Disciples at least, an over accentuation, or at least a disproportionate emphasis of baptism, growing naturally enough out of the discussions of the times, while, at the same time, there has no doubt been an unauthorized limitation of the work of the Holy Spirit, on the part of some, in opposing certain extreme views on that subject held by others. The period of battle having passed away, in the main, and the real constructive work having begun, the position of Disciples on these and other questions is being stated in more irenic spirit and with a wiser distribution of emphasis.

Another fact should be stated, which we are sure no intelligent Baptist will deny, that the Baptists have likewise modified their former teaching on this subject, giving an emphasis to the place of the gospel in relation to faith and to the work of the Spirit that was not given aforetime by many Baptists, and discarding certain extreme views of the Holy Spirit, which were once commonly held. This mutual approach to a saner and more scriptural view of these questions has brought the two bodies into much greater harmony than once existed. There are partisans in both religious bodies, however, who stoutly deny any such approximation and who ring the changes on the old party slogans, and who imagine that in doing so they are manifesting exceptional loyalty to the truth! No doubt these constitute a diminishing number, and sooner or later the irenic spirit will prevail, and the two bodies co-operate, in all practicable ways, in promoting the great principles which they hold in common.

The author of the work on "The Holy Spirit" does not claim that all his brethren endorse every position taken in the book. The truth is, several brethren have taken strong exceptions to some of these positions; but that the main teaching of the book would be endorsed by the great body of representative preachers and teachers among the Disciples of Christ, there can be no reasonable doubt. Any irenic statement from the Baptist point of view of their attitude to-day on these questions would, we believe, receive as much opposition from extreme Baptists as this work on "The Holy Spirit" has received from the Disciples.

Notes and Comments.

The "Christian Weekly" is grieved that the "Baptist Argus" should have said recently that "Two of their [our] leading papers are week after week sending forth the truth in connection with baptism." The Christian-Evangelist is suspected by the "Weekly" of being one of these papers, and the editor says "We have asked these two papers to state plainly and publicly whether the "Argus" is right in this claim." So far as The Christian-Evangelist is concerned, we have no disposition to deny the mild impeachment that we are "sending forth the truth in connection with baptism." We are glad the "Argus" thinks so. We regret that the "Christian Weekly" does not rejoice with us. It is not for us to deny that the position we have stated is in harmony with the true Baptist position, if Baptists think so. We believe every statement we have made on the subject is in harmony with the New Testament teaching, and if the "Baptist Argus" and other Baptist authorities agree with our statements, and claim them as a statement of their position, we thank God and take courage.

If one wishes his faith in the Gospel enlarged and his zeal for missions quickened, let him read the Thirty-first Annual Report of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, as we have just been doing. What faith, what zeal, what courage, what heroism, what joy, these missionaries of the foreign field manifest! And how the work prospers in every land! In dreamy old India, in awakened Japan, in awakening China, in darkest Africa, from the far-off Philippines under the stars and stripes, from Cuba, the Pearl of the Antilles, from staid old England, Scandinavia and the Hawaiian Islands, the work goes bravely and triumphantly on. What a cheering note is that from China, where our own missionaries and those of the Presbyterians and Methodists are uniting in an effort to build a great university at Nanking! Why not? The Baptists, Congregationalists and Disciples of Christ are uniting in building up a Christian institution in Southern California. Truly "it is day-break everywhere." Read this report from cover to cover and get a vision of what God is doing through our co-operation in foreign lands.

Scarcely less inspiring, and even more stimulating to our patriotism, is the annual report of the operations of the American Christian Missionary Society. What a mighty base of operations is this magnificent domain for world-wide movements for the betterment of mankind! What unused opportunities and undeveloped resources lie dormant in this land of mighty possibilities! Here, too, in many a city, town and outpost are faithful heralds proclaiming the good news of salvation through Christ and pleading for greater love and unity among Christians. One can not read this report without remembering the Master's words, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he thrust forth more laborers into the field, for truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few." How many places are calling for evangelists to tell "the old, old story of Jesus and his love"! What a mighty work our Home Board could accomplish if it had the funds at its disposal to respond to all these appeals! And yet, even with limited resources, see what splendid results are achieved. If such victories can be won with only a half-awakened church, what might be accomplished if our entire membership were fully awake to their duties and obligations, and were unitedly devoted to the evangelization and Christianization of our home land?

Referring to the union in educational work in China mentioned above, Frank Garrett, of Nanking, says, in a letter to the Editor:

> "Our movement here to unite with the Presbyterians and Methodists in educational work is the greatest opportunity of our lives. Every professor is left perfectly free to teach and to preach the truth as he sees it. Our men are not at all afraid our cause will suffer in the open light of the working day on the mission field. There is more desire here among all churches that we present a united ront to the foe than there is at home. There is now so much love and sympathy and desire to be mutually helpful in all relations that the possibility of serious internal strife is precluded."

We have always felt that Christian union would receive its greatest impetus from the foreign field, where the missionaries are compelled to stick closer to the simple Gospel, and hence to the Master himself.

A Petition.

Henry van Dyke.

These are the gifts I ask of thee, Spirit serene;
Strength for the daily task,
Courage to face the road,
Good cheer to help me bear the traveler's load.
And for the hours of rest that come between,
An inward joy in all things heard and seen.
These are the sins I fain
Would have Thee take away:
Malice, and cold disdain,
Hot anger, sullen hate,
Scorn of the lowly, envy of the great,
And discontent that casts a shadow gray
On all the brightness of the common day.

Speaking of the progress China is making along all lines Brother Garrett says:

> "You are right in believing that China is to make great progress in the next twenty-five years. I read only yesterday a governor's speech at the opening of the Shanghai—Soochow railroad. He said five years ago there was the greatest prejudice against railroads in China. To-day they are called for everywhere. There was wonderful enthusiasm at these opening ceremonies in Soochow. This road will be finished into Nanking next year. The work is progressing rapidly. Industrial, political, educational and social changes are following each other in a mad rush. You can scarcely call it less, when one considers the immensity of the nation and her forces. We fear the pace cannot be sustained. There will be a reaction. But never returning to within sight of her former ground. Permanent progress is being made. We are glad to have even a small part in this great work. As the advance of China surprises the world so the advance of the church in China will be a revelation to Christendom. The privilege of having a part in the shaping of the young church in China is the greatest opportunity that can come to any man."

Current Religious Thought.

And now when we have fully convinced ourselves that pedobaptists know their duty with reference to baptism, but through general perverseness and a denominational pride that will not acknowledge the truth even when fully perceived; and while we are discussing with so much animation what their fate will be for refusing to accord to baptism its rightful and recognized place in the plan of salvation, comes the "Herald and Presbyter" in an editorial on "Baptism Not Saving," and thus cheerily plays havoc with our cherished interpretation of the old proof tests. That we may have more charity for Presbyterian pews and realize more fully the necessity of preaching "first principles" we give the editorial in full:

> "Our Campbellist friends and others, who lay undue stress on baptism, in the form of immersion, as being a saving ordinance and for the remission of sins, have been led into their wrong position by a mistaken reading of the Scripures. They read of "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," and think that the remission is connected with baptism when it is connected primarily with repentance. It is "repentance for the remission of sins." Then again they read Peter's exhortation, in Acts 2:38, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins," overlooking that all between "repent" and "for the remission of sins" is in the nature of a parenthesis. Baptism is a duty and an enjoined sacrament of great spiritual significancy, but it is nowhere said to be of saving power or a condition of sin's forgiveness. Lest there should be a mistake made as to this Christ says distinctly that "he that believeth not shall be damned," whether he has been baptized or not. If the baptism is connected with faith it is where it should be, and the baptized one who believes shall be saved. If the baptism is connected with the repentance which is the condition of forgiveness, as it should be, then the baptized one who is truly repentant and believing will be forgiven. But the salvation is conditioned on repentance and faith, and baptism is an external act of obedience which is connected with but does not procure the salvation."

Editor's Easy Chair.

No sooner had the Wabash train, drawing The Christian-Evangelist party, pulled out of the Union Station at St. Louis, on Thursday evening for Buffalo, than the convention was on. No time was lost waiting for the arrival at the convention city. Where a hundred readers of The Christian-Evangelist are gathered together representing a dozen states, there you have a general convention. The first order of business was greetings. We soon discovered that there were several on board who were with us on our special train to San Francisco last year. They wanted some more of the same kind of fellowship. After greetings and handshakings were over, then came the second course which, with preachers, is nearly always anecdotes. These followed each other in rapid succession, the chief rivalry being between W. T. Moore, of Missouri, and Jewell Howard, of Texas. Then came the "Quiet Hour" thoughts, the tattoo and dreams of loved ones left behind, and of warm greetings of fellow-workers on ahead. Silence reigned, except the roar of the train, which rushed on through the night, bearing more than two carloads of sleeping delegates, who had committed themselves to Him who neither slumbers nor sleeps, but whose watchful eye guards those who are seeking to advance his kingdom in the world. In spite of numerous accidents people still have faith in the railroads and in the fidelity of the man who holds the throttle-valve, and watches while others sleep. It is well that this is so!

On Friday morning when all had breakfasted, the delegation was crowded into one car by doubling up and standing in the aisle, and a social meeting was conducted. The leader stated that it was the spirit of a convention that made it great, and requested especially that prayers be offered for God's blessing upon the convention now meeting at Buffalo, and that all who gathered there might be actuated by the single purpose of spreading the Redeemer's kingdom. The Twenty-third Psalm was recited in concert, after which there were songs, prayers and short talks by quite a number of delegates, both men and women. Nearly all the states represented in the delegation were represented in these talks. It was one of the best railroad meetings we ever witnessed. There was a spirit of devoutness, of dependence upon God for success, of brotherhood, of unity, that augured well for the convention. Naturally enough there was great unanimity of sentiment in this delegation of convention goers, in behalf of the ideals for which The Christian-Evangelist stands. Some of them had come out of their way, as they stated, to enjoy the fellowship of this company of believers en route to the convention. It was a foretaste of the convention and a preliminary part of it. It was a preparation of mind and heart for the convention. Above the roar of the train the voices of the enthusiastic singers were heard in the sweet old songs of Zion. "Nearer, my God, to Thee," "All hail the power of Jesus' name," "Blest be the tie that binds," "My faith looks up to thee," were some of our "Songs of Ascent," on our way up to Buffalo to attend our great annual feast. But how much more of God's nature and will do we know than was known to those ancient Hebrews! Let us see to it that this increased knowledge of God, as revealed in Christ, finds expression in lives correspondingly more God-like.

At Detroit, where we arrived Friday morning, our train "took to water," as might have been expected, and we had a ride on the great ferry up the Detroit river to Windsor, Canada, where we passed under the Union Jack. The grass, however, seemed just as green, the crops as bountiful, the woods as beautiful and nature as charming as under the Stars and Stripes. We are glad that our own kith and kin own and control this fertile land so close to us, rather than some other nation more alien to our national traditions and institutions. At the Buffalo convention the geographical and political line between the United States and Canada will be ignored, and we will be one people, under one flag—the banner of the cross. If blood be thicker than water, much more is faith stronger than our geographical and governmental distinctions. When it became evident that our train would arrive at Buffalo too late for most of the evening program, another religious service was conducted, Brother Snively leading, in which the central thought was the Buffalo convention, our immediate Jerusalem, as a preparation for the Jerusalem that is above. In conclusion each one was asked to express a sentiment concerning the convention as to what he would like to have it emphasize and stand for. These sentiments were worthy of the representatives of a great people. At the close of this wonderful meeting we felt moved to say that should the train reverse its course and return to St. Louis at once we would feel well repaid for the two meetings we had enjoyed on the way. It was indeed a convention on wheels, and if the spirit of the delegation shall be the spirit of the entire convention it will be one of the most remarkable gatherings in our history in its spiritual power and consecration. That it should be this was the ardent desire and prayer of this entire company.

Those of our belated delegation who hastened at once to the church where the convention was in progress, without waiting to find hotel accommodations, had the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Ida Harrison, of Kentucky, on our Centennial aims and ideals. If we may judge the whole address by the part we heard, standing in the aisle of the crowded church, holding hat and overcoat, it was a great and timely address, sounding the very keynotes that need emphasis in this convention. This was the verdict concerning it by those who heard it all. The president, Mrs. A. M. Atkinson, had delivered her presidential address earlier in the evening, and we heard it described in highly complimentary terms. It was a great introductory audience that greeted our sisters in this opening session. The Methodist Church, in which the convention met, it is said, seats comfortably fifteen hundred people. It could not seat the audience on Friday evening by several hundred. The great audience was responsive to the sentiments of Mrs. Harrison's address, and we thought there was special zest put into the cheering when the speaker expressed the idea that one of the things to be greatly desired in our advocacy of Christian union was that we should learn to discuss our own differences with much more charity and fraternity. It is to be hoped that all the editors and contributors to our papers heard this sentiment, and its emphatic endorsement, and will govern themselves accordingly. It is a clear case of where vox populi is vox dei. It is scarcely too much to say that one of the greatest hindrances to our own unity and the more rapid progress of our plea for union is the discordant notes struck in our religious journals, and the absence, at times, of that spirit of fraternity without which union is impossible, either among ourselves or with others.

And now we are in the midst of greetings of friends new and old. For a whole generation we have been attending these conventions, and the faces of many of the old convention goers are very familiar to us. Indeed, one of our conventions without the presence of these men would seem very strange. Their heads, for the most part, are hoary, and some of them move about with feeble and cautious step, but their presence is a benediction to our great gatherings. But before long our convention will meet and these familiar faces will not be present. One by one they will be summoned home and we shall have to go on our way without their presence and counsel. But there is a great and growing host of younger men who attend these conventions to meet and greet whom is a great pleasure. They are preparing themselves for that leadership which must be soon laid down by the "Old Guard." Nor do we fear that they will be found wanting either in ability or fidelity to the great principles for which we stand. God bless our young men and give them a double portion of his Spirit for the great work that lies before them! And then, here are the men and women who come up from the ranks of our membership and who are the strength and stay of the local churches where they belong. Many of them are for the first time in one of our great annual conventions. It is a great privilege to these to look into the faces of men and women after whom or about whom they have been reading for many years. And so the social side of these conventions is not only a source of joy, but a means of grace as well, and because of it many come who would otherwise remain away. At the present writing there is every indication of a great convention. May it prove a very Bethel to those who have eyes to see ladders reaching up to heaven and angels ascending and descending!

Baptists and Disciples

By the Editor of "The Southern Baptist"

There are two bodies in Australia who hold and practise believer's immersion—the Disciples of Christ and the Baptists. Their separation has been frequently deplored, and conferences have been occasionally held between their respective leaders, to discover, if possible, some basis of union. Hitherto such conferences have led to no other practical result than a better understanding of our mutual hopes and aims, as it was found that apart altogether from any question of names or polity, there were grave differences of belief that precluded unity.

These differences were mainly with regard to the meaning of baptism, and to the personality and work of the Holy Spirit in the regeneration of the soul. Baptism is regarded by our brethren the Disciples as one of the conditions essential to salvation, as always associated with repentance and faith, while by many of them, possibly not by all, the Holy Spirit's direct operation on the soul was denied. On these two points Baptists greatly disagreed with them, and all hope of union seemed impossible.

Exactly the same difficulties have been experienced in America, where, in 1827, the division between Disciples and Baptists first occurred, and where the hope of reunion has never died out. But latterly some important deliverances by some of the ablest and most representative leaders of the Disciples show a remarkable agreement with Baptist beliefs, so that the question of organic union is brought within the range of practical politics.

We quote the following which appeared in the "Baptist Argus" from the "Christian Century," a leading Disciple paper:

"Christian baptism holds an important place in the plan of complete obedience to the commands of Christ and the program of the early church. It was a rite which was expressive of the union of the soul with the Master in his death, burial and resurrection. It was the outward sign of the inward grace of conversion. It ought not to be ignored or neglected. As possessing the value of open witness to Jesus it was enjoined by our Lord and practised by the early church. But that it occupies the same relation to salvation which is held by faith and repentance could only be affirmed by one who had failed utterly to appreciate Jesus' vital discrimination between life itself and the forms in which it is accustomed to express itself. We believe that baptism by immersion is the most beautiful and significant manner in which the penitent believer can set before the world his union with Christ. But nothing in either the teachings of Jesus or his total attitude toward the profound truths of the spiritual life indicates that it held in his mind or in his plan a place of equal moment with the qualities of character on which he always laid stress as the characteristics of the children of God."

Every word of this would be heartily endorsed by the Baptists of the "Commonwealth," and if the Disciples would only accept this utterance as the authoritative interpretation of the meaning and place of baptism one great obstacle to union would be removed.

Again on the subject of the work of the Holy Spirit, Dr. J. H. Garrison, the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, writes as follows, in his recently published book on "The Holy Spirit," which he says "is written from the general standpoint of the Disciples of Christ":

Page 60: "'The truth' is much broader than the inspired words written in the Bible. That the Holy Spirit in the church and in each individual believer exerts a power for the conversion of men, and that his influence is potent in the living preacher of the Word, whose very tones and gestures may help to convey the truth to the hearts of hearers, is in no way antagonistic to the fundamental position we hold on this subject. . . . Nor should any of these instrumentalities be separated form the agency of that Spirit who breathes where He listeth in His divine eagerness to infuse life into the barren souls of men. . . . It would be difficult, however, to exaggerate the value to the religious world, and to the work of evangelization, of the contention which our fathers have made from the beginning, and which we of to-day hold with the same tenacity, that the Gospel of the grace of God is the supreme and essential power for the conversion of men, and these great facts and truths in bringing men to penitence and faith, and to the acknowledgment of Christ."

Page 63: "We must be careful to avoid both the Word-alone and the Spirit-alone theories which at one time and another have prevailed, and not separate what God has joined together. The Holy Spirit is the divine agent in the work of our illumination, our spiritual quickening through faith, our penitence—in a word, in the whole process of bringing us to God. That is a fact to be everywhere and always recognized and emphasized. The failure to do this is sure to lead to superficial and legalistic views on the whole question of our conversion and salvation."

Further, when dealing with the declaration that the Holy Spirit is given to those who obey the Savior, Dr. Garrison does not limit the meaning of "obedience" as by some Disciples to the observance of baptism, but says:

Page 76: "In every such case, however, where the Holy Spirit is received and His divine teaching is followed, as soon as such person comes to a knowledge of any command or ordinance which he has not correctly obeyed, he will give the surest evidence of his possession of the Spirit by immediately submitting himself to such divine requirement. If this point needed further confirmation, we find it in the indisputable fact that thousands of earnest and sincere Christians, who are mistaken, in our judgment, as to the meaning of baptism, do give undoubted proof of their possession of the Spirit, in lives fragrant with Christian graces, and consecrated to the service of Christ."

"And this term 'obey' must not be used in too narrow and limited sense, meaning only the outward confession of Christ, and surrender to him in baptism. It involves the giving up of all known sin, and compliance with the will of God, so far as that will is known to us, and so far as lies within the limits of our ability."

On all these points this leader of the Disciples in America is in exact accord with the Baptists.

Again, on the question of Christian unity, Dr. Garrison writes:

Page 190: "It is evident that our Lord did not expect his disciples to be one with each other excepting as they were one in him. It can not be too emphatically stated that only those who are united with Christ in a vital union can be united with each other in carrying forward his work in the world. As it is the mission of the Holy Spirit to consummate this union between the believer and Christ, he is the source of all true and abiding unity."

Page 210: "Here, then, is our hope for the future triumphant church. It is to be a Spirit-filled and Spirit-guided church. It is, therefore, to grow in clearer and larger conceptions of truth, and especially of him who is the Truth incarnate, putting away the childish things of the past, and taking hold of the great problems which pertain to spiritual manhood."

If these declarations of belief are generally held by the Disciples of America, then it seems to us that it can only be a short time before Disciples and Baptists in America are merged in one.

And we are also persuaded that if the Baptists of Australia were assured that the above statements of beliefs, respecting baptism and the Holy Spirit, were cordially endorsed by the Disciples in these southern lands, then a platform would be at once laid, on which proposals for union might be hopefully discussed.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The Christian missionary convention of Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia met at Vienna, Va., October 1-4. Vienna is the only church we have in northern Virginia and works with our Maryland and District of Columbia co-operation. We take in five states and the District in our missionary territory, as one of our churches, Martinsburg, is in West Virginia and another, Waynesboro, is in Pennsylvania. The Vienna church started with a mission from our Vermont Avenue Church about fifteen years ago. I first preached in a schoolhouse in the little town which is about eighteen miles from the capital. The leader there, Joel Grayson, I baptized perhaps twenty-five years ago, when a page in the house of representatives. He is now one of the most important functionaries of the house, being a special employe of the document room, paid by special appropriation from the treasury, and probably better known and a greater necessity to the M. C's. than any man at the Capitol. The mission had many ups and downs. Our brother, Philemon Vawter, preached there and died there. Joseph Watson finally took hold of it and gathered in a goodly company of people, and under his leadership a beautiful chapel was erected on a hill among the chestnuts, and the congregation has fifty-four members, and is doing well under the pastoral care of W. T. Laprade. Here, a little out of town, with the goldenrod blooming all about us and the chestnuts falling by thousands out of their burrs, we met in our twenty-ninth annual session.

The first day, as usual, was "Preachers' Day," but the preachers on this program were scattered through the three days' sessions. Papers were read on "Preaching the Chief Work of the Church," H. R. Lookabill; "Spiritual Truths Most Needed by the Times," H. C. Kendrick; "The Normal Development of the Church," J. E. Stuart; "Pastoral Work," Thomas P. Wood; "Mission Planting in Cities," N. Pickering; "What the C. W. B. M. Auxiliary is to the Small Church," Claude C. Jones; "Bible Schools in Our Country Churches," W. E. Powell; "The Bible, the Only Text Book in the Bible School," J. A. Hopkins, and "Business Management of Mission Work," M. A. Collins. B. A. Abbott preached a great sermon on "A Sane Twentieth Century Religious Platform," and also discussed "What the C. W. B M. Auxiliary is to the Large Church." President Peter Ainslie directed the work of the convention with skill and dispatch and was re-elected.

Our visiting brethren did splendid service. It was really a general convention in a nutshell. We have never known the general causes of the brotherhood so well represented. S. T. Willis spoke for the Church Extension interests; L. G. Batman for the General Home Society; S. J. Corey for Foreign Missions; J. H. Mohorter for the National Benevolent Association; W. R. Warren for "Our Centennial"; Miss Ada Boyd represented our returned missionaries, and R. M. Hopkins did fine work for the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor cause. Nothing more could be desired in the matter of a full-orbed presentation of all the departments of our work. Federation was not without cordial championship, and the best plea I ever heard for union between Baptists and Disciples was presented in this little chapel among the chestnuts at this little Maryland convention. Dr. Charles H. Dodd, of the Eutaw Place Baptist Church, Baltimore, Md., gave a most fraternal and thoroughly Christian address on this subject, which was received with great enthusiasm by our body. The good doctor is already united, and we voted him in unanimously as a life member of our society. We also, at his invitation, named B. A. Abbott our fraternal delegate to the Maryland Baptist Association. Altogether this was one of the most pleasing incidents I have ever known in one of our conventions; and coming as it did on the sacred soil of Virginia, where the Dover Decrees had ruled us out—one, the great grandfather of our president, and the grandfathers of at least two others of us—we could very heartily appreciate the sentiments so happily expressed by our distinguished visitor. It would be a help toward the cause of union if Dr. Dodd could give his address to the wider circle of The Christian-Evangelist family.

The reports from churches and Sunday-schools and women's societies were all most encouraging. There are thirty-five churches and missions, twenty-seven reporting: Membership 5,562, 831 added during the year, $5,233.50 given for missions, and for all purposes contributed $57,120. Sunday-schools show an enrollment of 4,179, and 247 converts. They gave for all purposes the sum of $5,501. The board of managers gave reports from six evangelists in their employ and recommended the employment of a field evangelist, which the convention determined to do. The educational committee reported good work done in preparing young men for the ministry. "Take this, and consecrate it to some good purpose," said Mrs. Julia Reckord, handing W. S. Hoye a five-dollar gold piece found in her husband's pocket at his death. That small sum was the beginning of our educational fund. During the eighteen years of its existence twenty young men have been aided, and among them some of our brightest and brainiest preachers, both on the home and foreign field. Six young men are now at college receiving help from this source. The sum is now $3,000. The saintly Henry and Julia Reckord are both at rest from their labors, but their works do follow them.

Very similar was the beginning of our woman's work in this section. One of our sisters, Mrs. Clara Schell, came to me some time after the organization of the Woman's Board, and said: "Here is $5 for missions. I thought you might get a few others to give something, and we might send it on to the women." "No," I said, "keep your $5. We will organize an auxiliary and send thousands." So we organized our first auxiliary. Later I called the women together at our convention and Mrs. Schell addressed them, and then for years I served them as president, until they organized for themselves, and now have one of our best sessions. Mrs. Emma Lattimore, of Washington, presided at Vienna and the meeting was the finest we ever had. Last year our women raised $7,673.77, $1,891.42 being contributed through the auxiliaries; $327.62 by Juniors and Mission Bands; the rest by Aid Societies.

When this convention was organized twenty-nine years ago we had 200 members in Washington, gave nothing for missions, and raised all told about $3,500. The past missionary year Vermont Avenue and the seven churches that have sprung out of it, report a membership of 2,331, giving $22,123 for all purposes, $1,986 being for missions; 280 additions, $1,739 in the Sunday-schools. Our church property has increased from $7,000 to over $150,000. Our Baltimore brethren at that time numbered 700 in the one church. They have now seven congregations with a brotherhood of 1,500, and contributed to all causes $20,266.55.

Joseph A. Scott was continued as "Field Secretary of Bible schools." E. A. Gongwer, superintendent of Vermont Avenue Sunday-school, led a most helpful conference of superintendents. Oren Orahood, the new preacher at Martinsburg, was with us, and Jacob Walters who recently gave up the work at Ocean View, Del.; an excellent man now open for engagements. H. C. Kendrick, to our universal regret, leaves Hagerstown for Georgetown, Ky. Walter F. Smith, after a useful pastorate, has resigned at Whitney Avenue, Washington. E. B. Bagby was greatly missed. George A. Miller, of Covington, Ky., has been called to the Ninth Street Church. We enrolled 146 delegates. The next convention goes to the Temple Church, Baltimore. The only one present who took part in the organization of the society was myself. Seven of my fifteen elders attended this meeting. Come to "Maryland, My Maryland," if you would know what a real live convention is.

Our English Conference

By William Durban

It is once more the season for the gathering of the spiritual clans. The great denominations are preparing forthwith to assemble their unions, their conventions, their annual conclaves to celebrate the triumphs of the past year and to deliberate on the outlook. The Baptist and Congregational unions and the Anglican Church make much more of autumnal sessions than of the spring assemblies, though these are always of very great interest.

Our London Meeting.

I write this article under a sense of deepest disappointment, and a severe personal loss. For the first time in twenty-three years I have been absent from the annual meeting of the Christian conference. My unusually robust health suddenly broke down just for the very week of this delightful assembly. Unaccountably I was during that week flung into the very caldron of the dyspeptic purgatory. This experience was the more trying because this year the conference has gathered in London. It was, as it were, at my own door. But pleasing echoes in the shape of full information reached me through daily visits of beloved brethren. "Our best conference yet!" "Our best year in the English work!" "The happiest time we ever had!" Such were some of the expressions of appreciation on the part of the friends who had attended. The conference met at Tasso Tabernacle, Fulham, the scene of the ministry of E. Brearley.

Real Progress.

During the history of just over a quarter of a century there have been some depressing years. This past year has not been one of these periods. It has been a time of very great encouragement. A real forward movement has evidently begun. Several of our churches have emerged from the wilderness into the land flowing with milk and honey. Most of the pastors are able to indulge in the felicitous accent of ardent hope. Numbers are steadily growing. There have been no spasmodic revivals, but all along the line the advance has been marked in a degree unknown in any previous year. Best of all, perhaps, is the evidence of increasing strength and confidence shown in the attempt to establish new stations where fresh centers of work will be located. One of these has already been inaugurated at Kentish Town, in northwest London. This new meeting has been inaugurated by the enterprise of Brother Grinsted, son of one of our ministers in the United States. Brother Grinsted's father, though he removed years ago to America, is an Englishman. The son has always resided here in his native London, being engaged in business, while making himself abundantly useful in preaching. Now he will lead a new mission which is already affiliated with our Association. As we specially need more centers in London, it is a matter of gratification also that from "Our Cathedral," West London Tabernacle, branches are likely to be formed in the suburbs which are growing so enormously. Brother Williams and his voluntary preachers contemplate opening a station in the beautiful district of Ealing. And there is a prospect in the north of England of the formation of at least one more interest, probably as an offshoot of our young and promising Church of Christ at Chorley, the scene of the successful labors of our Brother Kennedy.

Financial Emancipation.

Another bright feature is the prospect of liquidation of debt by one church after another. The church at Upper Parliament street, Liverpool, has set a noble example. By a great and determined effort the brethren during the year wiped out their somewhat heavy debt. Brother Mitchell had stimulated them strenuously and they responded splendidly when they once tackled the problem. So that Brother Hughes, his successor, has been able to undertake his ministry under most encouraging auspices.

To speak once more of London, I must make special allusion to a very beautiful mission to which I have referred before in these letters. In the district of Western Suburban London, near Wimbledon, was sprung up a township called Southfields. Two former members of West London Tabernacle, our Brother and Sister Green, settled in this place three years ago, and felt inspired to throw open a room in their house for worship, with the gratifying result that they quickly gathered a permanent little congregation. About once every month it has been my own great privilege to preach in this spot, taking turns with other preachers. And now a young church has been organized, of which Bro. W. R. Green acts as the voluntary pastor, without fee or reward, and which has its officiary regularly elected. Above all—though this is, of course, to begin with one of those "kat'oikon" ecclesias of which we read in the New Testament epistles, a "church in the house"—it will not long remain in this preliminary stage. For Brother Green and his friends have secured a fine plot on which to build a sanctuary. I think it is now clear that I had a right to say that our prospect in London is wonderfully brightening.

A very pleasant episode at the conference in Fulham was the address at the meeting of the C. W. B. M., by Brother McDougall, passing on through London to Calcutta, under appointment by the C. W. B. M. of America. We hope to hear more of this new missionary.

The Discipline of Life.

FROM THE GERMAN.

I own it. He bruises, he pierces me sore,
But the hammer and chisel affect me no more.
Shall I tell you the reason? It is that I see
The Sculptor will carve out an angel from me.

I shrink from no suffering, how painful so e'er,
When once I can feel that my God's hand is there;
For soft on the anvil the iron shall glow
When the smith with his hammer deals blow upon blow.

God presses me hard, but he gives patience, too,
And I say to myself, 'Tis no more than my due;
And no tone from the organ can swell in the breeze
Till the organist's fingers press down on the keys.

So come, then, and welcome the blow and the pain;
Without them no mortal can heaven attain.
For what can the sheaves on the barn floor avail
Till the thresher shall put out the chaff with his flail?

'Tis only a moment God chastens with pain;
Joy follows on sorrow like sunshine on rain;
Then bear thou what God on thy spirit shall lay,
Be dumb, but when tempted to murmur, then pray.

FOND OF PIES
But Had to Give Them Up.

Anyone who has eaten New England pies knows how good they are.

But some things that taste good, don't always agree. A Mass. lady had to leave off pie, but found something far better for her stomach. She writes:

"Six or eight years ago chronic liver trouble was greatly exaggerated by eating too much fat meat, pastry and particularly pies, of which I was very fond.

"Severe headaches, dizziness, nausea followed, and food, even fruit, lay like lead in my stomach accompanied by a dull heavy pain almost unbearable. I had peculiar 'spells'—flashes of light before my sight. I could read half a word and the rest would be invisible.

"A feeling of lassitude and confusion of ideas made me even more miserable. I finally decided to change food altogether and began on Grape-Nuts food which brought me prompt relief—removed the dizziness, headache, confused feeling, and put me on the road to health and happiness. It clears my head, strengthens both brain and nerves.

"Whenever I enter our grocer's store, he usually calls out 'six packages of Grape-Nuts!'—and he's nearly always right." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason." Read the famous booklet, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

What the Brethren Are Saying and Doing

By B. B. Tyler

I clip from a secular paper the following: "Plans have been made by the Presbyterian evangelistic committee for the continuance, along aggressive lines, of the work which it has been doing for some time under the leadership of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. One change in the methods of the committee which took effect last year, and is said to have been most helpful, is expressed by Dr. Chapman to this effect: 'The committee was not successful when it was trying to make Presbyterians, at least not wholly so; success has come since we have been trying to make Christians.'"

Why should any preacher at any time, or in any place, try to persuade men to be anything else, in religion, than Christians? That is good enough. The Christ is pleased with the person who is a Christian, the Head of the Body will be no better pleased if the Christian should decide to be a Presbyterian, Methodist or Baptist, Christian.

The funeral of Sister Craig was conducted in the Central Christian Church Lord's day morning, September 30. The service was as near to perfection as any service of this character that I ever attended. Every detail was arranged by her husband, the congregation was, of course, very large, testing to its utmost the capacity of the audience room. Brother Craig and daughter, with brothers, sisters, other relatives and intimate personal friends, occupied the large parlor back of the pulpit, where they could hear every word without being seen by the great audience. A special edition of the "Weekly Bulletin" was distributed, from which I clip the following beautiful tribute:

Mrs. Emma Pickrell Craig.
Born at Mechanicsburg, Ill., January 11, 1849,
Died September 26, 1906,
Married Wm. Bayard Craig, October 29, 1885.

An ideal wife and mother in the home. A working partner and leader of women's work in the Church. A joy and inspiration in social life. A sympathetic and joyous companion in the mountains. A most winsome and helpful incarnation of the Christian spirit. Never speaking unkindly, never criticizing, she won the love and esteem of every one by a remarkable grace of spirit and manner. She was one among ten thousand. We who knew her best can not think of a fault for fearless candor to set down against her. She was as strong and effective in home, social or church work as she was lovable and beautiful. With all her amiability she was wonderful in executive power, both in planning and execution. The highest praise seems inadequate to express the facts. Christian womanhood was glorified in her. Our feeling of loss and loneliness are beyond the power of words to express. Love for her will inspire us to do something more than heretofore to continue her work and influence.

There is not a word of exaggeration in this. Every word here written is true in letter and in spirit of Sister Craig. She was a great and good woman.

"The world do move!" The following is from the paper of a local Presbyterian Christian church:

Next Wednesday evening our study in the "Founding of the Christian church" begins. Read Acts, chapters 1 and 2, then come with us, and bring your friends. The pastor hopes to see every member of the church in this important and interesting study. An earnest invitation is extended to all others to join us also.

The time was, and that, too, easily within the memory of some who are yet in the flesh, when such an announcement as this would have been regarded as downright heresy of the Campbellian variety. Read of the "founding of the Christian church" in Acts of Apostles, chapters 1 and 2! No, indeed, the Christian church began in the days of Abraham! The place in which to read of the beginning of the Church is in "the Book of Genesis." This was the position of our brethren of the Presbyterian brand in the part of the country where, and in the time when, I began to preach. I merely note the above for the encouragement of some brethren who seem to think that we all stand exactly where we stood forty or fifty years ago.

The political pot is boiling in Colorado. Have you heard of it? There are three candidates for governor—all good men—or they were good men until after their nominations! Now they are all bad men—very bad men!! A political campaign in Colorado is unlike a political campaign in any other state. Words can not describe it; at any rate, my words can not. I will, therefore, not attempt a description. There are no good, old-fashioned, unwashed Democrats now in evidence in Colorado. We have Reform Democrats, led by United States Senator Patterson, and "Independent" or Reformed Reform Democrats, led by Judge B. B. Lindsey, of the far-famed Juvenile Court. Alva Adams, B. B. Lindsey and Henry R. Buchtel are the candidates for the office of governor. The latter is a Methodist preacher and the chancellor of Denver University. Our next governor of Colorado will, certainly, be a good man! I think that our state is to be congratulated!

"Onward" is the Word.

BY W. A. HAYNES.

Rome, in her declining days, clung to the worship of her older and more glorious days. She denounced the ingratitude of forsaking the gods under whom she had become empress of the world. She urged the following objection: "If the gods have led us into great blessings when we worshipped them in different form, how may we expect future good without remaining under their guidance"?

The same problem seems to perplex the minds of many even at this late day. "My father was brought to success while believing certain things. Why can not I be successful and study no more questions than were contained in his catechism?"

The ages are advancing. So must man advance. We have the presentation of the gods, and the experience of our fathers. Why will an advance step insult the gods who were followed by our fathers so far as the times would permit human strength to follow? Why would the glory of another star in our sky reveal a lack of respect for our fathers who led us by the hand until their burdens were laid down? When one soldier drops the flag, shall not another take it up and bear it onward to the conflict?

Our fathers dropped the standard before the battle was won, or perfect victory was in view. Shall we not gather up this standard of truth and bear it onward in the face of new enemies our fathers never saw, to new conflicts of which they never dreamed? Shall we not rather disregard the spirits of our fathers if we lift not the burdens that bore down their failing forms, and hasten to plant the standard nearer the eminence towards which they had set their faces?

The law of life is exacting. It demands a continual gathering of interest in order to preserve the principle. No

NO DAWDLING

A Man of 70 After Finding Coffee Hurt Him, Stopped Short.

When a man has lived to be 70 years old with a 40-year-old habit grown to him like a knot on a tree, chances are he'll stick to the habit till he dies.

But occasionally the spirit of youth and determination remains in some men to the last day of their lives. When such men do find any habit of life has been doing them harm, they surprise the Oslerites by a degree of will power that is supposed to belong to men under 40, only.

"I had been a user of coffee until three years ago—a period of 40 years—and am now 70," writes a N. Dak. man. "I was extremely nervous and debilitated, and saw plainly that I must make a change.

"I am thankful to say I had the nerve to quit coffee at once and take on Postum without any dawdling, and experienced no ill effects. On the contrary, I commenced to gain, losing my nervousness within two months, also gaining strength and health otherwise.

"For a man of my age, I am very well and hearty. I sometimes meet persons who have not made their Postum right and don't like it. But I tell them to boil it long enough, and call their attention to my looks now, and before I used it, that seems convincing.

"Now, when I have writing to do, or long columns of figures to cast up, I feel equal to it and can get through my work without the fagged out feeling of old." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Two Great Debates

By C. C. Redgrave

"I come not here to advocate the particular tenets of any sect, but to defend the great cardinal principles of Protestantism." These were the words with which Mr. Campbell opened the historic debate with Bishop Purcell, the Roman Catholic prelate, in Cincinnati, O.

Sycamore Street Christian Church, Cincinnati, O., Scene of the Campbell-Purcell Debate.

The place of this notable passage of arms was the Sycamore Street Christian Church. The debate lasted seven days, beginning January 13, 1837. The occasion was the address of Mr. Campbell on "Moral Culture," delivered before the College of Teachers at Cincinnati, a few months previously, in which the "rapid march of modern improvement was connected with the spirit of inquiry produced by the Protestant reformation." Purcell affirmed that the "Protestant reformation had been the cause of all the contention and infidelity in the world," and he advocated the exclusion of the Bible from the common schools. The satisfaction with which the Protestants of the "Queen City" reviewed the debate may be inferred from the fact that at a mass meeting of representative citizens, the following resolution, among others, was passed with great enthusiasm: "Resolved, that it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting that the cause of Protestantism has been fully sustained throughout this discussion."

The "College of Teachers" endorsed the championship in the following words: "Resolved, that in the judgment of the college, the Bible should be introduced into every high school, from the lowest to the highest, as a text-book."

The Sycamore street meeting house possesses additional historic interest as marking an important era in the "Current Reformation." Under the preaching of James Challen, the pastor, and the evangelistic efforts of Jeremiah Vardeman, many of the members of the Enon Baptist Church, on Walnut and Baker streets, had accepted the principles of reform advocated by the Campbells and others. The climax was reached when more than a hundred of the members received letters of dismission and immediately constituted themselves the Sycamore Street Baptist Church, with James Challen as pastor. The name "Baptist Church" was shortly after discarded and erased from the stone tablet on the front wall, the covenant and creed cast out, and the New Testament adopted as their only rule of faith and practice. The building was sold to the Methodist Church South in 1845, and they in turn sold it to the Roman Catholics, in whose possession it remains to-day. Shades of Alexander Campbell! How incongruously must the echoes of the great man's victory commingle with the daily chanting of the priests and the confessions of the people!

The Sycamore Street Christian Church has been a "seed church." "In fact all the Disciple congregations in and around Cincinnati are offshoots of this church."

The "Reform Church," or, as it is more generally known, the Main Street Christian Church, Lexington, Ky., will always be remembered as the scene of Alexander Campbell's last and greatest public debate. On this occasion Mr. Campbell was not the champion of Protestantism against Infidelity or Roman Catholicism, as when he met Owen and Purcell in Cincinnati. Rather he was called upon to defend the religion of the New Testament against the "traditions and other baseless tenets of Protestantism. And in the themes discussed, the Holy Spirit, baptism and human creeds, the "whole range of truth for which the Disciples contended was reviewed and defended with consummate skill and ability. The debate lasted sixteen days, beginning November 15, 1843, and was attended by a large concourse of people, and created profound and widespread interest in religious circles. Henry Clay, the noted statesman and orator, presided, manifesting the deepest interest in the proceedings, and he is reported to have said afterward that Mr. Campbell was the "profoundest theologian and most eloquent and able debater of the age."

The Rev. N. L. Rice, of Paris, Ky., represented the Presbyterians in this debate. His friends were so jubilant over what they sincerely considered his great victory over Mr. Campbell, that they eagerly purchased at $2,000 the copyright of the debate, a book of 900 closely printed pages. The reading of the debate, however, made many converts to the principles of the reformation, but none to Presbyterianism, and the copyright was as eagerly resold, this time for a "small sum to a member of the Christian church at Jacksonville, Ill., C. D. Roberts." The work has had a wide and appreciative patronage, and is generally considered one of the ablest debates on

International Missionary Convention

Christian Woman's Board of Missions

The women had, as usual, the first part of the program at the Convention assigned to them, and on Friday evening they crowded the Delaware Avenue Methodist Church which had been placed at their disposal. This meeting, as well as the more strictly business sessions, which came next day, were marked by a restrained enthusiasm that means more, perhaps, for the accomplishment of the aim they have set for themselves for the coming year than any excited outbursts such as are sometimes manifested when an aim has been surpassed. For during the past year they have gone beyond their expectations. Mrs. N. E. Atkinson's presidential address was marked by a quiet yet thoroughly optimistic tone; while that of Mrs. Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., was a fuller light thrown on the aims and the prospects ahead. "Our Centennial" was her theme. As Mrs. Harrison will have many calls for this address throughout the country, we will not attempt any report of it here. Her saying that "The Centennial of American missions is coincident with the centenary of our religious truth," was, of course, pleasing to her audience.

On Saturday morning the church was again filled with an expectant throng. Miss Newcomer, of Iowa, led the devotionals instead of Mrs. M. N. Wiseman, who was unable to be present. After greetings from the maritime provinces had been read, the report of the board was epitomized by Mrs. Helen E. Moses. At the outset she explained that the recommendations which she had to read had been passed by the executive committee the day before. She referred to the blessings that had crowned the year, in which there had been an advance in every line of work. There were reported 2,661 auxiliaries and mission circles, a gain of 634 organizations; 47,210 members, a gain of 3,462; 21,233 Tidings sold, a gain of 2,615; receipts $206,553.12, a gain of $31,144.14. Of course applause greeted the announcement of these figures, and there were more good things—16 new buildings erected and 3,607 conversions reported in the churches through which the C. W. B. M. works. The greatest need emphasized in the report was a determined, vigorous personal canvass for members. The recommendations, all of which were accepted, included the sending of A. H. Owen, of New York, to Jamaica as a minister, and Charles Shirley, of Illinois as native missionary and the erection of a new home, $4,000 more being required for this enlargement than the $13,454 expended last year in the island. It was decided to transfer Mr. and Mrs. Munro to Jhansi and that a married men be sent out to Deoghur. For this work in India $4,500 additional is to be expended. A modest dormitory is to be built in Monterey and property purchased at Sabinas, Mexico, and the forces to be strengthened. In Porto Rico a building is to be erected at Bayamon and another worker is to be sent to aid Brother and Sister Burner in Buenos Ayres. In the homeland the work at Manchester, N. H., and at Reno, Nev., is to be cared for as well as the oriental work carried on by W. P. Bentley on the coast, and all lines are to be advanced.

The executive meeting held the previous day recommended further that (1) with the beginning of the year the furlough salaries of missionaries be the same as those in the field; (2) with this year the salaries of married missionaries in Mexico, Jamaica, Porto Rico and South America be the same as the salaries of married missionaries in India; (3) the anniversary of the twenty-fifth year of C. W. B. M. work in India be fittingly celebrated; (4) the C. W. B. M. and the National Benevolent Association unite in the observance of Easter day for the benefit of the orphans of all lands, the proceeds to be divided equally and a committee to be appointed to confer with the Benevolent Association representatives. The chair appointed Mrs. Haggard, Mrs. McCleary, Miss Graybiel, Mrs. Davidson and Mrs. Moses. All these suggestions were agreeable to the convention and were unanimously adopted. Indeed in the open convention there was no discussion. A matter was presented and adopted in double-quick time. Women may sometimes be late in getting their bonnets on but the C. W. B. M. at this convention acted with greater dispatch than any convention this scribe has ever attended. Bro. Charles Louis Loos, who was on the front seat, at one time challenged a vote. Mrs. Atkinson's "Don't let it be said that Brother Loos can do a thing with this audience that I can't," brought forth a louder expression to the satisfaction of the veteran convention-goer from Lexington.

Miss Mary Graybiel, sweet of face, gray haired in the service of the C. W. B. M., read a touching address, whose burden was "Save the child and you have saved the woman."

After some music, which was admirably led, by the way, throughout the sessions by W. E. M. Hackleman, came W. F. Richardson's address on Jamaica. It was an interesting survey of Jamaica, touching upon topography, climate, history, people, of this "isle of springs," where there are trees that are likened to women's tongues and where "the smells are all plural." It was a racy speech, such as one would expect of Brother Richardson. He enjoyed himself there on this trip with Mrs. Moses and Mrs. Atwater, notwithstanding he had to be a "pieless American" for five weeks and be fed on "condensed milk and condemned butter." His speech was the expression of a strong belief in the good outcome of Christian work. He instanced many cases of consecration on the part of the native Christians.

The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand October 1, 1905, of $27,216.04, with actual receipts of $206,553.12 during this year. Loans returned amounted to $22,155, and to the general fund $168.65 were returned, giving a grand total of $256,092.81, against the disbursement account which was $235,715.43, leaving a balance in bank of $20,377.38.

The Young People's department report was a good one. The receipts were $27,215, being a gain of $4,341.93. Twelve states and territories exceeded their apportionments, Missouri leading with 30¼ per cent gain, Tennessee coming next with 16½ per cent gain. To Missouri, therefore, goes the National Banner. A place upon the roll of honor—the award of those who have increased their offerings—was won by 795 organizations. For the fifth consecutive time Paris, Ky., won the position of National Banner Organization, Central, Lexington, coming next, with Bluefield, W. Va., third. Others in order were Franklin Circle, Cleveland, O.; First Church, Jacksonville, Ill., and Lockhaven, Pa. The chief building enterprise of the year is the Boys' Orphanage in Porto Rico which is to be dedicated immediately. Chapels destroyed by the tornado in Jamaica have either been replaced or shortly will be. Many of the young folks have joined the Centennial brigade.

At the afternoon session the following missionaries and workers were introduced, each speaking a few words: Miss Graybiel, Miss Boyd, Mrs. Baldwin, M. D.; Miss Maddock, Miss Longdon, M. D.—all representing India; Miss Siler (Porto Rico), Mrs. Fullem, one of the originators of the orphanage work; F. H. Groom (Montana), and J. M. Hoffmann, general evangelist.

The interest was not lessened when the next speaker came to the platform—a mountain boy from East Kentucky, yet "perfectly harmless." Experience after experience he told to impress his hearers with the needs of the mountaineers, their worth and possibilities. There were the boys who came to school with their revolvers. But the preacher's "tune book" wrought where his prayer-meeting would not be tolerated and led to the boys saying, "Ye can't go until ye promise to come again." Seven out of ten of these boys gave themselves to Jesus Christ and all ten of them voluntarily put aside their revolvers. Then there were the six boys who wanted to break up the meeting—every one of them heavily armed. Brother Derthick persuaded them to join the choir on that particular occasion and in this way prevented mischief. He illustrated the good of the educational work of Hazell Green, which has sent out over 400 students, seven-eighths of them Christians, by the effect it had upon a feudist girl, a niece of Hargis, who, from her hatred of another girl, was finally led to say, "I forgive you; let us be sisters in Jesus Christ," and then there was a picture. Taylor and Amanda were sweethearts. Taylor was a bright boy taking an education. But Amanda wanted the marriage to take place and Taylor had agreed. Mr. Derthick tried to persuade him to wait and finish his school, encouraging him with the thought that he might be a professor or represent his county. But the woman had to be satisfied and Brother Derthick finally undertook to talk to her. He drew two pictures—the rough mountain hut and the cosy home in the school town. "It'll be just as you say, Amanda." "It'll be just as you say, Taylor," came the reply. Brother Derthick told the denouement: Five weeks ago Taylor was elected to the state legislature and four weeks ago he led Amanda to the altar.

There was more interest in the election of officers this year than usual, for Mrs. N. E. Atkinson had expressed her intention to retire from the presidential position she has held so long and well. The nominating committee submitted its report, which was immediately adopted. The following were elected:

Mrs. Helen E. Moses, president; Mrs. A. R. Atwater, vice-president; Mrs. M. E. Harlan, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Anna B. Gray, recording secretary; Mrs. Mary Judson, treasurer and Miss Mattie Pounds, superintendent of Young People's Department. The residential members elected were Mrs. N. E. Atkinson, Mrs. Effie Cunningham, Mrs. R. K. Sybers, Mrs. E. M. Duncan, and Mrs. Alice Sedener.

Mrs. Atkinson expressed her gratitude for the kindnesses of the members and for their granting her request for release from active leadership.

The report of the Committee on Watchword and Aim was adopted. The watchword is to be "Pray, Work, Give"—pray for more women, deeper consecration, larger gifts; work for increased membership, tidings in every home, special gifts from all; give freely of time, talent, means. The aim is to be 50,000 members, 25,000 Tidings, $215,000 in offerings exclusive of the Centennial offering.

After delightful musical refreshment from the Netz sisters, Mrs. W. W. Wharton, of Jacksonville, Ill., gave the closing address, chaste in its diction, poetic in its conception and tender in its pathos.

The C. W. B. M. has had a great year and a splendid convention.

Foreign Christian Missionary Society

An Abstract of the Thirty-first Annual Report, Presented at Buffalo, October 15, 1906.

Thirty-one years ago we did not have in the wide field destitute of the gospel a single herald of the cross. At the present time, we are represented on all the continents and on many of the islands of the sea. Evangelists, physicians, teachers, colporteurs, Bible women and native helpers are supported by the society. The past year has been one of the very best in our history. The Lord has worked with us and through us to accomplish his own gracious purpose. As we rehearse his dealings we would think and praise his glorious name.

The receipts amounted to $268,726.62. This is an increase of $12,804.11. At the beginning of the year it was hoped that $300,000 would be raised. While this has not been done, the receipts are considerably larger than in any previous year. The churches, as churches, gave $109,018.39, or $13,517.55 more than they gave last year. This is the largest gain ever made in one year. What is equally gratifying is the fact that there was a gain of 344 in the number of contributing churches. The Bible schools gave $66,809.65, or $4,992.05 more than in the year before. There was a gain of 86 in the number of contributing schools. The Christian Endeavor Societies gave $12,007.97, or $1,134.89 more than in 1905. There was a gain of 169 in the number of contributing societies. There was a slight gain in bequests, but a falling off in the number of individual offerings, and in the amount received on the annuity plan. Year after year there is a marked increase in the total receipts of the society. This is an unmistakable proof of the growing interest among our people in the world's evangelization.

Fourteen new names have been added to the list of workers. These have been sent to where the needs were greatest. Some were obliged to retire from the field on account of failing health. It is seldom that one gives up the work for any other reason. One of the faithful workers in China entered into the life that is life indeed. The others have been protected against the pestilence that walks in darkness and the destruction that wastes at noonday.

The missionary force numbers 487. Of this number, 154 are missionaries, and 333 are native evangelists and teachers and helpers. But they all make it their chief business to speak good words for the Lord Jesus. Every other thing done is designed to aid the cause of evangelists, teachers and helpers. But they all make it their chief business to speak good words for the Lord Jesus. Every other thing done is designed to aid the cause of evangelism. In their own homes, in the chapels, along the streets, at the wells, in the temples and theatres, wherever there is a soul to listen they are glad to make known the way of life and salvation. Not only so, but they go on long tours into unoccupied territory and press the claims of the gospel home to the hearts and consciences of all with whom they have to do. Hundreds of thousands are reached every year with the joyful message. The good seed of the Kingdom is scattered far and near. It must be that some of it will fall into good and honest hearts and bring forth fruit an hundred or a thousand fold. God only can foresee what the harvest will be from this sowing.

The youth are gathered into schools and are trained for lives of usefulness and nobleness. Thousands are under instruction in the schools sustained by the society. In the colleges the ablest and most promising young men and women are being educated to serve as pastors, evangelists, teachers, editors and helpers in other capacities. The fact is recognized that a people can be evangelized only by members of their own race. In order to do this the missionaries must educate some of the best of the converts for this service.

Medical work is carried on by our representatives on a large scale. Last year 90,313 patients were treated in our hospitals and dispensaries. The in-patients numbered 1,435. The medical fees amounted to $3,467.40. Patients came from great distances to be healed of their diseases. The medical work breaks down prejudice and opens homes and hearts to the Gospel and its advocates. The cures wrought affect the people very much as the cures wrought by our Lord and his apostles affected the people of their time. A successful operation is a miracle in their estimation; the medical missionary is almost, if not altogether a god. The fame of the mission is carried far beyond the limits of the country traversed and evangelized by the missionaries. Moreover, every patient hears the Gospel at the dispensary or in the hospital. If he can read he is supplied with portions of the Scriptures and with other Christian literature. On his return he tells his family and neighbors the great things he has heard from the man of God while undergoing treatment.

The press has been used on all the large fields. Papers are published and widely circulated. Sunday-school literature is prepared and supplied to teachers and pupils. Books and booklets are published. The printed page is an effective evangelistic agency. It is not a substitute for the living voice, but it is a mighty auxiliary of the living voice. It can go where no missionary agent can go. It can be read at home by those who wish to know more of what is heard in the public gathering.

Rescue and benevolent work is carried on by the missionaries. Orphans are taken in and cared for and taught. They are thus saved from lives of sin and shame. In the famine district in Japan our workers did what they could to save the people alive. They served on committees that appealed for funds, and distributed what they received for this purpose. They visited wounded soldiers and ministered to their bodily and spiritual needs. The missionaries do whatever they can do to help the people among whom they live. The supreme aim in all they do is to win them to Christ.

The reports from the field read in detail of those who wish complete and accurate information about the work done, and about the trials and triumphs of the workers. Their reports are worthy of a careful study.

The station at Bolengi, Africa, is said to be the best on the Congo. Visitors are surprised and delighted with the visible results. This one church supports thirteen of its own members as evangelists. Messengers from distant tribes have visited the station to ask for teachers. They called to one man when he was leaving on furlough, "Come back soon. Bring other teachers with you."

The missionaries in India would like to show all that has been done in that land. They would like to show the churches, the schools, the orphanages, the leper asylums. They have not done all they could wish. Their hearts have often been made sick by apparent failure, and by hope deferred. But these are some things that give satisfaction and which they would be delighted to show the brethren who have prayed and given to support them and the work.

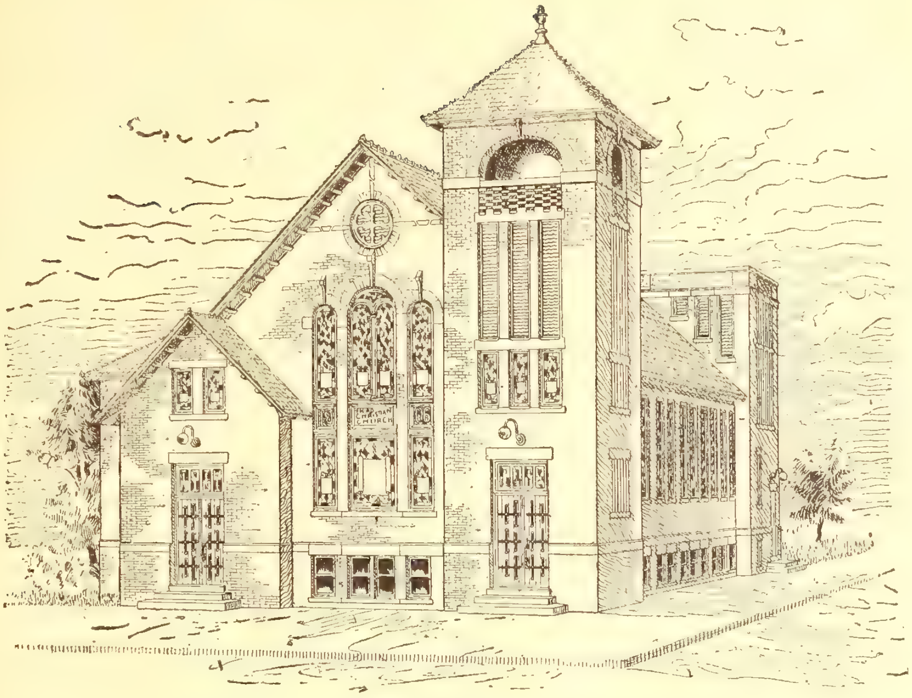
China affords the church the greatest opportunity that she has had since the reformation, if not since the birth of Christ. China is awakening and is turning her face to the sunrise. China is ready to receive the gospel as never before. Our workers are doing what they can to help the people at this interesting crisis in their history. They are anxious that China should become a Christian nation. They are doing their utmost to protect her against agnosticism and materialism.

In Japan the Women's College has been opened. The new building will be completed in a few months. This will enable the college to double its attendance. Besides, it will give the enterprise the dignity and prestige which it can not have in its present quarters. Drake College has begun to send out its graduates. This marks an epoch in its history. The work in Japan is in a flourishing condition. The workers are doing their best, and they have the joy of seeing the pleasure of the Lord prosper in their hands.

Did space permit, it would be a delightful task to set forth what has been done in other missions; of the college and school opened in Cuba; of the good beginnings made in Tibet; of the great success that has rewarded our efforts in the Philippines; of the efforts put forth in Hawaii, and of the work in different parts of Europe. The reader who wishes full information must turn to the annual report in "The Intelligencer." It is an inspiring document, and should be read by many thousands.

In no other year was so much done at home to inform the brotherhood and to enlist those who stand aloof in the support of this Divine Enterprise. Rallies have been held in many parts of the country; churches have been visited; mission study classes have been organized and taught, literature has been sent out on an unprecedented scale. Three editions of Dr. Rijnhart's great book, entitled, "With Tibetans in Tent and Temple" were published. Two thousand copies of "Daybreak in the Dark Continent" were sold. Millions of pages of leaflets were sent out. "The Intelligencer" and "The Voice" have been issued regularly and sent to ever-increasing lists of subscribers. No pains have been spared to reach all with the facts relating to the evangelists of the world. The growth in interest and in receipts shows that the efforts put forth have not been in vain.

The Foreign Society is planning and working for an income of $500,000 by 1909. With the great increase in membership and and the still greater increase in wealth, this is a modest sum to ask for and to confidently expect for the greatest work in the world. The Lord needs and asks the fellowship of all believers in the furtherance of the Gospel. He is able to make all grace abound towards us, that we, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound unto every good work.



The Third Christian Church, Youngstown, O.

—The corner-stone of the Third Christian Church, at Youngstown, O., was laid on the afternoon of Lord's day September 16. It is to be a $10,000 building to replace the old one which was dismantled some time ago. The congregation in the meantime has been holding services temporarily in a tent. The congregation was organized in 1900 and was the outcome of work by Wilcox and Perry Updike. There were about sixty charter members, and the present membership numbers about 200 and is being steadily increased under the excellent leadership of F. D. Draper, who is the present pastor. John E. Pounds, John R. Ewers and W. S. Goode took part.

TWO GREAT DEBATES.

the subjects treated, "all debates since then on these subjects having been but an echo of this great contest at Lexington."

The building where the debate was held was built in 1843, at a cost of $15,000, and was considered at the time one of the finest buildings of the brotherhood in the state. Dr. L. L. Pinkerton was the first pastor of the Main street congregation, serving from 1841 to the fall of 1843. About eight years ago the members moved into their new and handsome building on Walnut street, two blocks away. Since then the old building has been used for political meetings and theatrical performances of a cheap kind. It is expected that it will soon be torn down to make way for a business block.

So the old landmarks of the current reform are passing from human ken. But the good abides and from

Get Well Acquainted With The Mutual Life

¶ It has been in existence sixty-three years. Public confidence and patronage have made it and kept it the largest and staunchest Life Insurance company in the world. It is owned by its policyholders. It protects thousands, but there are many others who should have the same protection. How about you? People who are so thoughtful and kind as to wish to provide as they can to-day for what will happen some other day, when they are taken from those they love and support, should get acquainted with

The Mutual Life Insurance Company

Let them read its history; analyze its statements; examine its investments; consult its agents. They will find a reason for its strength and stability and a reason for their confidence and patronage.

¶ The new management of the Mutual Life has been in control for nine months. Its report for the first six months will be mailed to anyone on request, or may be had of its agents. It tells what has been accomplished in conformity with the new Insurance Laws; shows the vast reductions, and indicates the unusual advantages yet to reach its policyholders. Its plain figures, given in a plain way, will convince any fair-minded person that The Mutual Life to-day justifies the good opinion of Bishop Chas. C. McCabe, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who recently said:—

"After long and careful consideration, I am thoroughly satisfied that the present administrations of both companies (the New York Life and the Mutual Life) are now effecting great economies and reforms, and that these institutions, purged as by fire, are now in a position to afford the protection of life insurance in better form, and on better terms, than any known in the past."

It justifies also the good opinion of Mr. James C. Colgate and his associates, who, having policies to the amount of $5,000,000 in the Mutual Life, recently "resolved that the present executive officers and trustees are, in the opinion of the Policyholders' Protective Association of the Mutual Life, faithful to its interests, and that their administration of its affairs has been and is efficient, economical and beneficial to the policyholders."

Our Budget

—Tennessee puts in E. S. Baker, of Jackson, as state evangelist.

—We are glad to report that the church at Mobile, Ala., was only slightly injured in the great storm that did so much damage in the south. Claude E. Hill, the pastor, reports that the brethren there are expecting to entertain the Alabama State Convention beginning November 15. W. T. Moore, J. A. Lord, and J. H. Garrison are among those on the program.

—Lew D. Hill has given up his state work in Illinois, and has located at Benton.

—Every teacher in Christian University, Canton, Mo., is a Christian preacher this year.

—Geo. W. Buckner, who has closed six years' service at Macomb, Ill., is now preaching for the church at Canton, Mo.

—John T. Brown is now holding a meeting at Brisbane, Australia, whence he proceeds to Manila, Japan and other points.

—The revival at Bloomington, Ill., being still in progress, Brothers Gilliland and Jones were unable to attend the convention.

—A. M. Harrall has been assisting H. S. Kline at Stillwell, Ind. Ty., in a short meeting. A building is soon to be completed there.

—W. H. Garrard has resigned his pastorate of the Rowland Street Church, Syracuse, N. Y., and taken charge of the work at LaPorte, Ind.

—The church at Farmington, Mo., has been presented with a very beautiful individual communion set, which was used for the first time on October 14.

—Extensive repairs are about to be made upon the church building at Hazel Green, Ky. H. L. Atkinson, the preacher, reports that the Mountain School has great things in prospect, and is doing a splendid work.

—H. L. Atkinson has been called to the pastorate of the church at Hazel Green, Ky., and is at work there. Already plans are on foot to repair the church building and the outlook for aggressive work is fine.

—B. F. Creason, of Liberal, Mo., has been unanimously called to the pastorate at Lathrop, and will enter upon his work immediately. N. M. Perry writes us that the church is in good working order and the future very promising.

—The church at Nelsonville, O., will begin the erection of a new building to cost not less than $10,000 in the spring. W. S. Cook is the pastor. At the recent rally day 400 were present and the offering was over $41. There is a Bible class of 125 and a young men's class of 32.

—"Medicine shows are passing out of date, especially when they come in contact with more substantial things." This is the editorial comment of a Nebraska paper in speaking of a meeting recently held by Austin and McVey, which drew the crowds and left no one for "the show."

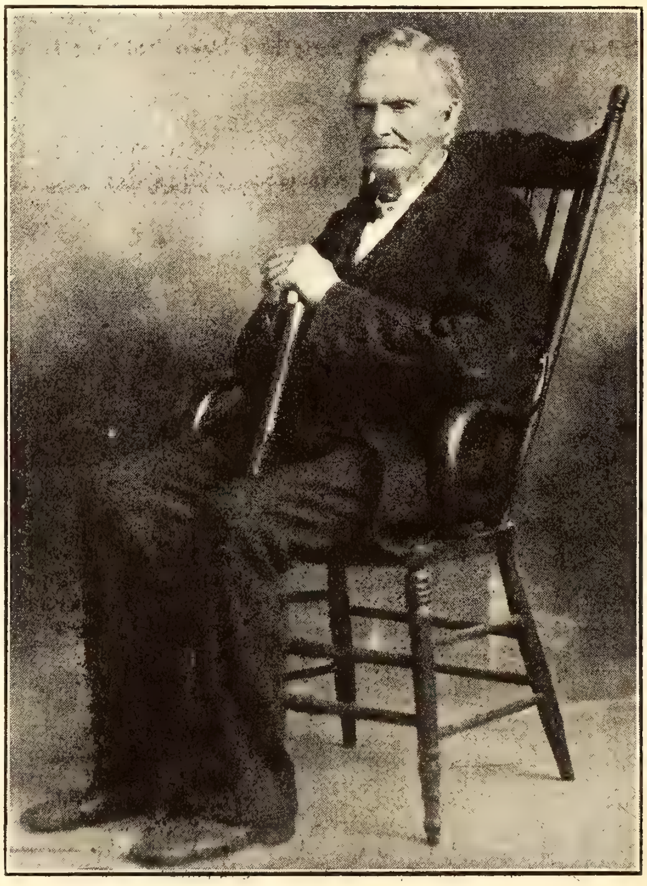
—Sherman B. Moore has a very difficult field, for Oklahoma City has the reputation of being a very worldly place. Despite that fact, Brother S. B. Moore can record a total of 421 additions to the First Church there during the past twenty-five months, with progress in various other ways.

—C. M. Kreidler's church at Baltimore, Md., has just closed its official year. He has held the pastorate eleven months, during which time there were fifty-three additions and all of the departments strengthened. The building is now being enlarged. E. J. Meacham, of Wilmington, Ohio, began a meeting for the church last Lord's day.

—"We are growing, but I hope have not reached maturity yet." That is a good message which comes from Will A. Harding, Columbus, Ind., where the Bible school raised $35 for Church Extension and the Christian Endeavorers, $50. The Bible school offering goes to help the church in the named loan fund.

—J. E. Stebbins and wife have resigned from the pastorate of the first Christian Church at Argentine, Kan., to take up evangelistic work. During the past year 110 additions to the brotherhood have come through their efforts. They can arrange for a few more meetings and may be addressed at 1016 West Silver avenue, Argentine, Kan.

—"Uncle" Tommy Anderson, who was born in Logan county, Ky., July 21, 1814, came from the Cumberland Presbyterian church into the Christian church under the preaching of the first preacher of our brotherhood he ever heard in 1841. He is a cousin of "Bill" Anderson, the celebrated bushwhacker, though "Uncle Tommy," himself, was allied with the Union. The most important feature about this kindly old brother, now in his ninety-third year, is that he is in his class at Bible school almost every Lord's day morning. He is also seldom absent from the morning service of the Christian Church at Odessa, of which he is a loyal member.



"Uncle" Tommy Anderson.

—Our church at Collingwood, Ontario, has been having a season of "looking backward and looking forward." That is the title of the sermon its pastor, John Williams, preached on this occasion. It was a helpful discourse and we find a sketch of it printed in the newspaper of the town. The report of the year showed that in addition to good pastoral work, fifteen new members had been received, bringing up the present membership of the church to eighty-three. All financial obligations were met and $800 expended in improving the house of worship. Both pastor and people address themselves to the work of another year with increasing hope and devotion.

—J. B. Lockhart has closed his ministry at Unionville, Mo., and will be open for engagement about November 1. There have been between sixty and seventy additions in his Unionville pastorate, while the missionary collections have been the largest in the history of the church. He is glad to report that there are many loyal brethren there.

—The Christian-Evangelist office had a very pleasant visit from John S. Zeran and wife as they passed through St. Louis. They have been doing good work as evangelistic helpers both in singing and speaking. By reason of the fact, however, that they have a young family, they intend to locate soon, and have accepted a call to Gurney, Ill. They will take part, however, in several meetings first.

—As a result of some planning by H. J. Corwin, a fine meeting was held some time ago which we believe has not been reported in our columns. Brother Corwin is the minister at California, Mo., and he was instrumental in organizing the Moniteau County Co-operative Association for the purpose of evangelizing the county. He enlisted eight churches in the movement and though these were at too remote distance to give much personal help in the meeting they gave it their support. There were, in all, 170 additions, and all adults but three. We trust that Brother Corwin's health may be so established that he can repeat this work at some point next year.

—He who takes up the duties of starting a new paper is a brave man, but we are always glad to commend any effort in this direction that will aid our Christian work. Whether there is a field for a paper devoted especially to West Texas we can not at this distance say. If it shall prove so, we shall rejoice. J. H. Shepard, pastor of the church at Haskell, has just begun publication of the "West Texas Christian," a religious magazine intended especially for that section of the country; but we warn brethren everywhere that it is not an easy matter to make a success of a local paper, and they should canvass the situation carefully before they attempt to start one.

—We have received the following from Bro. E. S. Ames, pastor of the Hyde Park Church of Disciples, Chicago: "Mr. Frank Noataro Otsuka is now prepared and eager to return to Japan to do missionary work. As it is not the policy of the Foreign Missionary Society to send natives to foreign countries to be in charge of mission work, he must secure his own support. President A. McLean, of this society, has given him hearty endorsement. He has asked me, as his pastor, to receive all money given directly to him or sent to me to defray his traveling expenses to Japan. This I shall gladly do, making proper acknowledgment of the same through the papers. This is a most worthy undertaking and should meet with a ready response of sympathy and money."

—L. L. Carpenter recently dedicated the new church at Palestine, Ind. The building cost $3,500, and is all provided for. Carl H. Barnett is the pastor.

—A. H. Smith, whose death we recorded last week, was attending the Bible college at Canton, Mo. He died at Holliday, Monroe county, Mo., of typhoid fever. He was holding a meeting at Woodlawn when he was stricken. At his request, he was buried at Holliday, although his home is in New Zealand. The funeral services were in charge of Rolla G. Sears and eleven ministers of the Christian church were present.

—Flourney Payne has resigned the pastorate of the Berkeley church, Denver, Col., where he has done a good work. He is a great grandson of John F. Johnson, one of our pioneer evangelists. Brother Payne is a young man of culture and blameless life and a successful pastor and preacher. Here is an opportunity for a pastorless congregation. Brother Payne's address is 4180 Xavier street, Denver, Colo.

—S. M. Bernard, minister of our church at Boulder, Colo., reports a delightful week of prayer and Bible study just held there. A fine attendance and deep spirituality encouraged those who believe that such subjects as the Holy Spirit, Christian life, conversion, the Church, and kindred themes, are not only of vital interest, but can prove attractive in this day of more sensational things.

—We have seen the plans of the new building which is being erected by our church at Tacoma, Washington. It will be of old Corinthian design and one of the handsomest structures on the coast. Twenty separate rooms will be provided for the Bible school which will occupy the first floor. The building, when complete, will be worth over $40,000, and its location is one of the best in the city. W. A. Moore is the pastor, and we congratulate him and the brethren at Tacoma on their enterprise and faith.

—Bro. L. C. Howe, the successful and greatly beloved pastor of about 500 of God's chosen people at New Castle, Ind., threw The Christian-Evangelist force into a flutter of happy excitement last week by sending in a list of 106 new subscribers. It was a list without a blemish —all for one year at $1.50 each; the most substantial list received by The Christian-Evangelist in many months. New Castle's list will greatly encourage other churches, and Brother Howe feels that the result of this house-to-house canvass will be a blessing to his people.

—M. E. Harlan, who has been out of his Brooklyn pulpit since June 2 on account of illness, will rest for a year, when he hopes to be as strong as ever. His condition, he feels, will take him from his Brooklyn work. and his plan is to live on ranches, farms and quiet places and visit with his kinsfolk in the west. He was recently called to a pastorate in Washington, D. C., but for the reason mentioned could not consider it even had he been desirous of leaving the Sterling Place Christian Church, of which he has been pastor for seven years. Brother Harlan has been a strong personality and has attracted much attention in the east by his advocacy of Christian union. We sincerely regret that he is forced, for a time, from active work.

FROM BUFFALO.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 15.—Four thousand delegates have registered. Sunday an ideal day. Protestant pulpits filled by our preachers morning and evening. Great throng attended church services in the afternoon; five thousand, it is estimated, joined in celebrating the Lord's supper in convention hall. It was a great and impressive service. These splendid sessions of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions were followed by an enthusiastic Christian Endeavor convention on Saturday night. The Foreign Society is now holding one of the best conventions in its history. Buffalo is playing its part as host magnificently. Press of the city is giving fine reports. All Buffalo and the region round about know we are here and what for.

J. H. GARRISON.

—The brethren at Nelson, Neb., are rejoicing. The old debt of the church has just been wiped out, and money raised in cash to repair it, buy new song books, and still a sum in the treasury. There was an enthusiastic all-day meeting, and, best of all, there were confessions. A county convention has been organized for aggressive work. As an expression of their appreciation of the good work of their minister, Elsworth Day, the Ladies' Aid furnished him with the money to go to the International Convention at Buffalo.

—Our esteemed contemporary, the "Christian Courier," of Dallas, Texas, referring to the commission as recorded in Matt. 28:29, says: "The 1881 edition of the Revised Version changed 'in' to 'into,' but the American Standard Revised Bible has returned to 'in.' " This is not the case in the edition of the American Revised Bible which we possess, and which this house sells. There must be some misunderstanding on this point. There can be no excuse for rendering eis by "in" in such connection. The "Courier" must get a new Bible.

—Bro. Joseph Lowe, speaking of a meeting which he closed at Homewood, Kan., says he made the acquaintance while there of Sister Altman, "who has just passed her one hundredth birthday. She has been totally blind for many years, and is very hard of hearing, but her mind is as clear, her faith as strong, and her hope as bright, as those of any one we have ever conversed with. She was immersed sixty-five years ago by the father of W. W. Dowling. I felt that I was listening to the echoes of the century gone while talking to this faithful centenarian."

—The birthday of George H. Brown occurred on the same day as his first anniversary in the pastorate of our church at Charleston, Ill. The occasion was seized upon by the congregation to express their good-will toward their pastor and his family. Among other useful and valuable gifts was a fine sectional book-case, that would delight the heart of a preacher who has some books. During the past year the church has raised more money for missions than ever before in its history for the same period. There have been seventy additions to the church and everything is in the best working condition.

—It is a good report that J. R. Crank can furnish us with reference to our church at Paragould, Ark., where he is pastor, and which has just closed one of the best years in its history. Every bill has been settled and there is money in the treasury, and every department is well organized. The additions numbered thirty-eight; H. A. Davis holding a meeting which produced 22, and Mrs. Crank holding another with nine additions, while there were seven in regular pastoral work. The most notable gain was in missionary gifts, which increased from about $40 to more than $300.

—W. Daviess Pittman, of St. Louis, a man of large business affairs, but with a zeal for the church that gives him no rest where there is opportunity of service, conducted services at Eureka Springs, Ark., during his summer vacation. There were twenty-seven additions to the church, and interest in all matters pertaining to the Lord greatly increased. Brother Pittman believes an energetic, capable minister could accomplish great good there and recommends that such a one write to the elders of the church.

—Roger H. Fife has just completed his first year in evangelistic work with a record of 985 additions to the congregations, 890 of these being a net gain to the brotherhood. His largest ingatherings were in the meetings in the larger city churches; yet he has worked among the weaker churches, three of his meetings being with missions and two with country churches. Herbert H. Saunders, a fine singer and helper, has been associated with Brother Fife for the last six months. Their next meeting will be at Huntington, West Va., after the convention.

—Walter Scott Priest has just entered upon his fourth year of service at the Central Church, Columbus, O. During that period bills were first liquidated to the extent of $1,500, then the old property was sold, and a fine location secured for a new building which is now in the course of erection and will be one of the most commodious houses in the city. The total cost will be about $[illegible],000, some $18,000 of which will have to be raised in subscriptions. Of this amount $6,000 have already been promised. It is suggested that there may be some former members of the Central Church who would like to have a share in this worthy enterprise, and a certain number of windows have been set aside for purchase at from $15 to $25. During the three years 235 have been received into fellowship. About thirty-one others were baptized, but united with the new congregation at Linden Heights and with other churches in the city. The pastor has received the hearty support of the church and has entered upon another term of three years' ministry with every encouragement. It is expected that the new building will be occupied in about four or five months.

Board of Ministerial Relief of the Church of Christ.

Aid in the support of worthy, needy, disabled ministers ofthe Christian Church and their widows.

THIRD LORD'S DAY IN DECEMBER is the day set apart in all the churches for the offering to this work. If you make individual offerings, send direct to the Board. Wills and Deeds should be made to "BOARD OF MINISTERIAL RELIEF OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST, a corporation under the laws of the State of Indiana." Money received on the Annuity Plan.

Address all communications and make all checks, drafts, etc., payable to

BOARD OF MINISTERIAL RELIEF,
120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

—Dr. D. M. Breaker has just run across a back number of The Christian-Evangelist, which he missed, containing a paper read by J. J. Haley at our congress on "The Union of Baptists and Disciples." He suggests that it should be published in tract form and wishes to record himself as in favor of the movement looking to the reunion of these two bodies of Christians. Brother Breaker and others interested in this subject will be pleased to know that a number of brethren were selected at our congress at Indianapolis to have a conference with an equal number of our Baptist brethren with a view of publishing for the information of the two bodies a sort of irenicon setting forth the things in which they agree, and, perhaps, indicating some of the points of divergence. We believe such a statement will serve to show that we hold much more in common than has generally been supposed, and that the points of difference are not so vital as many think.

—Just on the eve of starting to the Buffalo convention we are in receipt of a letter from R. M. Denholme, of New Orleans, saying that Bro. W. M. Taylor, of the Soniat Avenue Christian Church, in that city, and Brother Charlton have left for the convention "armed with letters from the church, the governor of Louisiana, the mayor and the Progressive Union of this city inviting the National Convention to meet next year at dear old New Orleans. Should the convention decide to visit us, they will meet with no disappointment. A great welcome will be given and the arrangements will be thoroughly attended to." Now, that is pluck, and faith, and enterprise, and hospitality, all combined. Such faith ought to have its reward, but whether it will have it next year, with the Jamestown Exposition, and, no doubt, other cities as competitors, remains to be seen. We are prepared, however, to vouch for these brethren that should the convention decide to go there, no pains will be spared on the part of the New Orleans brethren to make it a great success.

—In a communication from Mrs. Princess Long, intended for last week's issue, but unavoidably crowded out, and which we can only condense here, she urges that some opportunity should be given somewhere, in some time during our national conventions, for the singing evangelists to meet with evangelists and pastors that they may get acquainted with each other. This, she says, is especially due to the younger and more unknown men and women who are devoting themselves to this branch of evangelistic work—the singing of the gospel. At the same time the older and more experienced singers could give helpful suggestions to the younger ones, who, she is satisfied from the number of letters she is receiving, are anxious for advice and suggestions relative to their work. She believes there must come a larger recognition of the place of song in our evangelism, and believes that those who devote themselves with singleness of heart to this work, having the necessary qualifications, should be encouraged and assisted in every legitimate way. We hope to secure a few articles from Mrs. Long giving some of the results of her experience for the benefit of these younger singers, and perhaps from others, also.

Children's Day for Home Missions.

About 800 Sunday-schools observed it during the present missionary year, and sent us more than $10,000 for American evangelization. This is a splendid gain. We hope that 1,200 schools will observe it this year, and send us $15,000.

The day generally observed is November 25, but many schools select other days. Some use our new exercise, Soldiers of the Cross, and take the offering on the day of the autumn rally in the Sunday-schools.

Our program and exercise are the best we have ever provided. Send for them. Observe a day in your Sunday-school for home missions. Make it a big day. Send for our exercise. It will cost you nothing.

Iowa Campaigns.

Two notable campaigns are planned for the coming winter in Iowa beginning in January, 1907, and continuing through three months. There will be the state-wide simultaneous evangelistic campaign, under the leadership of the state board, and a special evangelistic committee. With these is associated W. J. Wright, corresponding secretary of the American board. In preparation for this campaign will be the state-wide Bible school campaign, running through the third quarter of 1906. We have adopted the centennial motto, "All the Church in the Bible School, and as Many More," and believe Centennial Secretary W. R. Warren is right when he says: "To double the church membership we must first double the Bible school membership." The chief aim of the campaign will be, therefore, to increase the Bible school attendance.

The "sinews of war" for this campaign are being gathered in in the first quarterly payments for the current year, and these should all be paid by October 1. Some schools will advance the second quarter, and some will pay their full offering for the year. It is essential to the success of the campaign that we have a general response to this call.

The plans being adopted to stimulate the schools in their work include the red and blue button contest, the house to house canvass, with follow up plan, star systems, the campaign for our folks and their families, etc., etc. Contests between schools are being arranged. The Central Des Moines has challenged the First Church, Kansas City, Mo.

While the aims will be to prepare the way for the evangelistic efforts of 1907 and for decision day next February, many school will have decision days during the campaign this fall. All departments will be revived in some schools, new departments added.

Particulars concerning the Bible school campaign and suggestions as to methods will be sent on application to State Superintendent J. H. Bryan, Thirty-first and State streets, Des Moines, Iowa.

Ministerial Exchange.

J. S. Vance, of Carthage, Mo., is ready to arrange with churches for meetings.

F. F. Guymon is commended as a song leader, worthy of the esteem of the brethren. He can be had for meetings by addressing him at Toledo, Ohio.

M. Lee Sorey, Arkansas City, Kan., knows a man of excellent quality, who has been preaching several years with a good, clean record, who can be had by some church in southern Kansas or Oklahoma at a very reasonable salary.

Churches desiring the services of an evangelist will do well to write S. V. Williams, General Delivery, Brooklyn, N. Y. His terms are most reasonable.

O. L. Adams, of Bethany, Neb., who has been preaching at Craig, Neb., writes that the brethren there desire to locate a preacher.

W. T. Walker, of Salem, Mo., would like work one-half time in reach of Salem, or can hold a few short meetings.

The Kentucky State Convention

The Kentucky C. W. B. M., the Kentucky Bible School Association, and the Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention, held their annual meetings in Louisville, September 24-27. It was the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the first named organization, the sixty-sixth anniversary of the second, and the thirty-fourth annual gathering of the third.

In point of attendance, interest manifested, work reported, work accomplished during the sessions, enthusiasm generated, and plans outlined for the future, this was said by many to have been the most successful convention in the history of our organized work in the state. The churches of the city entertained the delegates for lodging and breakfast. This is the first time this plan of entertainment has been attempted in a Kentucky convention, and it proved eminently satisfactory to all. It is becoming more and more apparent, however, that what is needed in Kentucky is some such place within the state as Bethany Park in Indiana, whither the tribes may annually go up, and, untrammeled by the social obligations which our past methods have imposed, give themselves unreservedly to the work in hand.

From the first session Monday night the interest and enthusiasm steadily increased, culminating in the splendid meetings of the last day. Addresses of welcome were made on behalf of the churches and citizens of Louisville, by Dr. S. S. Waltz, president of the Ministerial Association, and Judge Henry S. Barker of the Court of Appeals. Appropriate responses were made by Mrs. Carey E. Morgan, of Paris; H. D. Clark, of Mt. Sterling; and S. W. Bedford, of Owensboro.

The sessions of the C. W. B. M. were marked by the greatest interest and enthusiasm. The address of the president, Mrs. A. M. Harrison, of Lexington, and the report of the state organizer and secretary, Mrs. S. K. Yancey, of Lexington, showed the work in the state to be in a most prosperous condition. The membership in the state was reported to be 3,081, 141 new members having been added during the year. The amount contributed by these last year was $16,183.97. Forty-six auxiliaries were reported on the honor roll, ten of these gaining the distinction of star auxiliaries, having increased their membership 25 per cent over last year. Twenty-three new auxiliaries were reported. The Missionary Tidings has a circulation in the state of 1,769. Mrs. Sallie Ashbrook, of Cynthiana, reported encouraging progress in raising the $15,000 apportioned to Kentucky auxiliaries on the Centennial fund of $100,000.

The addresses of Miss Belle Bennett and Mrs. Nora Collins Ireland were of a high order. The former is president of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Southern Methodist church, and spoke on "The Training School for Mission Workers." The latter is the living link of the Paris auxiliary, Porto Rico being her field of labor. Mrs. Mary S. Walden, of Danville; Mrs. W. T. Lafferty, of Cynthiana; Prof. F. C. Button and Bro. W. F. Smith, of Morehead, and A. J. Thompson, of Louisville, all made fine reports of their work. A touching memorial service was conducted by Miss Jessie Tandy, of Ghent. A sad incident of the convention was the sudden death of the mother of Mrs. Hattie Moody at Eminence. Mrs. Moody was in attendance at the convention when the sad message summoned her home.

The concluding session of the C. W. B. M. convention on Tuesday night was addressed by Mrs. Helen E. Moses, of Indianapolis; Miss Ada Boyd, living link of the Central Church auxiliary, Lexington, and who is home from Bilaspur, India, on a furlough, and Mrs. Luella St. Clair, president of Hamilton College.

All the sessions of the K. C. M. C. and the Bible School Association were attended by large crowds. This was one of the most orderly and faithfully attended conventions the writer has ever attended. The continual rain, the noise of the busy corner on which the First Church is situated and the many attractions of the city, did not seem to affect the attendance at all. The large auditorium was crowded nearly all the time, and, the interest in the proceedings at no time relaxed.

This report cannot speak in detail of the work of the sessions. Every moment was full of interest. Those presiding at the various periods were C. L. Loos, H. D. Clark, H. C. Garrison, and J. T. Kackley. The report of State Secretary H. W. Elliott showed an encouraging gain in receipts Forty workers were employed during the year, who preached 4,451 sermons and gained 2,062 additions. Fifty-nine preachers were located, 27 Bible schools organized, and nine churches established. The work of the year closed with a good balance in the treasury.

R. M. Hopkins, reporting for the Bible school association, emphasized the Centennial enterprise of raising $25,000 to establish a chair of Bible school pedagogy in the College of the Bible, Lexington. The air was electric with the thought of this enterprise throughout the convention, and at the Thursday afternoon session, under the influence of the speeches by R. H. Crossfield, Marion Lawrance and E. L. Powell a perfect storm of subscriptions was precipitated, which could scarcely be checked by the chairman. In a short time, in sums ranging from $1,000 to $10 about $11,400 was raised to endow this chair. If the time had sufficed, several thousand dollars more would have been subscribed. When the time arrived for the address of Pres. E. Y. Mullins of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, the chairman had to absolutely refuse to receive any more gifts.

The establishment of this chair in the College of the Bible will make the third of its kind in institutions of learning in the country, the other two being in Vanderbilt University, Nashville, and the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville. This was one of the most important and far-reaching accomplishments of the convention. The plan is to raise the entire $25,000 by issuing 2,500 shares of stock at $10 per share. The remaining stock will be rapidly taken by schools and churches not represented in the convention. The faculty and students of the College of the Bible attended this session in a body, and lent much to the interest of the proceedings.

Another forward move along educational lines made by the convention was the appointment of a committee to ascertain the attitude of our various schools in the state toward unifying all our educational interests. This committee is to prepare a feasible plan for such action and report to the next convention.

The committee on anti-saloon work reported seventy-four prohibition counties in the state, new local option territory being added almost every week under the operation of the County Unit bill passed by the last legislature.

The addresses were all up to the general high standard of the convention. R. L. Clark, of Mayfield, was fraternal delegate from South Kentucky. M. G. Buckner, of Harrodsburg spoke for the Kentucky Orphan's Home, taking for his subject, "The Slaughter of the Innocents." Carey E. Morgan, of Paris, spoke on "State Work." J. W. McGarvey had for his theme "Daniel in the Critic's Den." Miss Mary Finch, of Mays Lick gave an address on "The Purpose of State Bible School Work," and R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, discussed "Our Centennial Enterprise."

The "outside" speakers were Marion Lawrance, of Toledo, Ohio, known to every Bible school worker, and Pres. E. Y. Mullins, of Louisville. The former spoke on "The Sunday-school Star approaching its Zenith," and the latter had for his subject, "The Pastor and the Sunday-school." These addresses were beyond criticism and were listened to by great congregations. The address of Pres. Mullins did not begin till 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and he faced an audience that had been in session since 1:30 o'clock, Yet they seemed unwilling for him to cease after he had spoken nearly an hour.

The Louisville convention was a great convention. W. N. Briney.

KENTUCKY CONVENTION SNAP SHOTS.

There were 1,033 delegates and visitors present outside of Louisville.

The following officers were elected by the C. W. B. M. convention, viz: President, Mrs. A. M. Harrison; Vice-Presidents, Mesdames Carey Morgan, John Gay, Jr., O. E. Hagerman; Secretary and Organizer, Mrs. S. K. Yancey; Treasurer, Mrs. O. L. Bradley; Superintendent Y. P. department, Mrs. Mary Walden; President South Kentucky department, Mrs. Elizabeth Seargeant.

The K. C. M. C. elected the following officers, viz: President, B. M. Arnett, Nicholasville; Vice-President, C. K. Marshall, Richmond; Secretary, B. M. Trimble, Mt. Sterling; State Evangelist and Treasurer, H. W. Elliott, Sulphur; Executive Committee, C. L. Loos, B. C. Deweese, R. N. Simpson and W. C. Morro, Lexington; C. E. Morgan, Paris; B. W. Trimble, Mt. Sterling and Geo. W. Kemper, Midway.

The Sunday-school convention elected the following officers, viz: President, Hume Logan, Louisville; Vice-Presidents, J. K. Bondurant, Paducah; W. T. Hinton, Paris, and C. E. Tate, Stanford; Secretary, R. N. Simpson, Lexington. The following were also selected to fill vacancies on the state board, viz: J. S. Carpenter, G. L. Sehon, Jos. Burge, J. S. Hilton.

We have never seen a larger gathering of preachers at a state convention. Nearly every preacher in Central Kentucky was on hand. This ought to mean much to the success of our state work the ensuing year.

The Louisville preachers "behaved themselves admirably, under the circumstances." They did their part well, and were here, there and everywhere seeing to the comfort of their guests. Their little white caps were especially becoming! We tried to get a glimpse of Brother Powell with "his on," but couldn't.

Too much credit can not be given to Miss Florence Miller, who acted as chairman of the entertainment committee. She was greatly complimented on the graceful manner in which she filled her office.

Several of our staid and tried old bachelor-preachers were on hand, looking as bright and fresh as you please—but to no effect, as yet!

It was indeed a glad sight to see such men as C. L. Loos, J. W. McGarvey, J. B. Briney, and others of the older preachers, in health and strength, taking an active part in the deliberations of the convention.

The largest individual pledge toward the endowment of the proposed chair of Sunday-school pedagogy in the College of the Bible, was made by Brother Thomas, of Shelbyville, who gave $1,000. The Sunday-school at Covington, through its superintendent, Judge Fiske, also pledged $1,000.

The annual reports of Brothers Elliott and Hopkins were very gratifying and showed a splendid work done by them last year.

The work of the state board has been under the general supervision of H. W. Elliott as state evangelist for the past fourteen years, during which time it has greatly increased. He enters upon the present year with increased hopes and courage, and, if the churches support him as they should, this will be our banner year in state mission work.

The time and place of the next convention was left in the hands of the state board.

Midway, Ky. Geo. W. Kemper.

Western Pennsylvania Convention

The largest, most enthusiastic and in every way the best convention of this district has adjourned. The enrolled attendance was over three hundred, but as it was known that many came who did not register, the total attendance was probably six hundred. The simultaneous campaign last November interfered with the offering in many places, yet the receipts for the year were the largest in our history.

Nineteen years ago, when the present co-operation was formed, we had scarcely 7,000 members in the district; now we have 19,000. Of these, 4,001 in Allegheny county, and 3,437 in the region beyond, were gained under the fostering care of the board. In this county the property has increased from $70,000 to $409,200, of which $242,000 was gained under the board. In the outside counties the gain has been $185,800 under the co-operation. We have a million dollars in property to-day, and more members in Greater Pittsburg than we had in all Western Pennsylvania then.

Such churches as Central, Pittsburg, Beaver, Knoxville, Greensburg, Uniontown, Wilkinsberg, Observatory Hill, Homestead, and many others have been aided to become sources of strength and centers of influence. We will have nine counties in which we own property, and many cities in which there are from ten to forty Disciples calling for aid.

The program would have done credit to a national convention. Wallace Tharp preached the convention sermon on "Pioneer Night." J. Walter Carpenter, of Uniontown, Fred M. Gordon, of Knoxville, E. A. Cole, of Washington, delivered addresses on "Barton W. Stone," "Walter Scott," and "Alexander Campbell." The convention closed with a lecture by Joseph Clark, secretary of the Ohio Bible School Association. Space forbids the mention of other excellent addresses.

The C. W. B. M. had a half day. The reports showed they had kept pace with the brethren in their work. Five new auxiliaries with 120 members have been organized, and $5,000 sent to the National Board. Five new Junior Societies have been organized, $681 were paid by the auxiliaries for state fund. About $200 also came from special gifts to this fund.

The same officers were elected by both boards for the coming year except that J. Walter Carpenter takes the place of Geo. W. Knepper as superintendent of Christian Endeavor.

Notes.

E. E. Manley goes to Scranton November 1. Frank G. Longdon takes the work at Beech View under the board. The Banksville congregation will be moved to the new location where property has been purchased. Miss Sarah Klippelt leaves Central, after a long and faithful service, to return to her home in Mansfield, O. John A. Jayne takes the work at Belmar. O. H. Philipps has resigned after fourteen years at Braddock, to take charge of the "Christian Worker." Walter S. Rounds goes to Flatbush church, Brooklyn. He will take work in the University. C. H. Frick will go to Franklin and Butler to remain till churches are organized and buildings erected. N. W. Philipps has led the Greensberg church to pay its burden of debt. It was once feared the work would be lost.

Tennessee State Convention

Disciples of Christ have just been to the beautiful little city of Paris for their annual meeting, which was as fine a convention as was ever held by the brotherhood in Tennessee. Called to order by President Robert Stewart, of Knoxville, the convention was opened by prayer by R. P. Meeks, of Humboldt, after which the delegates were welcomed to the city by Judge A. B. Lamb. After this we listened to a sermon by President Stewart on "The Heart of Missions"—a fine subject to put all of us in the right spirit for a good missionary convention.

Tuesday morning, promptly on time, the meeting began its work. First was an able sermon on missions by W. H. Shelburne, who has had a number of years' experience in the evangelistic field. This was followed by an address by the Hon. H. M. Meeks, of Nashville, Tenn., on "Tennessee and the Church," and so well pleased was the convention with it that on motion it was ordered put into a tract and distributed throughout the state. Next came the report of A. I. Myhr, state secretary, which was his seventeenth annual report and showed we had made substantial gains all along the line of our work.

During the year ten were in the employ of the churches all the time and fifteen men a portion of the year or sufficient to make the year's work for one man. As a result of their labors about 800 members were added to our membership and sixty places were given help by the board during the year, which shows substantial work done when we consider that the whole number of Disciples in the state who are assisting in this work is not more than 15,000. About $15,000 was raised for this work and the permanent fund was increased until it now amounts to $14,500. There are about 175 preachers in the state who devote all their time to preaching. The amount of moneys raised for educational purposes was $30,000 and for all purposes about $150,000, or about $3 per member. Of course, this does not include moneys raised in Sunday-schools and Endeavor societies, as we have had no one giving his time wholly to Sunday-school work; but it was decided to put a man in the field at once, and E. S. Baker, of Jackson, was selected as our Sunday-school evangelist, and we hope to make a good showing during this year, as it is estimated we have 25,000 scholars in our schools in the state. With the help of our evangelist we hope to raise not less than $1,200 or $1,500 from the schools.

Tuesday afternoon L. D. Riddell, of Memphis, made a strong address on "The Four Years' Crusade and Its Effect on Tennessee."

Tuesday night, W. H. Sheffer, of Memphis, delivered one of the strongest sermons on Christian Union. It was illustrated by large colored charts.

Wednesday morning Brother McKissock, of Nashville, delivered an interesting talk on "The Christian Business Man in the Church," which was well received, and this was followed by E. C. McDougle, president of Georgia Robertson college of Henderson, on "Christian Giving." President McDougle has few superiors as a speaker and was listened to with delight.

Wednesday afternoon we had an interesting conference on "Evangelism," led by E. S. Baker, of Jackson, and followed by some half dozen speakers. Wednesday night we were greatly pleased with a sermon by J. E. Gorsuch, of Memphis, on "Points in Our Plea Needing Emphasis To-day." By many this was thought to be one of the best talks of the convention, but when there were so many good ones it is hard to pick the best.

Thursday morning J. A. Campbell, one of our state workers, led the devotional services and it was one of those strong pleas for living closer to our Savior; in fact each of the devotional periods, of which there were three each day led by one of our good brothers, was a strong plea for better living.

Thursday morning we listened to a strong sermon by E. E. Crawford, of Alberquerque, New Mexico, which was a plea for the work in our home land. He was followed by Brother McLean, of Cincinnati, whose theme was "World-wide Missions." All who know him know it was well presented.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: J. J. Castleberry, of Union City, president; A. B. Reeves, of Paris City, recording secretary; A. J. Myler, of Nashville, corresponding secretary and state evangelist.

This ended the work of the convention, and it will go to Vine Street church, Nashville next year, the first week in October.

The church at Paris entertained all in attendance free of charge in the homes of its members and not one who was there will forget the many kindnesses.

Thursday afternoon and evening were taken up by the C. W. B. M., with Sister Peyton Robinson, of Nashville, and after a beautiful devotional service conducted by Miss Annie Davidson, of Eureka, Ill. Sister Robertson made her report for the year, which showed gains all along the line, and like the missionary meeting was the best in the history of the work. Mrs. Rowena Rivers Hirsch, of Jackson, corresponding secretary, made a very interesting report of the work during the year, which showed all departments to be in a growing condition. Other interesting reports were made by Mrs. Mazie T. Allen, of Nashville, superintendent of young people's department; Mrs. W. H. Sheffer, of Memphis, 1st vice president, and Mrs. W. R. Jous, of Murfreesboro, 2d vice-president. Papers were read by Mrs. C. B. Ragland, of Murfreesboro, and Mrs. L. D. Riddell, of Memphis. A summary of the year's work is as follows: Number of auxiliaries, 12; number of members, 365; Junior societies, 15—a gain of 8 for the year! one young ladies' society; number of Tidings taken, 220; whole amount of moneys raised, $1,919.15. Thursday night's session was opened by Mrs. Wm. H. Smith, of Nashville, conducting the services. Miss Annie Davidson, the president of the Illinois C. W. B. M., was the speaker and it was a perfect delight to all who had the pleasure of listening to her. After her address W. H. Sheffer, of Memphis, made a strong plea for Tennessee's Centennial Mountain school which it is proposed to establish.

This report would be incomplete if we did not mention the music which was conducted by Captain Murphy, of Springfield, Tenn. It was pronounced by all as fine as we could wish. Another thing that should not be overlooked, was the model meeting of the Paris Juniors; the little people "did themselves proud."

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Kansas.

W. S. Lowe has closed seven fruitful years of work for the Kansas Christian Missionary Society as their superintendent, and has located with the church in Paola, Kan. His mantle fell unexpectedly and unsought upon me. It seems at this time to be too long and large, unless the ministers and members of the Church in the state will stand as an aid in every effort to carry out the instructions of the convention.

At this time there is a deficit of over $1,000. The board borrowed the money that the laborers might continue in the most important work entrusted to us.

November 4 is the day sacred to Kansas missions. Every church is urged to secure an offering from all their members. Plan for large things in Kansas this year by a large November offering. Let us work together now that we may rejoice together at the close of the year.

George E. Lyon,
Superintendent of Kansas Missions.

A Happy Coming of Age.

The twenty-first anniversary of the church at Englewood, Chicago, was a very happy occasion. Sunday was Bible school day, Marion Stevenson giving a beautiful address in the morning and the regular Sunday-school hour was devoted to the Annual Fall Rally Day, with C. B. Jackson, superintendent, presiding. A striking incident of this session was when the class of Pastor Kindred rose to their feet seventy-nine strong. W. C. Merritt and Herbert Moninger were to the front in the Sunday-school workers' session, while the latter and W. C. Pearce, the international teacher training secretary, and Marion Stevenson filled their parts on the program in the afternoon meeting, W. C. Pearce speaking also in the place of W. R. Jacobs, one of the best-known of Sunday-school workers, who was able to be present. A. McLean was one of the speakers on this anniversary, taking for his theme "The Sunday-school and World-wide Missions." Three of the members who have chosen the ministry for their life-work were called to the front—Walter Wright, who goes to Drake, and Charles Adams and William Madison, who are at Eureka. On Monday afternoon the C. W. B. M. Auxiliary had their meeting, Dr. Mary Longdon and Mrs. A. B. Cole having the floor. In the evening Brother McLean gave his great lecture on Alexander Campbell. On Tuesday the Ladies' Aid was addressed by Brother Kindred and Mrs. C. B. Jackson gave an excellent report of the society, which has made a fine record. One of their contributions was $1,500 toward the purchase of the new church. A miscellaneous program was rendered in the afternoon, and a reception followed to Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Garrison, along with a goodly number of visitors. In the evening came the event of the occasion—Brother Garrison's address on "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem." The hay fever, which still held our brother in its grip, seemingly did not in any degree quench the fire which entered into the delivery of this splendid address. Had I space I would like to give some of the thoughts advanced and give some of my own views. The history of the Englewood church was traced in The Christian-Evangelist two years ago, when, under the leadership of our minister, C. G. Kindred, we dedicated our present edifice, beautiful for situation and representing a money value of close upon $40,000, with a debt to-day of less than $3,000. Our ideal of the years is at least partially realized—a beautiful church home and a creditable property, practically free of encumbrance, without slighting the chief obligation of every congregation to keep alive its missionary spirit; for while in the process of newly housing ourselves we became a living link in both the home and foreign field. Brother Kindred has just entered his eighth year with us and in the twenty-one years of this church's life B. H. Hayden served four years and N. S. Haynes six and one-half years. The heart and interest of these former ministers were so interwoven with this church as to inseparably identify them with it. Our present minister is broad visioned and faith filled. Enlargement is always our watchword, and we are moving for the erection on the rear of our lots of the first section of a model Sunday-school building. We are planning for more living links in our chain.

North Carolina.

The Piedmont district of North Carolina held its co-operation meeting with the church in Winston on September 28 and 29. There were about twelve delegates from outside the city. About twenty churches are located in this section of the state. A number of them are small and not very active. Our convention had reports from most of the congregations.——W. G. Walker, state evangelist, was present, and gave a rousing sermon on Friday night. He also was very helpful in the discussions of the convention. Dr. B. T. Bitting, the beloved physician and minister of the church at Spray, gave a stirring discourse on "Evangelization in Our District." The convention determined to endeavor to secure money from the churches and put an evangelist in our field, to "set in order the things that are wanting," and plant new missions as soon as possible. A committee on evangelizing was appointed, consisting of five members. The choir of the Winston Church gave some special music at the night service. We have now fifteen in our chorus and a good male quartette.——We are looking forward to our mortgage burning, October 24. We hope to have with us H. C. Bowen, pastor when the church was built, and W. J. Wright, corresponding secretary, who held a meeting in Winston some years ago.

Nebraska.

Knox P. Taylor, of Illinois, held a Bible school institute at Chester, and is now at Belvidere. He can be had for further dates. Write him or G. R. Dill at Belvidere.——One added by baptism and one by statement at Minden, where B. H. Whiston preaches. Two by baptism and one by letter at Stella September 30. A. L. Ogden, minister half time. Five added at Ansley September 23; T. C. McIntire is the regular preacher.——N. T. Harmon is open for evangelistic meetings. Address him at David City.——Bloomington will begin a meeting October 28 with J. Stuart Miller, of Edison, as evangelist. G. C. Johnson is the regular preacher there.——Nine were added to the church at York, where Thomas Maxwell ministers, during September—5 by baptism and 4 by letter. There have been 49 added at regular services during the year ending October 1—18 of these by baptism and 31 by letter and statement. They have a splendid Bible school, with Mrs. E. Bradwell superintendent.——Bert Wilson is at Virginia in a meeting. J. G. Olmstead is the singer.——Austin and McVey are at Beaver Crossing in a tent meeting. Had 14 added when last heard from. Medicine show and rainy weather were hindering causes, but good audiences prevailed.——State Evangelist Forell is at Vesta. This is a small place, and our work is new, being just a year old. Two added at last report—Brother Forell is the Living Link evangelist for the church at Clay Center, where A. G. Smith ministers. This congregation took up the suggestion to become a Living Link in state missions very enthusiastically, and pledged the necessary $300 in a short time on Lord's day morning. When it is remembered that this church has built a new church and parsonage in the last three years, it will be seen that they are a missionary people.——State Evangelist Whiston has been and still is in a tent meeting at Norfolk. The cause is new here also, and the problems are hard to solve. The rainy week that prevailed at the very first, with cold weather, was a serious handicap. They now have a stove in the tent, and are beginning to get a fair hearing. Eight had been added up till October 4. The meeting continues. The church is preparing to build a house on the lots purchased this summer.——O. A. Adams has been called and has accepted the work of state evangelist under the Nebraska board. His work will begin October 10, probably at Mason City, where we have a few brethren.——The meeting at Danbury closed October 1. John T. Smith, of Nebraska City, was the preacher. There were 3 baptisms and 3 by statement——Last month's report made this letter say that 55 would probably be gathered together in the Adams meeting. This should have read 25. The actual number ing was held the last two weeks by J. D. For is 23, as reported after organization. This meet-syth, and begun by Charles and Jean Cobbey.——George Light has gone to Trenton, Neb., and writes that he will hold a meeting there and at Cornell. We have an unused house at Trenton, and a small congregation at Cornell.——Samuel Gregg, of Jefferson, Iowa, preached at Fremont October 1, and was expected there again on October 7. He may be called to that field.——L. N. Early has been called to the pastorate at Broken Bow, and is now at work in that field. The church is planning a new house on a new location.——Z. O. Doward, state superintendent of Christian Endeavor for the Christian churches, attended the State Union C. E. convention at Hastings. He reports a very enthusiastic convention.

Not a Superstitious Church.

On October 7, the church at Peru, Ind., observed its thirteenth anniversary. A supply of new "Praise Hymnals" was on hand for the service, as was also a new individual communion set which was used for the first time by this congregation. Eleven persons were added during the day and the cash offerings amounted to $80. The church was organized thirteen years ago by Charles L. Fillmore with thirteen charter members. The first trustees were elected on the thirteenth of the month. There are now thirteen members on the official board, thirteen classes in the Bible school and thirteen teachers. On last Lord's day the contribution of the school was $13 and the pastor lives at No. 113. We are not superstitious, but believe that this is our lucky number, as the church has never had any trouble or friction and has always prospered and is in a good, healthy growing condition with a bright future before it.

How the Church was Built at Quinlan, Okla.

A new house of worship of the Disciples at Quinlan, Okla., has been dedicated. J. M. Monroe, Cor. Sec. of Oklahoma, preached the sermon. Brother Monroe knows how to strike silver and gold bearing veins. Five hundred dollars were needed to cover all indebtedness on the church. This was readily pledged. The Church Extension Board let this congregation have $500, but this amount is covered with pledges. Our rapid and healthy growth at Quinlan has strengthened my faith in the success of our plea. Seven months ago there were about a dozen scattered brethren there, and no organization at all. During February of this year J. D. Lawrence, the living-link evangelist, then supported by The Christian-Evangelist, held a meeting. As a result of the meeting a church of over 100 members was organized. The majority of those who came into the church were young people, who came by primary obedience. The brethren at once began to prepare for themselves a church house. The corresponding secretary made a trip to Quinlan and secured $500 in pledges. The town site company donated four lots. But after the building had been started the brethren seemed to lose interest. There was talk of giving up the undertaking of building the house. During March a young man, fresh from Texas Christian University, landed in Quinlan. The text of his first sermon was "So built we the walls." He told the people under what difficulties the walls and temple at Jerusalem were rebuilt. During the week this young man worked with hammer and saw, and he would then preach three sermons each Sunday in the surrounding school houses. As a result of his leadership the building, with the exception of the tower, was soon completed, chairs and a bell were bought, and the church dedicated free of debt. The young man who brought this about was Theo. Edwards, late of Australia. I predict for Brother Edwards great success in the ministry. The corresponding secretary of Oklahoma said to me last week, "These Australians are pure gold."

CHRISTIAN UNION:
A Historical Study

By J. H. GARRISON.

This latest book of J. H. Garrison deals with the living question of Christian Union from the historical point of view. The author presents Christian Union as it existed in—

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.
II. THE POST-APOSTOLIC AGE.
III. THE GRAECO-ROMAN AGE.
IV. THE PROTESTANT ERA.
V. THE PERIOD OF REUNION, beginning with the Nineteenth Century.

These are the five chapters of the book with numerous subtitles under which the subject is discussed. The closing chapter deals with present day movements toward Christian union, in which the plea of the Disciples of Christ is strongly stated. One of the most interesting features of the book is its treatment of recent interdenominational movements, including that of federation, in their relation to Christian union.

This is one of the timeliest books that has ever been issued from our press, and we predict for it an extraordinary demand as an up-to-date statement of this vital question, both in the light of history and of current movements in the religious world. It contains 207 pages, is bound in the best silk cloth, and sells for $1.00, postpaid.

Kentucky.

At Berea, Ky., A. Van Winkle is getting matters well in hand for a vigorous winter campaign. From twelve to fifteen hundred students are expected this winter and a great opportunity is presented for preaching the gospel. W. J. Cocke had a good month. There were 20 added. He is now in a meeting at Erlanger with L. B. Haskins. Brother Haskins has resigned to take effect January 1. He is a fine man and we regret to see him give up this field.——A lot has been secured and $605.50 raised to build a house of worship at Harlan Court House. Another county seat will soon be provided with a house that is Christian only.——Harlan C. Runyan had two additions at Latonia, burned the Church Extension notes that had been paid and reports that Mrs. Whipps has given on the annuity plan a house and lot worth $1,600 adjoining the church lot. Either the enlargement of the house of worship or the building of a new house is imperative. Not room for the people who attend the services.——At Bardstown J. B. Briney and the church will be helped in a meeting by Dr. M. Gano Buckner, Harrodsburg.——Valley View had the services of D. C. McCallum half time. A meeting is planned.——H. W. Elliott was at work all September in the interest of state missions. He preached every Sunday at one or more places, attended two conventions aside from the state convention, added two, raised $1,781.66, reported a balance on hand at Louisville of $1,188.84, and we increased the amount given by the churches over the former year $1,035. This made us able to meet our obligations for the year to September and left a balance on hand of $255. We enter a new year with greater opportunities than ever before. Already insistent appeals are being made for help. By the time this reaches print letters concerning the November offering will have been mailed. The replies of these letters must in a large measure govern the board in arranging the work for 1907. Prompt replies are urged from the brethren everywhere. Give us some idea as to your willingness to help us during the coming year. Let all the preachers and all the churches give us immediate knowledge of their plans relative to our work in Kentucky.

St. Francois Co-operation.

The St. Francois County Christian Church Co-operation convened at Libertyville, Mo., on October 5, Judge G. O. Nations presiding. It was one of the best meetings for many years. The key note was struck by E. J. Fenstermacher, in his sermon on "The teachings of Jesus, and the Christian Church as the exponent of that teaching." He was followed by Mrs. Bantz, who spoke for the C. W. B. M. Judge Nations, in a masterful way presented the plea of the Disciples of Christ, based on the declaration of Thomas Campbell in 1809, looking toward 1909. This led to the Centennial aims, presented by R. O. Rogers. In the absence of T. A. Abbott the evening session was devoted to a very profitable round table talk on Bible school work, conducted by Edward Owers. Saturday morning's session was opened with a strong and helpful address by A. W. Kokendoffer. Geo. T. Smith represented the educational feature of our work, when Edward Owers made a very strong plea for "A Christian paper in every Christian home." This was followed by a solution to one of the greatest problems confronting the church to-day—Finance. Last but by no means least, with a sermon on, "How to Remove Hindrances" by R. O. Rogers. Fifty dollars were pledged on condition that enough can be raised to place a good evangelist in the county for a year. The officers elected were: Judge G. O. Nations, president; G. B. Gale, vice-president; J. E. Cover, treasurer; Edward Owers, secretary.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Alabama.

Mobile, Oct. 9.—Twelve accessions by letter and statement since last report.—J. H. Robinson, secretary Official Board.

California.

Ocean Park, Oct. 8.—Two confessions yesterday. Eight since last report. Membership doubled since January 1.—George Ringo.

Illinois.

Saybrook, Oct. 9.—Two added—1 by baptism and 1 by letter.—James N. Thomas.

Scottville, Oct. 13.—Am in a good meeting here. Four additions last night. Fine audiences. E. E. Booker conducts the singing.—M. L. Anthony, evangelist.

Long Point, Oct. 8.—Three weeks' meeting closed yesterday. Thirteen added—10 confessions. W. G. McColley, Pontiac, Ill., did the preaching, and Mrs. J. E. Powell, Bloomington, Ill., led the singing.—F. W. Sutton, pastor.

Indiana.

Russellville, Oct. 9.—The Martin Family are in a splendid meeting here. Have had several confessions already.

New Palestine, Oct. 10.—Seven additions since September 23. Work is taking on a prosperous front.—Carl H. Barnett, pastor.

Monticello, Oct. 8.—Nineteen additions at Cullen Creek—18 baptisms. A. W. Jackman did the preaching, assisted in the singing by F. E. Trucksess, of La Fayette, Ind.

Crothersville, Oct. 9.—Closed a meeting at this place last Thursday night which resulted in 13 additions, 10 by confession and baptism and 3 by letter. The music was in charge of Mrs. A. W. Crabb, of Brazil, Ind., and Miss Bertha Short, of Seymour, Ind.—A. W. Crabb.

Indian Territory.

Amber, Oct. 12.—Three confessions last night. Twenty-four added in six days. Good prospects. —Robert E. Rosenstein.

Sapulpa, Sept. 10.—Through the efforts of H. S. Kline and myself, 5 were added in a few days' meeting at Stilwell, I. T.—A. M. Harral.

Muskogee, Oct. 9.—Closed a two weeks' meeting at Ada with 30 additions. Am now in a meeting at Muskogee with George H. Farley, pastor.—C. F. Trimble.

Iowa.

Cumberland, Oct. 6.—We are holding a meeting with conversions, assisted by Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, of Bethany, Mo.—C. E. Dunkleberger.

Des Moines, Oct. 11.—Had two additions at Salem, Mo., Sunday.—H. L. Lewis.

Mt. Pleasant, Oct. 11.—Work here is opening up nicely. One added recently by statement.—L. A. Chapman.

Idaho.

Nampa, Oct. 1.—Closed Nampa meeting with 12 accessions. Two confessions, 4 letters and 6 by statement. P. R. Burnett did good service as singing evangelist. Have had 128 additions in the four missionary meetings in Idaho this summer.—George C. Ritchey.

Weiser, Oct. 8.—Four additions yesterday.—G. M. Read.

Kansas.

Pleasanton, Oct. 9.—Closed a three weeks' meeting here resulting in 44 additions, 30 confessions, 14 otherwise. Have been pastor here eight months. All departments of work are doing well.—O. A. Ishmael.

Kentucky.

Hazel Green, Oct. 10.—Two added by letter yesterday.—H. L. Atkinson.

Lawrenceburg, Oct. 10.—Closed an interesting meeting of 12 days for the Fox Creek (Ky.) church, with 15 baptisms. The members were so aroused that they meet this week to organize a weekly prayer-meeting, and expect to have preaching twice instead of once a month. The Lawrenceburg church generously gave me the time, and this marks the beginning of mission work in Anderson, in which our church will give its minister to weak country churches in an effort to revive the work and lead to closer co-operation and fellowship. A Girls' Circle was recently organized with 27 members, and an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. with 19 members. Have a club for boys with 19 members. Two recently added by letter, one by confession.—Walter C. Gibbs, minister.

JESUS ANOINTED IN BETHANY.—Matt. 26:6-16.

Memory verses, 12, 13.

Golden Text.—She hath wrought a good work upon me. Matt. 26:10.

It is unfortunate that, in giving this lesson its place in the course, the committee did not put it in its probable chronological order. While Matthew records the incident of the anointing in Bethany immediately before the Last Supper, both Mark and John put it just before the Triumphal Entry. John even tells exactly when it occurred—"six days before the passover." Since Matthew is never much interested in chronological sequence but prefers a topical arrangement, the harmonists generally agree that the anointing at Bethany occurred on the Sabbath preceding the Triumphal Entry. It was thus the last event before the beginning of Passover week.

Simon the leper was probably a man whom Jesus had, at some earlier time, cleansed of his leprosy. There is a dramatic force in bringing together in the last hour before the beginning of the week of suffering and death, the Great Healer, Lazarus, whom he had raised from the dead, and Simon, who had been restored from what was almost equivalent to death.

The criticism made by the disciples (John says by Judas alone) against Mary's lavish outpouring of precious ointment, is a piece of the perpetual outcry of short-sighted souls against everything which is not palpably and materially useful. They could understand well enough the virtue of feeding the poor—truly a most substantial and excellent virtue. But the virtue and value of a beautiful act of love, the fragrance of the spikenard poured out in utter devotion as the precious symbol of the heart's complete surrender—these were hidden from them. They smelled the ointment. It was agreeable—and wastefully costly. But their nostrils could not catch the finer aroma which, going forth from the spirit of Mary's gracious deed, has made its sweetness felt through all the Christian centuries and throughout the world.

A beautiful act is always worth its cost—if it is beautiful and perfect enough. The poor are not robbed by any outpouring of devotion however extravagant. We do not gain in practical helpfulness by withholding either time or money from worship. Whatever tends to the truest cultivation and the most eloquent expression of devotion is thoroughly practical.

Picture of War Engine "General."

A beautiful colored picture, 18x25 inches, of the historic old engine "General" which was stolen at Big Shanty, Ga., by the Andrew's Raiders during the Civil War, and which is now on exhibition in the Union Depot, Chattanooga, Tenn., has been gotten out by the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Ry.—The "Battlefields Route" to the South. The picture is ready for framing and will be mailed for 25c. The "Story of the General" sent free. W. L. Danley, Gen'l Pass. Agent, Nashville, Tenn.

A CHURCH UNDER FALSE TEACHING.—Rev. 2:18-29.

"My God, my Strength, my Hope,
On thee I cast my care,
With humble confidence look up,
And know thou hearest my prayer
Give me on thee to wait,
Till I can all things do—
On thee, almighty to create,
Almighty to renew.

"I want a Godly fear,
A quick-discerning eye,
That looks to thee when sin is near,
And bids the tempter fly;
A spirit still prepared,
And armed with jealous care,
Forever standing on its guard,
And watching unto prayer."

It is not difficult for Bible readers to know the doctrine whether it be of God. One of the favoring conditions under which destructive teachings are propagated is ignorance of the Word of God. To the book, O Israel! There are knowledge, divine approval and life.

Jezebel is the personification of worldliness. Her lures were promises of pleasure addressed to physical sensation or the pride of life. Spiritual joys or the will of God were not considered. The denouement was unquenchable thirst, a looking forward to wrath to come, and will kill her children with death.

Strong evidence of our divine origin is that countless men and women are naturally better than their priests and the moral instruction administered by them. In all the religious denominations are those of Christian character notwithstanding serious errors of teaching and belief. The inherent righteousness is implanted of God and is stronger than the false teachings of man.

Thyatira was guilty of easy complacency in the heresies of Jezebel. This lesson is very significant to church elders whose duty it is to watch over the flocks and see on what they are being fed. All teachings permitted must be tested by Gospel standards and forbidden if deficient in or in excess of Bible authorization, and followed simplicity if in accordance with the Word.

There are errors of teachings atoned for so far as the teacher is concerned by orthodoxy of life. On the other hand the pronouncement of the most correct principles is often more than nullified by heterodoxy of practice. Where there is perfect consistency between theories of life, harmonious with the Scriptures and one's daily life, there is earth's true nobility.

The Spirit's admonition to the seven churches which were in Asia to hold faithful unto the end were not observed. In their faithfulness would have been their glory. In their disloyalty was their doom. They were in Asia, to-day they are only in history. Though a forest may become extinct, some of the individual trees may have beautifully completed their cycle. Thyatira has only a name, but some of her membership may be glorious in the skies. Though we be identified with a congregation whose works are not worth the candle, still, individually, we may win divine approval.

FOOT COMFORT
Obtained from Baths with Cuticura Soap and Anointings with Cuticura, the Great Skin Cure.

Soak the feet on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry, and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure. Bandage lightly in old, soft cotton or linen. For itching, burning, and scaly eczemas, inflammations and chafings of the feet or hands, for redness, roughness, cracks, and fissures, with brittle, shapeless nails, and for tired, aching muscles and joints, this treatment works wonders when physicians and all else fail.

MISSIONS TO AFRICANS.—Psalms 68:28-35.

DAILY READINGS.

M.	An Ethiopian Forecast.	2 Chron. 14:9-15.
T.	A Soul Saved.	Psa. 87:1-7.
W.	The Power of God.	Isa. 45:14-16.
T.	An Important Question.	Jer. 13:22-24.
F.	The Ethiopians.	Amos. 9:7-10.
S.	Ethiopia's Appeal.	Psa. 68:28-35.
S.	An Ethiopian Convert.	Acts 8:26-38.

"I know of a land that is sunk in shame,
Of hearts that faint and tire—
And I know of a Name, a Name, a Name,
Can set that land on fire.
Its sound is a hand, its letters flame—
I know of a Name, a Name, a Name,
Will set that land on fire."

Twelve hundred missionaries in Africa! Good, we say. But, when we consider the vastness of the field, we are led to say of this body of workers, "What are these among so many?" Africa has a population of 200,000,000. The continent embraces about one-fourth of the land area of the globe. Europe, the United States, India, China and the British Isles could be placed within her borders.

It was Stanley who applied the term "Dark Continent" to Africa. This has a peculiar fitness as applied to this continent: first, because Africa alone, at the beginning of the nineteenth century, lay in unpenetrated darkness; second, because it is the one continent whose population is composed almost entirely of dark peoples; third, it is the one continent whose native religion is without sacred writings and definite systems.

In Africa to-day there are 45 societies at work. They are represented by 1,200 missionaries, 1,000 stations and about 1,000,000 Protestant adherents. The Bible has been translated in whole or in part into 70 languages. Thirty years ago there was not a convert in all Central Africa, to-day there are over 60,000; thirty years ago there were no churches or schools, to-day there are over 2,000 places of worship and instruction; then there were no pupils, to-day there are 300,000; then, no native workers, to-day there are 100 ordained evangelists and over 3,000 helpers among the natives.

The "roll-call of heroes" would certainly not be complete without the names of Moffatt, the dauntless pioneer; Livingstone, the missionary explorer; Mackenzie, the missionary statesman; Mackay, the devoted diplomat and scholar; Johnson, Crowther, Steere, Arnot, Greenfell, the Combers, Hannington, Coillard, Hore—all these were among those who, by faith, "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, turned to flight the armies of the aliens." Like the heroes of old, they "endured as seeing that which is invisible." They "looked for a city, whose builder and maker is God."

Christianity is not alone in her effort to capture Africa for herself. The Moslems are to-day stirred with a genuine missionary zeal and are taking great steps in accomplishing their purpose. The question is, shall Africa be Mohammedan or Christian? With millions of adherents already in the heart of the continent the advantage in numbers is clearly on the side of the "false prophet." The outlook, indeed, would be discouraging, did we not have the prophetic assurance that the time will come when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

That "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church" is no mere sentiment, is amply evidenced by the history of missions in Africa. From statistics furnished by the seven leading missionary socities of the United States, it is estimated that the average length of service of the missionaries under their auspices has been eight years, and that since 1833 these seven societies have given 195 lives for Africa. Consider the career of Livingstone, the greatest of African missionaries. He travelled thirty thousand miles through parching thirst or drenching rains. He made graves for his wife and child in the dense forests, and finally in the spring of 1873 was himself found by his faithful black men, kneeling by his bed of grass, his candle still burning, his head resting on both his hands, his spirit gone to Him, in whom he had "lived, moved and had his being" through all those years of physical suffering and defeat.

The New State of Oklahoma

Bigger than Missouri: as big as Ohio and Indiana combined, with a soil teeming with all the crops that any State raises, OKLAHOMA is destined to occupy first rank in a few short years.

Here at the present time over a million people are duplicating the life which is going on in Illinois and Indiana. Their houses; their towns and their schools are newer but in nothing else do their surroundings differ from those in our States. Their cities and towns are growing and expanding with the impetus of a fertile soil, and a pushing, wide-awake citizenship. Her settlers, mainly from the older States, see the virtue of encouraging enterprises of every kind and the needfulness of getting more and better facilities; of getting more hands to develop the country.

In brief, conditions to-day are simply these: OKLAHOMA is in need of nothing save people. More men are needed in the cities and towns; more farmers for the vast areas of unimproved land not now yielding crops of which it is capable. There are openings of all sorts, for farmers and artisans, for mills and manufacturing plants, for small stores of all kinds.

On the First and Third Tuesdays of each month you can make a trip to OKLAHOMA exceptionally cheap. Round trip tickets good thirty—30—days will be sold by all lines in connection with the M. K. & T. Ry. at very low rates. From Chicago to Oklahoma City the rate is $24.55; from St. Paul, $26.25; from St. Louis, $18.30; from Kansas City, $12.25. The tickets permit of stop-overs in both directions via M. K. & T. Ry. If your nearest railroad agent cannot give you the rates, write me for particulars.

A New Idea.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

The preacher, in the book of Ecclesiastes, says: "There is no new thing under the sun." Perhaps the preacher was talking about real things and not chimeras, about facts and not fiction. For surely a preacher in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of recent date has given to the world a new idea that a man may have a Christian character and not be a Christian. I have long thought that there was a popular delusion abroad in ecclesiastical circles that a man may be a Christian and not have a Christian character. The way many church members live leads to that conclusion. But that a man can have a Christian character and yet not be a Christian, when it is that very thing that makes him a Christian, is a brand new idea. I have wondered whether such a piece of fancy was ever entertained by any human being before. It may be, but in all my travels in the realm of religious literature I have never met with the vagary.

That a man may have a Christian character and not be a perfect Christian, I can easily believe. We are all incomplete in some respects. Who understands Christianity thoroughly, and who complies perfectly with each and every item of its doctrine and its life?

I frequently meet an old soldier minus an arm or a leg. Does this defect outlaw him as a man, or as a citizen, or a patriot?

If incompleteness outlaws a man as a Christian, then we are all undone.

The same reasoning applies to churches. Is a church not a Christian church because it is not in complete accord with the New Testament model or ideal of a church of Christ? If so, then there is no ecclesiastical body on earth to-day that can be called the Christian church or a Christian church. They are all outlawed, all undone.

The Pope of Rome with his claims to infallibility in his interpretations of Scripture is not without his rivals even among Protestants. A. B. JONES.

ROBERTSON.

The faithful wife of R. S. Robertson, who is now pastor of the Christian Church at Osborn, Kan., departed this life September 26, 1906. She was a good mother and faithful servant of Christ to the end. By her teaching and influence in the home she helped to lead her entire family of seven children into the kingdom of Christ. Funeral services were held at Jewell City, where the remains were laid to rest. E. A. CHANNER.

WELLS.

Mrs. Jane E. Wells, wife of the late Levi Wells, of Pompey, N. Y., passed away at the "Hill Top" House in that village September 18. Her sterling qualities of character, combined with a bright and sunny temperament, gave her an interesting and attractive personality, which greatly endeared her to her friends. She went to Pompey from her home in Syracuse, N. Y., for her usual summer outing on August 1. Soon after her arrival she sustained a fracture of the hip, which, while it may not have been the immediate cause of her death, hastened it. Her funeral services were held at the Church of Christ in Pompey September 21. She leaves two sisters—Mrs. Cordelia A. Blinn and Mrs. Adaline S. Rockwell, of 111 Merriman avenue, Syracuse, N. Y.

ARMSTRONG.

Elizabeth Dustin Armstrong, nee Holton, was born at Lincoln, Ill., April 3, 1875, and died at Springfield, Ill., September 3, 1906. On March 15, 1905, she was married to W. H. Armstrong, who grieves at her early departure. She was the youngest of six children born to T. T. and Ellen C. Holton. Besides her parents and husband, she is survived by one brother, Campbell Holton, Bloomington, Ill.; Helen Lucas, Osawatomie, Kan.; Pauline Evans, Elkhart, Ill.; Anna McConnell, Lincoln, Ill., and Mary Rue, Tallula, Ill. When she was twelve years old she made the good confession under the preaching of L. M. Robinson, and was baptized by her father. She was a faithful Christian and a beautiful spirit. Her funeral was held at the home of her brother in Bloomington, and her body was laid to rest in the cemetery there.

Lincoln, Ill. W. H. CANNON.

TANNER.

James Washington Tanner, son of Joseph and Malinda Tanner, was born October 23, 1835, near Eagle Village, Ind., and died at his home in Stilwell, Ill., September 8, 1906. In 1854 he was married to Elizabeth Weer, and had one son, Francis E. Tanner, of Stilwell. In 1855 he moved to Hancock county, Ill. In 1859 death removed his chosen companion. He was married to Ary J. Short December 19, 1861. Of this union were born five children—Arlie L., Martha L., Everett E., Ada F. and Herbert J.—four of whom survive, Arlie L. having died in 1866.

He served one year in the Civil War. He united with the Christian Church in 1856, and served as elder of the Stilwell congregation for over thirty years. His life has been one of earnest devotion to the cause of his Master. In addition to his many friends, he leaves a large number of relatives, almost all of whom are following in his footsteps, as he followed in the footsteps of Christ.

REYNOLDS.

In the death of Sister Elizabeth Stanley Reynolds the Hamilton Ave. Christian church of St. Louis, records its first loss this year, and the family mourns the departure of a devoted Christian mother. Sister Reynolds, whose maiden name was Milton, was born August 23, 1832, and died August 24, 1906, aged 74 years and 1 day. She was married to Mitchell Reynolds at Chaplin, Nelson county, Ky., in 1852, and one year later moved to Union county, Ky., where in 1866 her husband died. In 1867 she united with the Christian church at Old Cyprus, Union county, Ky. She was the mother of four children—two sons, J. M. and G. P. Reynolds, both dead, and two daughters, Mrs. Alice Taylor, of Bardwell, Ky., and Mrs. Anice R. Davis, of this city, with whom she was living at the time of her death. Dying in the triumphs of a beautiful faith which characterized her entire life, we may say all is well.

L. W. MCCREARY.

NAYLOR.

Samuel Grafton Naylor, son of Joseph R. and Hester C. Naylor, was born in Brooke county, W. Va., March 13, 1841, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Frank W. Donaldson, West Alexander, Pa., on the morning of July 26. He was married to Addie C. Melvin in 1862, Charles Louis Loos officiating. Six children were born to this union. A son, three daughters and Mrs. Naylor are still living. Brother Naylor's Christian activities cover a little more than half a century. Bro. W. T. Moore, who was so long in London, England, immersed him when he was 13 years of age. He engaged in teaching at Wellsburg, W. Va., and at Wheeling, and later engaged in mercantile pursuits for a period of nearly thirty years. At 53 years of age Brother Naylor entered the ministry, and held three successful pastorates. He spent two years at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and three or four years at Frankfort, Ind. At the latter place his health failed, and in 1899 he returned to Wheeling. A little later he accepted a call to the Wheeling Island Church, where he ministered efficiently through a period of eighteen months, and was actively associated with them as elder until called to his reward. While these later years were spent in business, he never ceased to be a minister and a leader. He was a Christian gentleman always—tender, affectionate and true. His life was made luminous by the true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. It was the writer's privilege to minister to the Island Church during his active work, and the attachments then formed were inexpressibly tender. On July 29 I was called to comfort the bereft wife and children and to perform the sad rites at the burial of this noble man. I have waited, thinking that some one might make this report whose acquaintance with Brother Naylor was more extensive than mine. This will excuse its late appearance.

A Goin' Home From Singin'.

BY A KENTUCKY MOUNTAIN BOY.

We walked across the paster field
  A-goin' home from singin'.
The good, old, solemn meetin' tunes
  In both our ears a-ringin'.

The moon a-hangin' on his end,
  He lengthened out our shadders,
While now and then a bull-frog's note
  Was fetched across the medders.

The calico that wrapped her form,
  The lace that trimmed her bonnet—
I loved it, every thread and stitch,
  An' every button on it,

I wished that I'd a been the grass
  The dew was beddin' over,
So I could kiss her pretty feet,
  As she walked through the clover.

We'd nearly got across the field
  When, what should we diskiver,
But Bates's bull, a raisin' sand,
  Like death was in his liver.

She jumped; I caught her in my arms
  For fear the brute 'ud harm her.
I wish this world was full of bulls
  On every side and corner.

PART IV.

CHAPTER I.

Now that Raymund had graduated at Columbia, and Rhoda at Fulton, it seemd to them that their lives had opened a new chapter, which must contain experiences, emotions and thoughts entirely distinct from those of the past. There was, indeed, one element running throughout their memories that bound all together in a perfect unity—their poverty. But it seemed the only thing that had remained the same. Once Raymund would have supposed that the love between him and Rhoda would be the only changeless thing in their experience. But he had been mistaken. If Rhoda loved him as she had formerly, he could not see any evidence of it. She was reserved, quiet, uncommunicative in his presence, and at times even cold. The most distressing part about it to Raymund was that Rhoda persisted she had not changed; that he had never offended her; that she was as interested in his career as she had ever been. But he knew she was hiding a secret, a secret which made her treat him at times almost as if he were a stranger.

This summer of their nineteenth year was spent, just as their vacations had been, at Brother Bellfield's. Raymund had saved just fifty dollars over and above his expenses at the university—fifty dollars made by cleaning the clothes of the more prosperous students. During this summer he worked at whatever he could get to do. He came back to Frog Bend after the strawberry season, so he missed that chance to increase his store. But farm hands were scarce in the neighborhood, and he secured engagements of several weeks' duration on different farms, till the "busy time" at those particular farms was over. He spent Saturday night and all of Sunday at Brother Bellfield's, but he never returned to work on Sunday night after services at the church without a heartache over Rhoda's demeanor. One Sunday morning in August he stood with her on the minister's porch, about to start to Sunday-school, but delayed by Jasper Bellfield's wife, who had expressed a desire to go with them. Mrs. Jasper was never able to make herself ready on time, no matter what that time was. Perhaps the climate was to blame. This August it chanced that both Jasper and Morton and their numerous children, as well as Jasper's mother-in-law, were all staying with the minister, who slept on the parlor floor with Raymund. As the young people waited for the dilatory lady Raymund earnestly expressed a regret that he was unable to pay off any of his mother's debts in Crawley. "I am nineteen," he said, "and yet not one cent has been paid Mr. Walker or Mr. Jennings, or any of the others."

"You have done well," said Rhoda, gazing toward the river, "to get a university education and have fifty dollars left over. I think very few young men could have done that." The river, as seen from the minister's house was beautiful. It swept around the point upon which the town was built, forming a graceful arc, much too pretty to have been named after frogs. But pretty as it was, Raymund was discontented. Why did Rhoda no longer look at him when she talked? She used to gaze so delightfully into his blue eyes, while her own blue eyes shone with such eager light. And Raymund could not help but reflect that of the $150 given Rhoda by their Uncle William, never had he seen a cent of it, or been told a word about its disposition. He looked at the river and frowned at it. As they still waited for Mrs. Jasper Bellfield, a short, fleshy man came hurriedly from across the street. It was Mr. Willby.

"News for you, Rhoda," he cried, excitedly. "Saw all the Board of the Prairie Schoolhouse a few minutes ago. The whole gang was in a big wagon, starting off to church. I boarded the wagon and rode with them about half a mile. The upshot of it is that you are to have the Prairie school at forty dollars a month. Hold on!—there's a condition—you've got to stay at my house; do you hear? This Bellfield man is always crowded to the gunwales with company; never any room for you here."

Rhoda was greatly excited. "Oh, my first school!" she cried. "My first school! Forty dollars a month! Three hundred and sixty dollars a year! Think of making that much with my own poor head! Raymund, why don't you congratulate me?"

"It's splendid," said Raymund, "and I'm not a bit jealous, Rhoda." He put his arm about her and drew her to him. He would have kissed her, but she drew away, laughing and blushing.

"This is too public!" she declared. "O, Mr. Willby!" And she grasped both his hands. "But that Board couldn't ever have made a condition of my staying with you. Why should they care where I stay? You know I sleep with Brother Bellfield's invalid sister, and somehow she thinks I am the only one she can sleep with. Nobody else will humor her little ways."

"I'll tell you how it is, Mr. Willby," said Raymund. "After they've gone to bed Miss Bellfield pulls the lamp up to her side and reads aloud the morsels she's been saving up during the day. Think of Rhoda going through that after teaching all day!"

"But it is such a comfort to her," said Rhoda, "and I can go off to sleep."

"No," Mr. Willby declared, positively. "I'll not have it. I've stood it this long because I knew she needed a sympathetic listener. But if you teach school you've got to take care of your nerves. I have thought it all out. I'll come over here every afternoon and sit and let old Miss Bellfield read to me. That will do the business for her. And I want you to know," he added, fiercely, "that my wife needs cheering up, too! Since our boy died she's never known such comfort as comes from your visits. You'll stay right in our house. I'll drive you to the schoolhouse every morning; it's two miles in the country. How'll you get there without me? I'll not take you unless you stay with us!" He snapped his finger. "That for old Miss Bellfield! If she don't want to read aloud to me, let her go dry!"

One afternoon, some two or three weeks later, Raymund and Jack Bellfield were roaming through the woods that looked down upon the Missouri. They had undertaken the exploration at Jack's request. He was full of his plans of going to the University Medical at Kansas City, the next October, to fit himself to become a physician. As he poured out his hopes and plans, with his accustomed gay vivacity, Raymund tried to enter into his enthusiasm. But all the time he was oppressed by wondering if Jack was the cause of Rhoda's change. Perhaps the two were sweethearts; but if so, why did not Rhoda tell him, and why did not Jack? The mystery was a heavy weight upon his heart. Jack Bellfield went back to Columbia days, reminding Raymund of various adventures which Raymund had witnessed only from the outskirts—adventures of which Jack had formed the center of the whirlwind. The minister's son could not but observe Raymund's silence and despodency, and it occurred to him that Raymund, too, longed for an opening where he might exert his mental powers. He suggested that when he had gone to Kansas City he might find a situation for his friend. It was late when the two returned to Frog Bend. The sun was setting, and its mellow glow softened the water and gilded the shores. As they approached Brother Bellfield's they saw the relatives standing about the porch, or perching upon its balustrades. The center of interest was a stranger, who had come during the absence of the young men.

"Just came from the train," said Mr. Willby, who was waiting at his gate for Raymund to come up with Jack. "I'll go over with you, and see what new company the preacher's got aboard now." Charged with curiosity, Mr. Willby crossed the road with them. The newcomer was a little lady with fast-whitening hair. She had a peach complexion, which made her look younger than she was, and bright, alert eyes. Although a stranger to the Bellfields, she was entertaining them greatly to the enjoyment of the minister's ten grandchildren (there were now ten), and even causing at times the fleshy and flabby Mrs. Jasper to rise to the exertion of a smile.

"Oh," cried Raymund, suddenly hurry-ing his pace, "it is Mrs. De Fer!" He rushed upon the porch and bent over the little French lady.

"Don't you dare kiss me!" cried the lady, drawing back her little white head. But when Raymund, in sudden doubt, paused, she kissed him herself. "O, what a big boy!" she cried. "I have come for you. Go pack your trunk."

"How?" asked Raymund, bewildered. "Go where?"

"Kansas City. No time to lose. Tell all adieu."

Rhoda smiled at Raymund from a distant end of the porch. "Mrs. De Fer has a position for you," she said, proudly. "O Raymund! we will start together!"

Raymund cast a quick glance at Jack to discover if he and Rhoda were together in the conspiracy. But Jack was dumb with surprise, and could only stare at the white-haired French lady.

"Yes," said Mrs. De Fer, "one such good position. I was engaged as a governess to two young fellows, of age nine and fourteen, with parents very rich and grand. I staid but a month—yes! Then I have to do something else. The parents are very kind, they say whoever I recommend shall have the tutoring of the ignorants—oh, so ignorant, but very, very rich! So I apply to my friend the French professor of Columbia University. He says there is one young man so diligent and so recommended by all the teachers for being thorough, and one needing a place. And when I see your name and address I remember our days on the Omer farm, and I cry. But, yes, yes, I will go and see if it is my Raymund! So I talk to Mr. Bellfield here, who says, oh, such dear things about you, and I hear what your sister says. And now I see you. Pack your trunk, Raymund, at once; do not delay at all! For it is sixty dollars a month, and you have still a great deal of time of your own to come and go. So you like the thing I have done, is it not? And you will go, is it not? And you are pleased with your Mrs. De Fer, is it not, Raymund?"

ALL WILL WANT

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.

Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break.

SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.

THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.

FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

"I am so pleased!" cried Raymund, again grasping both her hands.

"Mrs. De Fer," cried Mr. Willby, quite ecstatic over Raymund's opportunity, "how old are you, madam?"

"Ah, ah," cried Mrs. De Fer, smiling, "I do not tell my age, kind sir. That is knowledge which I find too useful to give away."

As she seemed a little embarrassed, Jack came to the rescue by saying: "Mrs. De Fer, do you ever think of the time we took our refreshments in the dining-room-in-the-air?"

The French lady burst forth into a shower of silvery peals. "And Nelsie Loraine," she cried, "she was almost taking the yellow and green candy, when—ah! ah!—the entire table disappeared! By the way," she added, suddenly, "Nelsie Loraine has returned from Europe sooner than she intended. I suppose she found a protracted education too much of ennui. They are all in Kansas City for the year, till the lease on the farm will have expired."

Rhoda suddenly took an interest in the conversation. "She is in Kansas City?" she repeated, with a startled look.

Mr. Willby again came to the front. "Mrs. De Fer, if you don't mind telling something else, since it seems that your age is such a secret, why have you given up the care of these two young ignorant rich fellows, age nine and fourteen?"

"Ah," said Mrs. De Fer, "you ask questions that probe to the heart, kind sir. But you would learn sooner or later, so I tell you that I am to be married."

"Married, madam?" cried Mr. Willby, "and to whom, if you please?"

"To the French professor of the university," said Mrs. De Fer, blushing and looking younger than ever.

"How old is he?" demanded Mr. Willby.

Slipping the Cable.

I stood on the wharf at Genoa, watching a great steamer casting itself loose from the pier for its flight across the Atlantic. Dear friends were on the ship, and I was seeing them off on their homeward voyage.

The ten-thousand-ton liner was surrounded by many craft, large and small; and it seemed impossible for her to get free from them and make her way through the narrow and tortuous channel which led from the inner harbor to the open sea.

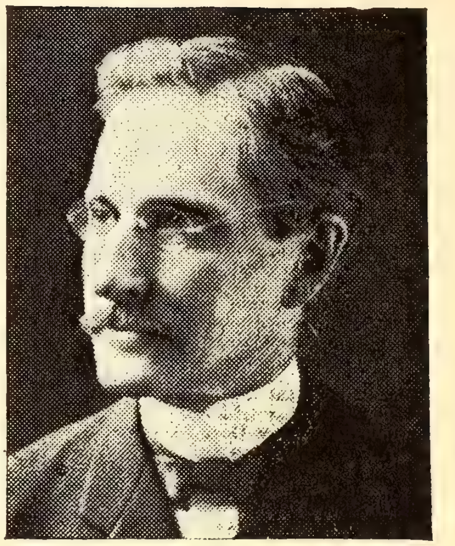
By enormous cables she was tied to the pier, and I soon saw that inch by inch these cables were being loosened and she was getting free.

Almost imperceptible was her progress at first. For fifteen minutes she seemed scarcely to gain a yard, and I could tell that she moved at all only by comparing one of her masts with a flagstaff on the shore.

But move she did; little by little, an inch at a time, the cables that bound her to the shore were lengthening, and the open water beneath her stern and the pier was increasing.

After half an hour, perhaps, the cables were cast off altogether; and cautiously and very, very slowly, under her own steam, she began to feel her way among the many craft which crowded her on all sides.

At length she reached the comparatively open channel; my friends' faces on the upper deck, and their fluttering handkerchiefs, became more and more indistinct, until at last they were a mere blur, as I suppose my face was to them. At last, under full steam, and, seemingly, with a glad bound, the noble ship pushed out into the open bay and was lost to sight.



REV. J. W. BLOSSER, M. D.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., is Meeting with Wonderful Success.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walnut St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package and an illustrated book.

So it is with the Christian man when the time of his departure is at hand. Gradually his cables slip. Little by little the things of sense and time come to have less and less hold on him. Inch by inch the space widens between his soul and business, his cares, his anxieties, his passions, his fears. One by one the surrounding craft which have long kept him company fall away from him, or he moves from them.

Death is usually no sudden wrench, no swift setting sail at full speed for the unknown shore, but by a process most gradual and kindly is the good man prepared for the great change.

He is "ready to be offered." His cables at last are cast off from all earthly things; the faces of dear friends grow dim and disappear; and at last with a glad bound his prow points to the open sea of eternity, and he launches out upon it boldly, knowing that it does not connect him with the other shore and bring him to the home port—"to depart and be with Christ is far better."—*Francis E. A Lay Sermon to Fathers.

Vacation has taught fathers and sons a good many lessons, but none more startling than the fact that boys grow up. And what is stranger, your boy is growing up. Some day he will be a man; some day he will be where you are, and life will have pushed off on him the responsibilities you bear to-day.

And yet—God forgive us!—too many of us fathers are trusting schools and clubs and haphazard circumstances to fit our boys for this inevitable usurpation. We are too busy to give them the companionship we owe them; too tired and irritable to read the promise of strength in their restlessness; too indifferent to their unspoken hopes to share in and shape their ambitions. Life and work close in upon us and we forget that they and not we ourselves are to be our successors.

We have not yet reached the blear-eyed Utopia in which parents breed children and society brings them up. Despite the polygamy and polyandry of the divorce courts we are still a nation of parents and children. And just because we are thus settled in families, fathers and mothers ought to be friends of their children. The more complicated our social life becomes, the more imperative does this duty and—as all sermons say—this privilege become. It is not merely that such friendships make parents better parents and children better men and women; they will make more gentle that approaching usurpation which for a moment startled us when we saw our boys could run almost as fast as we, and could plan almost as wisely and as vigorously as we. For we shall surrender to friends.

Schools and school teachers are no substitutes for fathers and mothers. The winter has its opportunities just as truly as has the summer. And the home can have its friendships for Father and Boy just as truly as have the trail and the camp and the farm. Happy is the Boy who knows this. And happier still is the father.—The World To-Day.

The leaf-fall only becomes possible after a long preparation on the part of the tree, which forms a peculiar layer of cells in each leaf stem called the cleavage plate.

This cleavage plate, or separation layer, consists of a section of loosely attached, thin-walled cells with a few strands of stronger woody fiber in among them; so, in the early autumn, although the leaves appear as firmly attached as ever before, they are really only held on the tree by these few woody strands and the outer brittle skin or epidermis of the stem. Now only a slight shock or wind flurry is sufficient to break the fragile support and bring the leaves in showers to the ground. We may see these woody strands broken through the leaf-scar of the horse-chestnut, where they appear as little rounded projections on the broken surface and are often spoken of from their fancied resemblance to the nails of a horseshoe. The hickory and ash among other trees have similar markings on their leaf-scars and from the same cause. On the root of the wild sarsaparilla which projects just above the ground a like series of little projections will be seen upon the ring-like scar which surrounds the bud where the leaf-stalk has just separated.

Often the leaves separate and fall even on the quietest days, for their own weight is sufficient to break the frail support. These hushed and supremely tranquil days we all remember, when our October walks are accompanied by the soft, small sounds of falling leaves, by the rustlings and dry whisperings of their showering multitudes.—From "Nature and Science," in St. Nicholas.

When Mark Twain Was Reported as Dying.

This reminds me—nine years ago, when we were living in Tedworth Square, London, a report was cabled to the American journals that I was dying. I was not the one. It was another Clemens, a cousin of mine—Dr. J. Ross Clemens, now of St. Louis—who was due to die but presently escaped by some chicanery or other characteristic of the tribe of Clemens. The London representatives of the American papers began to flock in, with American cables in their hands, to inquire into my condition. There was nothing the matter with me, and each in his turn was astonished, and disappointed, to find me reading and smoking in my study and worth next to nothing as a text for transatlantic news. One of these men was a gentle and kindly and grave and sympathetic Irishman, who hid his sorrow the best he could, and tried to look glad, and told

54,600 Meals
Did Him No Good.

How One Wasted 50 Years of His Life. Thousands Like Him.

"What's the use of eatin', anyhow?" said the scrawny dyspeptic to his rotund, prosperous-looking friend. "Here I've been eatin' three times a day, and sometimes twice a day, for 50 years, and look at me. I'm rawboned and skinny, still at the bottom of the ladder, sour on the world, and a pessimist. I know it, and I can't help it. If I had it to do over again, though, I would take care of my stomach, for I don't believe I ever really relished a meal in my life, not even mother's Christmas dinners, and I firmly believe that my way of eating, or whatever it was, brought along with it darkness and impossibility of success."

"You're right," nodded his companion. "Of course, that isn't always the case. But in this age we must not only 'Trust in the Lord and keep our powder dry,' but we must swallow sunshine with our food. Cheerfulness, especially while eating, which is the most essential act of man, is as necessary to him as sunshine is to the flowers. Nothing normal can be produced in darkness.

"But this is what you haven't been doing, Mr. Dyspeptic. Your brain and your stomach, remember, are twins, and you have to treat them accordingly. Why not start now and repair the damage you've done? It is never too late, you know."

"You mean at my age? And suppose you can't always get the sunshine?"

"Absolutely, yes. Science has made it possible to get the sunshine, the health and the strength that your stomach needs, all put up together in little tablets. They call them Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, the most effective tablets in the world for this very thing. One ingredient in these tablets digests 3,000 grains of food without the help of the stomach. Two tablets after each meal can do more work, quicker work and better work, in digesting a heavy meal, than the stomach can itself. The stomach need not work at all. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets does all the work, and gives your jaded stomach a rest, the rest it needs. Meanwhile you cure yourself of brash, irritation, burning sensation, heartburn, sour stomach, acidity, fermentation, bloat, and the worst cases of dyspepsia and indigestion. You get rid of these for all time. And then, besides, you can eat all you want and whenever you want, and you will also relish mother's Christmas dinners if you will take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets after eating. That's the sunshine I was talking about. Then your face will reflect the internal change going on, you'll be more energetic, your mind will be clearer, you will have more confidence in yourself, you'll be happier, and you'll be yourself again.

"Your heart will change and you'll feel rosy. You'll enjoy your meals—and live. Let's walk down to the drug store and let me introduce you to one little package of the Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. You can get them at any drug store in the world for only 50c a package. It is worth it, Mr. Dyspeptic."

me that his paper, the "Evening Sun," had cabled him that it was reported in New York that I was dead. What should he cable in reply? I said—

"Say the report is greatly exaggerated."

He never smiled but went solemnly away and sent the cable in those words. The remark hit the world pleasantly, and to this day it keeps turning up, now and then, in the newspapers when people have occasion to discount exaggerations.

The next man was also an Irishman. He had his New York cablegram in his hand—from the "New York World"—and he was so evidently trying to get around that cable with invented softness and palliations that my curiosity was aroused and I wanted to see what it did really say. So when occasion offered I slipped it out of his hand. It said,

"If Mark Twain dying send five hundred words. If dead send a thousand."

Now that old letter of mine sold yesterday for forty-three dollars. When I am dead it will be worth eighty-six.—From Mark Twain's Autobiography in The North American Review.

"The Rebel Sigh."

BY GRACE WILLIS.

Two young women in tawdry dressing sacques were lounging in rocking chairs reading the Sunday morning paper and discussing the fashion page in loud tones.

Stephanie Southam turned away from the boarding house parlor in disgust. There was no Sabbath-like atmosphere there, certainly! She retraced her steps, reaching her own room at the top of the stairs, and sat down, discouraged, in the stiff little rocker, contemplating the view from her one window with homesick eyes.

A dingy, three-story boarding house across the street, with soot-laden, ragged lace curtains at the windows, confronted her. A chilly rain pattered on the tin roof of the porch just outside her window. She turned away.

Just then a cold draft and a whiff of tobacco smoke came in from the hall below; some one was standing too long at the open front door. She closed her own door—she could at least shut herself in to her own company—when the sudden, loud jangle of a popular tune played on the piano in the parlor jarred upon her ears. That was too much! A girl brought up in a Christian home, as she had been, with all its sweet, helpful, refining influences, had a right to better things, even though obliged to leave that home and work in a strange city. It seemed quite unjust to her. Why had it so happened, anyway, that she had to leave that dear home! She felt just a little as if Providence had been neglectful. Those who had known no better might wish for no better, but she— It was too hard.

She must get away from this atmosphere, even though it took her out in the rain. There was a vesper service for girls and women not many blocks away, to which she occasionally went, and thither she turned her steps.

Only two or three had gathered. Even the pleasant room seemed gloomy, with the rain beating against the windows, and the spirit of discontent seemed to have taken possession of Stephanie.

Others came in, shook out their damp coats, and sat down quietly.

The leader was one of those wise, strong women who knew how out-of-sorts girls feel when they are homesick, and in a cheery voice she announced the hymns, and kept them singing for some minutes.

Through the blessed influence of Christian song, Stephanie's heart softened. After all, her lot was not so hard.

Sweetly the girlish voices sang:

"Spirit of God, descend upon my heart:
 Win it from earth; through all its pulses move;
Stoop to my weakness, mighty as Thou art,
 And make me love Thee as I ought to love."

Stephanie's heart was getting in tune once more.

"Teach me to feel that Thou art always nigh;
 Teach me the struggles of the soul to bear,
To check the rising doubt—"

Ah, she scorned to doubt; she whose father had been a pillar in the church, and his father before; whose mother was a saint. Doubt? She who had generations of stanch Christianity back of her? Ah, never!

"To check the rising doubt, the rebel sigh."

The remainder of the song she did not hear. Her sighing and complaining had been rebellion against God. The pity of it! God, who was so good to her, so full of tender compassion, who had so led her all her days—and now even, in a strange, lonely city, when full of murmuring, had led her to this place, this quiet place where he was. Ah, thank God!

The meeting outwardly was but a commonplace one. There were no great manifestations, no wonderful experiences related, but one girl, at least, went away with new courage, new strength, and a determination to "check the rebel sigh" which was eating away the joy of her Christian life like a canker worm.

With such thoughts, it was not strange that the girls in the boarding house parlor looked at her shining face as she passed the open door, and asked, wonderingly, "Where've you been?"

She saw the shabby parlor and the loud-voiced, thoughtless girls with new eyes. Here was something for her to do. Why should she complain against the surroundings when she did nothing to better them? The days to come should be full; she would no longer sit and complain.

She thanked God that night, though the cold rain still pattered on the tin roof, for the place in which her lot had been cast, and most of all that her eyes had been opened to the blessed privileges awaiting her.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

What is the Advance Society? That is what the new readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are asking. Thousands of you know; but perhaps none of you are acquainted with the real beginning of this society. I will tell you about it. When I was a little boy, ever and ever so long ago, I was very fond of reading stories; so fond, in fact, that I cared for no other kind of reading. But when I got to be as old as fourteen, I saw something must be done about it, if ever I amounted to anything in the world; and somehow I never doubted but what I should amount to a whole lot, a ten-acre lot, as least. So I said to myself, "Let's start a society that will make every member read solid stuff each week." So I did, and called it the "Advance Society." I was every member there was in it. Sort of lonesome work, sometimes. But every Sunday or the next day, I would write a report of what I had done—a report which nobody ever saw but myself. Some satisfaction just in looking at it, you know. And because I was the only one in it, sometimes interest would flag and the reports would cease. But the next year I would start up the organization with renewed enthusiasm. You see I knew I could never develop my mind unless it had a lot of history and poetry, etc., on board. Here is a report from my seventeenth year: "Read Romeo and Juliet, and began King Lear; resumed third volume of Hume; read Irving's Washington, and finished it in the front yard; began book of Romans, week September 18-25." Here's one from the next year: "Prescott's 'Ferdinand and Isabella,' 5 pp.; 'Boswell's Johnson,' 103 pp.; Latin, 96 lines; botany, 11 pp.; Whittier, 4 poems; Kant, 2 chapters; Bible every day." The next year, the Advance Society was still doing business, thus, a week in the vacation of June: Greek, 4 hours' study; Addison's "Spectator," 3 hours' reading; Cook on "Transcendentalism" (goodness); Lowell's essay on "Dryden" (that was fine); Palmer's "Anthologue" (splendid music in that); "Othello," act 1. New Testament each morning before breakfast.

I noticed as I grew older, how people are, about the kind of books they read. They want novels. Somehow novels never get to them so like one another that they lose their taste. And you can't lend them a history or poem; they laugh when you make such a suggestion. Their brains are stunted because they didn't exercise enough when they were young. So I thought I would try to extend my Advance Society. It had done me good; I wanted it to help others. It was seven years ago, and in this time of the year, that I told about the Advance Society in this very paper. I proposed five simple rules. You were to read five pages of history, not one taught in your school, every week; thirty lines of poetry not in your schoolbooks; at least one Bible verse daily. Then, you were to memorize a quotation from a standard author each week. Lastly, you were to keep an account of your work in a notebook, and send me a report every twelve weeks. Twelve weeks make one quarter. Well, the young people and the old, liked the idea, and thousands responded. I do not know how many thousands, from New York to California, and from California, and from England and British America to South America and Japan. I wonder what that little boy would have thought, as he sat in his front yard in the bluegrass—for it was not Arkansas—with Irving's "Washington" upon his knee, if he could have known I should be telling on him one day to so many thousands? So that's how the Advance Society started, and that is what it is.

But that isn't all. We were not satisfied simply to improve ourselves; we wanted to help others. We have raised an orphan fund and a mission fund, and another fund which I have not told you about. The orphan fund simply means that children from all over the world are banded together to try to educate an orphan boy, who, having only one leg, needs help until his education is acquired. With the mission fund, we help support a young girl in China who is not supported by any missionary board. And the little boy or girl who sends me a dime for Charlie and Drusie, has as much right to feel that he is a factor in this great work as the man or woman who strains a point and sends a quarter. But we have a third fund of which I will say just a word. Occasionally (not often, alas!) some one sends me some money, say 20 cents or 15, and once $5 with the request that I use it in the way I think it will do most good. Usually I divide such sums between Charlie and Drusie, equally. But sometimes I take it for some great and pressing need that I happen to know of (and I happen to know of so many!); now, some of the work I am able to do with this third fund, is not of the kind that ought to be mentioned in public, for to mention it would be to rob it of all grace. But I am sure you are satisfied or you wouldn't entrust the spending of that money to me; and I am sure I am satisfied, except that there isn't enough of it to go very far!

The ice cream supper given for orphan Charlie is still bringing in returns. In my last report, we had $138.15. If I had needed a text for the opening of this article, the following from Bertha Beesley of Moselle, Mo., would have illustrated every point, namely, the mind-culture and the giving; "Tardy again. My report should have been sent in last month." (But she sends it now; and it is her thirty-first quarter!) "Also you will find inclosed $4 for Drusie and Charlie, equally. Mamma and I pledged ourselves to give $5 for both Charlie and Drusie this year, but we are beating that; this finishes Charlie's $5, and makes $6.50 for Drusie. And the year hasn't gone yet. I wish I could step over with a basket of apples and have an hour's chat with you." (How I wish you could! the good kind of apples that we ship from here but never have for ourselves.) "I am very much interested in 'Bronze Vase.' The children's page and Drusie's letters are a source of great delight to me. I am committing 'The Crown of Other Halves' from 'Bronze Vase,' to memory this week." Mrs. J. R. Goodwin, Abilene, Kan. "I do love ice cream, but if I am too late for the social, perhaps I can have four oyster stews; they are just as good, so here is $1. And may you just continue having socials! May God bless Charlie. If you will suggest a good book for Drusie, I will have you send her one." (Any by Susan B. Warner. I have read Wych Hazel at least a dozen times.) Mrs. S. B. Gibbons, Garfield, Wash.: "While visiting in the east, that is, Missouri (I trust Missouri is listening and appreciates the compliment), "I saw about your ice cream social for Charlie, August 3; but, being called home unexpectedly, I forgot all about it. Visiting a friend, Sunday, I picked up THE EVANGELIST and turned to the Advance Society page as is my wont to see what the Advance Society was doing, and, O my! what an ice cream social they have been having! And as I was very warm, my mouth got dry for a dish of that ice cream. There were three others present and I suggested that each of us take a dish. We send 40 cents and our names. May God bless and prosper the Advance Society." (The reader will please note one word in Mrs. Gibbon's welcome letter; she looked over at the Advance Society page to see what we were doing. And I am proud to say that not one soul was urged to come to Charlie's social. Nobody was scolded or plead with. If they didn't want to come, they didn't; and a good many didn't, I'll say that for them; but look how many did! Emma Schrimsher, Brock, Neb.: "The Charter Oak Church of Christ is a country church five miles from Brock; and the Charter Oak Sunday-school sends, as a little offering, $2 for Charlie's educational fund. We wish Charlie much profit and enjoyment in his school work. May he ever remember his creator." Mrs. Joel M. Fisher, Caldwell, Idaho: "We inclose 50 cents for five dishes of Charlie's ice cream. We were glad to see your social a grand success." Mrs. Smith, Denver, Col.: "I send $1 for our dear boy Charlie. The Lord has blessed this novel way of doing good. I have read the Advance Society page for many years, and would have joined myself, but since I have been a grandmother, I have lost the ability to memorize as I once did." Mrs. Edith Slightam, Spokane, Wash., who sent me the cat picture not long since: "I am sending $1 for our missionary Drusie, the last for 1906; but I will not forget to come next year." J. D. Dillard (who is the Missouri collector for our orphan's home), St. Louis, Mo.: "On September 16, I spoke in Grandin, in the Congregational church—we have no members in the town. The minister was exceedingly kind to me. The congregation contributed $22.76 for the orphans' home, and the Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society contributed $5 for Charlie's educational fund. Inclosed you will find the $5 for Charlie." Does it not warm your heart to think of these young people of the Congregational church at Grandin, Mo., taking such a strong hand in helping our orphan along? But I know you would like to hear from our orphan boy, for he has not said a word to you since his vacation trip. Charlie, St. Louis, July 29: "I am having a nice time here now with my sister. I have made two windmills. I just love to whittle. I buried that old dime that you saw—the one that was bent—under the bark of an old apple tree. The bark is green and I thing will grow over it. I am going to leave it there and if I get to come back to see Bessie next summer, I will see if it is still there." September 6: "I had no accidents coming back to St. Louis. The schools of Missouri teach vertical writing, but I like Spencerian best. Which would you advise me to take up." (Anything rather than the vertical system.) "I study grammar, geography, spelling, arithmetic, writing, reading. I just had a lovely vacation. My crutches are about four inches too short. Mrs. Skinner said she sent some money to you to get a new pair with the tops padded." September 15: "When you look at this don't say, I wish he would get tired of writing. It is simply another bill. Crutches and tips cost $2.10 and the carfare was 15 cents. I would like to hear from you. Now, if you are thinking of going out to Tennis Park, or some place else, you must stop and write me a letter." September 24: "I received your letter which inclosed $5.50. The money matters are now all arranged, as this settles for the money Mrs. Hansbrough advanced on my railroad ticket. She hopes the ice cream social will be an annual affair until I am capable of supporting myself. My teacher is Miss Mary Griffetts, Kimberlin Heights College, Tenn., was named after her grandfather. I go to school here in the Orphans' Home. I would go to public school were it not for contagious diseases which frequently break out here in the home. I would lots rather go to public school. I have a public library ticket and can get any book I want to read. This helps pass what time I am not studying and writing letters. I do various things about the house, such as putting doors on hinges, nailing boards on the fence, etc. I received a nice letter from Mrs. Skinner last week. My sister sent me one of her pictures. Goodby." The matron of the home, Mrs. Bettie R. Brown, St. Louis, writes: "I have thought a good deal about Charlie's future. Charlie would do better at school, if he were out of the home. There is only one other child in the home as far advanced as he. He would have gone to public school before now. but for the feeling in the home against contagious diseases. It will be about two years before Charlie will have grammar education enough to take a business course. If some of the church people are willing to keep him and let him help a little evenings and mornings for his board, he will be able to get along without much expense for the two years. Then you can help him with his business course. Under the circumstances, this is the best that could be done. I would like to hear from the society on this point. Know of anybody who could take Charlie under these conditions? Just at this moment comes the mail with this from Mrs. Brown: "Am sending $5 to be added to Charlie's educational fund; this is given by Mr. J. H. Avery, Hot Springs." That's the way we do things in Arkansas. By the way, should any one ask you hom much our social for Charlie took in, you can tell them $156.55, for such is the case. Look out for our next Advance Society page; it will be a great Missionary Drusie number, just packed and crammed with good things!

blessing can be retained apart from another blessing that preserves the former one. Life must be a continual advancement in the world of possessions. The slothful servant gained no interest. The principal was consumed. He who did gain the interest profited by the slothful man's principal. Our fathers handed us a heritage. We are to preserve it and add the wealth of advancement, or some other people, who do advance, will take our principal.

It is no graft for the mind to seek new territory. Conquest must be the aim. A mortal conflict is waging. The inactive must perish, either by invasion, or as Rome did, by turning on themselves and preying upon their own life.

The mistake is that men do not seem to distinguish between theology and religion. The first is the science of doctrines, and with all other sciences it must of necessity be progressive. Sometimes it comes near the line of true religion, but often it is quite foreign to the religion of the Bible.

True religion is love to God and man. This is not progressive. The reason it seems to be progressive lies in the fact that men who possess it must ever explore for new territory wherein they may plant this principle of life. They must study man and find better ways of applying its benefits to his needs.

Theology is often out of harmony with all other sciences and true religion, but true religion is never out of harmony with true science or the Bible.

Theology searches for truths. True religion searches for worthy objects upon which it may bestow an everlasting principle.

Men think they can not change their views with reference to theology without changing with reference to religion itself. This is a very great mistake.

"Why," then you ask, "is it necessary to pay attention to theology at all?" Because the clearer our theology the greater and better our vision with reference to objects upon which to bestow our religion. If our theology is clouded or deficient our opportunities for practical application of love are limited to that extent.

A man may possess true love in spirit, and yet be dependent upon some revelation of "truth to make him free" in its application with reference to his fellowmen. Would we preserve a true religion? Let us, then, search for and receive the truths, from any source, that will open a way for its advancement among men, in whose souls is the soil of its life.

The Sense of Cheerfulness.

Summing up these elements that enter into the character of the cheerful man I would say: First, the cheerful man owns an abiding faith in the good providence of God; second, he lives so honorably as to enjoy the approval of conscience; third, he abhors selfishness and takes pleasure in kindness; fourth, he is industrious and useful; and, in the last place, he delights in the beautiful, if it is at the same time innocent, and he loves nature for it is the vibrant handiwork of the living God.

I have no doubt that my readers can readily add to this list other elements that should be sought as making up the character of the cheerful individual; but these five, faith, virtue, unselfishness, industry and a love of nature and an appreciation of the beautiful, it seems to me are fundamental. They are the five senses of cheerfulness.—John A. Simpson.

In all things thee to see
And what I do in anything
To do it as for thee.

SPECIAL CENTENNIAL FUND OF $250,000

S. J. COREY, Sec.

For Lands and Buildings on Our Foreign Mission Fields in Personal Gifts by the Centennial, 1909.

We would like to talk to you about the Annuity Plan of the Foreign Society if you are fifty years of age or older. We send you our booklet upon application.

A CENTENNIAL CAMPAIGN BY THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY

There was a prompt and ready response to our appeal last week. More than $1,500 was received in cash and pledges. This is only a start. There is a lively interest. Let it grow. Whatever you do, please do quickly!

VALUE OF MISSION BUILDINGS.

Buildings are concrete Christianity to the people. Hospitals, schools, chapels and homes present a tangible Gospel. We must not ask our missionaries to make bricks without straw. No better equipment can be given than good, airy, modern buildings.

THREE YEAR PLEDGE.

The pledge herewith means three years; that is, to the Centennial, 1909. Fill it out, cut it out, and return to-day! Or send a cash gift.

Please let me hear from you at once. Yours in the best of bonds. F. M. RAINS, Sec., Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

WATCH THIS SPACE NEXT WEEK.

THE PLEDGE.

I agree to donate to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, Ohio, $ .... per year for three years beginning June 1st, 1907, to aid in the creation of a special Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollar ($250,000) Centennial Fund to be used for lands and buildings by the Society.

Getting Ready for Business

Many schools are making arrangements for their winter's work along lines that help for all future work by organizing Normal Classes, and for which is just the help desired. It is in seven parts, as follows:

I. The Book, a general view and analysis of the books of the Bible, with numerous helpful diagrams and review questions.
II. The Christ, has general view of Names, Offices, Symbols, Types, with analytical view of the Prophecies concerning him, and a series of lessons covering his ministry.
III. The Church is considered in all its phases: The Church in Prophecy; The Church in Type; The Church's Name, Head, Foundation, Beginning, Membership, Ministry, Mission, Unity, and Future Glory.
IV. The Land treats of Bible Geography under "The Old Testament Land" and "The New Testament Lands." Has numerous maps and diagrams.
V. The Institutions are given close and careful study in clear and simple style, classified as Patriarchal, Jewish and Christian, definitions of each.
VI. The History gives full and succinct views of the "Chosen People" of Bible Times, as also, the Nations coming into contact with them.
VII. The People includes all those brought into prominence in Bible History and the Nations about them and dealing with them.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

THE CENTENNIAL COMMITTEE.

One of the most interesting reports made to the Buffalo convention was that of W. R. Warren, secretary of the Centennial committee, J. H. Garrison being chairman of the general, and T. W. Phillips of the executive committee. After reference to the general desire for a fitting celebration of our first century's triumphs and the organization of proper committees, he continues:

Pursuant to the San Francisco convention's action, a secretary was employed beginning December 1, 1905. Since that date Centennial headquarters have been maintained in Pittsburg. This is not to promote the Centennial convention of 1909, but to assist in the Centennial campaign of the intervening years. Allegheny county is building a million dollar convention hall, which, with Duquesne Garden and Carnegie Music Hall will afford seating for 20,000 people within a few blocks. The Pittsburg brethren and their neighbors in a metropolis of a million people will care for the convention. But the entire brotherhood must be enlisted in the accomplishment of such things, in the name and by the might of our King, as will justify a Centennial celebration.

To enable immediate inauguration of the campaign, to give it universal scope and at the same time to emphasize the plea for a single and universal Gospel all the organizations and institutions of the churches were asked for financial support. All the general societies, nine colleges and twenty-two state societies have so far made appropriations, thus forming a practical co-operation of co-operations. Most of them are giving out of their deep poverty and some with a truly heroic devotion. There are assurances of early and favorable action by the rest. How can we plead for union, if we can not unite among ourselves for such great and divine ends?

We have commended to individual churches the following Centennial aims, as suggestive of things they should undertake according to their strength.

1. Each one win one.
2. All the church and as many more in the Bible school.
3. Two Christian papers in every home; one local and the other national.
4. To start a young man in the ministry.
5. To get all our people and as many more to read the New Testament through before January 1.
6. To revive and strengthen the midweek prayer-meeting and all the young people's services.
7. To erect a new church building.
8. To pay off our debt of $.
9. To start a new Bible school.
10. To organize another church.
11. To have at least one sermon per year on Annuities and Bequests, and one on Systematic Giving.
12. To double our offering for state missions; and thus—
13. To meet the state missionary board's expense in employing a missionary pastor.
14. To surpass our own best offering for home missions in both the church and Bible school, and by so doing—
15. To maintain our own home missionary.
16. To double the membership of our auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and to make a generous offering to its special Centennial fund.
17. To exceed our apportionment in both the March and Children's Day offerings, and so become a shareholder in a missionary station; or—
18. To support a living link on the foreign field.
19. To increase our offering to the million dollar fund for Church Extension, sufficiently—
20. To establish a named loan fund under the Church Extension Board.
21. To observe ministerial relief day, the third Lord's day in December.
22. To observe education day, the third Lord's day in January.
23. To sustain and educate an orphan, care for some dependent saint or provide a hospital bed under the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church.
24. To send at least one representative to every national convention, and a large delegation to Pittsburg in 1909.

In General We Recommend:

1. That while urging with increased vigor all the regular work of all the interests of the brotherhood we concentrate attention on an effort to add ten million dollars to the permanent assets of churches and church institutions.

2. This is necessarily an educational movement. We are all disciples of Christ. Let every one make a gift this year to some Christian college, and let our young people enjoy the noble influence of these conservators of light and liberty.

3. That especial emphasis be placed upon tithing of incomes; that the Lord's work may profit by the prosperity which he sends, instead of suffering thereby as it does now, and that reduced earnings may not result in entire cessation of giving.

4. That particular stress be placed upon effort in all directions to increase the supply of ministers and to develop the ministry of all members. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the Harvest.

5. That redoubled plans be given to Bible school work. We have nothing to teach but the Bible; and nothing to do but to teach the Bible. Only as we magnify this office can we make our gains permanent.

6. That effort be made to organize through the American Christian Missionary Society, and under the auspices of the several state societies a succession of state-wide simultaneous evangelistic campaigns, sweeping successive zones of the country, until all the upper Mississippi valley be completely covered.

7. That in all our stronger states there be a co-operation of the state societies, the A. C. M. S. and the Church Extension Board to plant a church in every unoccupied county seat.

8. That the effort of the A. C. M. S. and C. W. B. M. to plant the cause in states where we are but slightly represented and particularly in all the principal cities of these states be strongly seconded by the whole brotherhood.

9. That the use of Christian literature be greatly increased particularly in the circulation of our newspapers, state and national, missionary magazines, tracts and books.

10. That we endeavor to interest local philanthropists in the establishment of a broadly Christian hospital in every principal city of the country under the general direction of the N. B. A. C. C.

11. That the Centennial campaign be given a place on the program of every state and district convention and that all these meetings, as well as the services of our local churches, be made to ring with the Centennial aims and mottoes.

12. The quick passing of a hundred years as well as the successive departure of our loved ones must remind us all that we are on a pilgrimage. To-day we are commemorating great deeds and loving hearts; to-morrow we are ourselves subjects of memory. While it is called to-day let us rear, as monuments to those who have gone, chapels, schools, homes and hospitals on the mission fields; churches, hospitals and colleges in the home land, and establish permanent funds for perpetual service in all phases of Christian activity. Thus we shall best remember those who best remembered the Savior, alleviate the pain and lift the darkness of our fellow pilgrims and perpetuate the influence of our own fleeting lives.

13. That not only as many missionaries as possible be enabled to attend the Centennial exercises in 1909, but that representative converts from all lands be brought together that we may have a foretaste of that day when the great multitude which no man can number, out of every nation and of all tribes and peoples and tongues shall stand before the throne and before the Lamb.

14. That all that is undertaken be done, not for success which may be counted ours, but for the glory of the King whom all the world should acknowledge, and that all rejoicing in aims realized and goals attained be with a humbled sense of our own unworthiness and with everywhere recognition of the truth commemorated in the weekly observance of the Lord's Supper, "By grace are we saved, through faith."

Current Events

Sam Jones.

Many a greater man will be less missed, when he is called away, than will Sam Jones, whose death occurred suddenly last week. While conducting a series of evangelistic meetings, without warning he took the train for his home in Georgia and died in his berth during the night. He was nearly sixty years old and had been in the ministry more than thirty years. His fame as a preacher and lecturer was largely due to the peculiar uncouth and vulgar style of his discourse. His speeches were full of good-natured vituperation, uncomplimentary epithets and striking slang. Abusing his audience was one of his specialties, and the audiences generally seemed to like it, or at least to admit the substantial truth of his charges. But this was merely his method. Back of that there was a large-hearted man who loved men and wanted to help them. He offended outrageously, and doubtless consciously and willingly, against every known law of good taste in order that he might persuade men not to offend against the laws of righteousness. It is a dangerous method, and in the mouths of his multitude of puny imitators it is a nauseating thing. But Sam Jones was big enough and original enough to use the method with a maximum of good and a minimum of evil results.

Prison for Burton.

Senator Burton, of Kansas, who was convicted of bribery, must go to prison. The United States Supreme Court has denied the petition for a re-hearing. This leaves his sentence of fine and imprisonment in full effect. When the senate was about to expel him while this appeal was pending, he promised that he would abide by the result of this appeal and that, if the decision were against him, he would not attempt to find any other method of escaping punishment. We have not the least animosity against Mr. Burton, but, considering the overwhelming probability of his guilt, it is to be hoped that he will soon be behind the bars. When a man in high office deliberately sells his official influence, and in consideration of an "attorney's fee," attempts to get concessions from the government for a private (and in this case, fraudulent) concern by the use of the influence which is his only because he is a senator, he is guilty of the grossest corruption. A bribe by any other name—such as attorney's fee—is still a bribe.

The Care of Milk.

Recent experiments in the care of milk, under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, have shown that perfectly clean milk possesses greater keeping qualities than is usually supposed. It was found to be entirely practicable to keep milk sweet and fresh, without artificial preservatives, from two to seven weeks, if it is absolutely clean and if it is promptly cooled and kept cooled. The secrets are cleanliness and coolness. The milk must be artificially cooled as soon as possible after milking and must be kept at a temperature between 32 and 50 degrees. As to cleanliness, everybody believes in it, but few practice it with sufficient care. Nothing is more easily contaminated than milk. It absorbs odors as a sponge absorbs water. It gathers germs, bacteria, dust and minute particles of filth of any kind that may be in the air. This means that if proper cleanliness is to be obtained there must be a clean milker, a clean cow and a clean stable. Cleanliness in the parlor is a luxury and a grace; in the dairy barn it is a cardinal virtue and a necessity.

Cuba.

The receivership in Cuba is now in full operation. Governor Magoon has succeeded Secretary Taft at the head of the provisional government. The disarmament of the belligerents has been virtually accomplished, though from the antique character of many of the guns turned in by the insurgents it is suspected that they may have more serviceable and modern weapons which they are keeping back. Some documents which have come to light indicate that President Palma's resignation was not precipitated by his resentment of American interference, but that the purpose of it was to necessitate intervention which he saw was the only salvation for the republic since his own administration had utterly failed. In his initial proclamation, Governor Magoon reaffirmed Secretary Taft's declaration that the intervention is in the interests of the Cuban republic, whose flag still floats over the island. He says: "I shall seek to bring about the restoration of the ordinary agencies and methods of government under the general provisions of the Cuban constitution;" and he states the general purpose of his administration as: "The preservation of Cuban independence and the protection of life and property."

Under the Laws of New Jersey.

In general interest the fight between Hearst and Hughes in New York eclipses all other features of the fall political campaign. Mr. Hughes is making the most of his discovery that Mr. Hearst's New York papers are published by "The Star Company," a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey and having its (nominal) home office in the same building with the (nominal) offices of the sugar trust, the tobacco trust, the steel trust, and some hundreds of other corporations which sought the shelter of New Jersey's favorable corporation laws. For a company whose chief business is in some other state to organize under the laws of New Jersey is equivalent to confession of an attempt to evade legal responsibilities and just burdens of taxation. It is a sad circumstance if the great trust-fighter, who is running for governor on an anti-corporation platform and who can think of nothing worse to say about his competitor than that he is a corporation lawyer, shall turn out to be using in his own business and to his own profit those same tricks of the law of which he is, through his papers, so stern a critic. He has not yet been able to think of anything to say in answer to this charge which Mr. Hughes is making in every speech. If William R. Hearst, the publisher, is a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, it would scarcely seem that William R. Hearst, the governor, would be an ideal leader for a general attack upon corporations.

The Phonograph in Politics.

An innovation has been introduced into New York politics that is likely to revolutionize our political methods. The phonograph has been pressed into service as a campaign spellbinder. The friends of Mr. Hughes, the republican candidate for Governor, have about completed the records for twenty-five phonographs which will be mounted on wagons and will address the people on various street corners on "the issues of the day." This ought to prove a popular innovation both on economic and other grounds. The man who usually disturbs the flow of oratory with a hard question will be suppressed by this method, and the orator will have everything his own way. The fact that the speech is stereotyped will not make it so very different from the average campaign speech, and the fact that it cannot be modified by any new developments gives it special qualifications for the "stand-patters" in both parties. It will no longer be necessary for the Nebraskan orator to traverse the country, subjecting himself to railroad delays and disasters, when he can speak his piece into a phonograph, have the register multiplied many times, and send it to all parts of the country where the people may hear his voice, listen to his arguments and receive all the benefit, except his magnetic presence. It is easy to see how, with proper connections, the people may sit in their own comfortable parlors and listen to their favorite spellbinders without the inconvenience of attending a political meeting.

A Japanese Protest.

A despatch from Tokio under date of October 21, says that it would be difficult to over-estimate the gravity of the situation caused by the anti-Japanese feeling that has recently found expression in the United States. The correspondent says that during his nineteen years' residence in Japan he has never seen the Japanese press so agitated against the Americans. At a dinner a few days ago in Tokio, when one hundred and fifty prominent bankers and business men gathered, deep feeling was expressed that the United States should regard with indifference acts which they regard as tantamount to a declaration of racial war. The immediate occasion of this anti-American feeling is the exclusion of Japanese children from the public schools in California. Nothing has cut the Japanese to the quick so much as this indignity, as they regard it, toward Japanese children. It seems that before the earthquake and fire there were two schools in San Francisco for the exclusive use of Chinese and Japanese students. The curriculum was the same in these as in the regular public schools with certain necessary modifications. Since the disaster these schools have been abandoned and the Orientals have been mingling with the white children, and it is the action prohibiting such intermingling that has brought on this storm of protest. We are sure, however, that leading Japanese journals and statesmen will not hold the United States responsible for a local situation in San Francisco. The people of the United States have none but the kindest feelings toward Japan of which fact they have had abundant evidence during their recent conflict with Russia.

The BUFFALO CONVENTION

Prophecy has been turned into history, anticipation into realization, sowing into reaping, as relates to the Buffalo convention. It fell behind our expectations in no particular. We expected a large, enthusiastic and harmonious convention. It was all that. But it was more than that. It was a spiritual convention. This feature did not find expression so much in devotional meetings for which no adequate time was provided, as in the tone of the addresses and the manner in which these addresses were received. No one could have listened to the addresses and prayers in this convention without feeling that we were passing into an era of deeper spirituality and of wider sympathies.

The absence of unseemly boasting, or of any spirit of vainglory, was very gratifying, marking, as it does, a maturer stage of development. There was not wanting a just appreciation of the position we occupy, and of the responsibility which it imposes, but with this there was the consciousness that we had fallen too far short of our obligations to admit of any feeling of self-righteousness. Denominational braggadocio is a weakness to which religious conventions are peculiarly exposed since it is always popular to flatter people, by telling them their strong points, and concealing their weak ones. One of the convention speakers told of the Japanese official who, when Mr. Bryan, visiting in that country, had praised the Japanese for many good things, thanked him, but said: "Now tell us the worst thing you have noticed in Japan that we may correct it." That is the spirit of progress.

Key Notes.

The key-words which The Christian-Evangelist had suggested in its pre-convention number, as those which needed emphasis, are the very ones which received emphasis, namely: Consecration, unification, evangelization, education. This was not because we had suggested them, but because we had only interpreted the needs of the hour as these men have done. Consecration, or a more single-hearted devotion of ourselves and our possessions to the furtherance of Christ's kingdom, was the supreme note of the convention, as all else, unity included, would naturally follow. Not only was the need of union emphasized, but the duty of practicing union as far as possible with all others who love Christ, was equally stressed, and these sentiments never failed to elicit the popular approval of the convention.

The special features of evangelism which were made emphatic, were individual evangelism, under the motto suggested by The Christian-Evangelist early in our Centennial campaign—"Each one win one," and union evangelism, or our co-operation with other Christian workers in converting men to Jesus Christ. These are both healthy signs, the one indicating the rising sense of individual responsibility and the other marking the decadence of sectarian feeling and the growth of catholicity and the union spirit. The thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians had its inning in this convention, and Paul's sentiment—"the greatest of these is love"—had practical demonstration.

The necessity of converting men to Christ, and not to any theory, of making them Christians rather than mere partisans, was also properly stressed. No greater mistake can be made than to suppose that, if we have convinced a man that "the plan of salvation" as we present it, is the Scriptural one, he is prepared for baptism! Not until he sees himself a sinner, and is led to such faith in Christ as that he is willing to commit himself to Him for time and eternity, is he a fit subject for baptism. This fact is now appreciated more thoroughly by our evangelists and pastors than ever before. It is vital.

The Centennial note rang clear and strong through all the conventions. The Centennial idea is taking root in all departments of our work, and gives promise of an abundant harvest by 1909. There are no longer doubting Thomases as to the vast advance which has been, and is being made in all the branches of our one work, under the inspiration of our Centennial aims, and the pressure of our various Centennial agencies. The recommendation of the Centennial committee at the San Francisco convention that a secretary be appointed to devote himself wholly to this work, and the action of the convention in authorizing such appointment, have been abundantly vindicated in the increased interest and activity now manifest in our Centennial anniversary. The wisdom of the selection made, of a man to lead us in this great undertaking becomes also increasingly manifest.

Great Speeches.

In no convention we have ever attended was there more evidence of faithful, studious work on the part of those honored with a place on the program. This, of course, is just as it should be. The selection of themes and speakers for one of our national conventions is a most important duty. The value of the short speech was shown at Buffalo, and it might be well to increase the number of these and diminish the number of longer ones. At any rate there should be more time for impressing and explaining the reports and recommendations of boards and committees. This part of our convention proceedings is altogether too perfunctory. The impatience of discussion, and the apparent railroading of measures through with no motive, of course, but to save time or fear of discussion, is to be deprecated and discouraged. When we get afraid to discuss legitimate questions the conventions should adjourn sine die. Many feared that federation might come up for discussion, but the friends of Christian co-operation have no purpose or desire to bring that subject before the convention until there is opportunity for disabusing the public mind as to what federation is. But there is no reason why the time of holding our next convention should not have had full and fair discussion.

The official reports speak for themselves. They are the records of a splendid year's work in the several departments. There has been gain all along the line. This shows that the officers in the several organizations are not only faithful but efficient. The note of optimism, sounding in all the reports and addresses, is the sure sign that past progress is only the prophecy of larger things yet to come.

Some Important Measures.

The appointment of a committee by the general board to revise the constitution was a much-needed measure. It should have thorough consideration and revision so as to adjust it to our present needs and conditions. The present one has been outgrown. Another committee was appointed to revise the scheme of days for the various offerings to the end that all our interests may have a fair opportunity to present their claims to the brotherhood. If this committee does its work faithfully and impartially and the representatives of the churches will approve its recommendations an advance step will have been taken in the matter of our offerings. It is difficult for the representatives of any particular work to appreciate, at its full value, other departments of the work, and to recognize their unity, but we must all learn this lesson if we would love our neighbor and our neighbor's work, as we love ourselves and our own work.

The vote on going to Norfolk, Va., next year, in connection with the Jamestown Exposition, was unanimous. Perhaps it was the pleasing and inspiring memory of our great convention in connection with the St. Louis World's Fair that produced such unanimity of sentiment. The Norfolk brethren did their work quietly but effectively. New Orleans, which, through able representatives, presented the claims of that city, gracefully yielded to Norfolk with the understanding that its claims would be recognized later.

On the whole the Buffalo convention is entitled to be reckoned among our greatest conventions. Indeed in its spiritual tone we believe it registered high water mark thus far. If there were something abnormal in its fear of discussion, this can readily be accounted for, and it will readily adjust itself. The Buffalo convention will remain a pleasant memory, and a milestone on the road of progress toward higher and better things which we are yet to see.

Convention Incidents and Personals

The Buffalo weather was on its good behavior during the convention, though there were evidences that only a day or two before it had been playing winter at an alarming rate.

The street car conductors were so courteous and well-bred with their crowded cars that a lady moved a vote of thanks to them in the convention and it was unanimously carried.

The oldest man who attended the convention was Abram Teachout, of Cleveland, who is in his ninetieth year. He was in his place more regularly than some younger delegates, and his large heart went out in sympathy to every righteous cause. His tender talk before the business men's session of the convention was very effective and affecting.

Prof. Charles Louis Loos, of Lexington, Ky., was perhaps the next oldest man in years and one of the youngest in spirit, at the convention. He was a 'forty-niner, being at our first national missionary convention. He has the convention habit permanently fixed.

L. L. Carpenter, "the tall sycamore of the Wabash," was on hand, looming up head and shoulders above his brethren, like Saul the son of Kish. A brother told a story on him that during his recent travels abroad an English brother, desiring to give him a particularly warm reception, introduced him as "Hell Hell Carpenter, double hell D!" He is not that bad!

Among the very youngest in spirit of the older men in years was W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., who was generally seen surrounded by a group of young preachers listening to a story from him, or sitting at his feet for counsel. He has been a prominent figure in our conventions for more than a generation.

S. M. Cooper, chairman of the general convention, is as mild a mannered man as ever wielded a gavel; but he knows how to put "the previous question" and order a too persevering brother to "sit down over there!" He made an excellent presiding officer.

Speaking of "the previous question"—to move it when only one side has been heard, and when the discussion had not lasted fifteen minutes, and the convention was ahead of time, is not the Anglo-Saxon idea of free speech. It is a parliamentary closure that needs to be resorted to very rarely in religious assemblies. Even to cry "question!" "question!" when only one's own side has been heard, is not a manifestation of fairness. We can not too jealously guard the right of free discussion.

J. B. Briney, of "The Christian Weekly," and of "Briney's Monthly," was on hand among his brethren, as usual. Many of our older brethren seem to prize the fellowship of their brethren in convention more than many younger ones who failed to attend, but who could do so with much less physical discomfort. We trust the time may never come when there shall not be a large number of hoary heads in our convention. If the convention could find time to hear a word from these veterans, it would be well to sit at their feet and receive instruction from them.

F. D. Power, the bishop at Washington, and popular staff correspondent of The Christian-Evangelist, is often mistaken for an old man because of his white hair, but he seldom misses our national gatherings, and is always heard with profit.

Our leading papers and many of the smaller ones were represented by their editors, as it is proper they should be, and they will all join us this week in reporting the convention for the benefit of the great majority who did not attend.

The Buffalo convention is to be commended for remaining until the convention was completed. The last session on Wednesday evening was perhaps as largely attended as any other of the convention. The plan of having the convention close on Wednesday evening left the people without excuse for leaving before the end.

The careful preparation made by the local committee for the comfort and convenience of the delegates left nothing to be desired. No committee, we think, has ever done more careful or painstaking work and the thanks of the convention was something more than formal.

The vote to go to Norfolk, Va., next year in connection with the Jamestown Exposition, was unanimous. We missed the usual fun and excitement which comes from the contest between different places. Not even a representative from the Old Dominion or from Norfolk was asked to extend a welcome to the convention although a telegram was read from the governor of that state inviting the convention.

The music of the convention was a very prominent feature, and it was much enjoyed. Brother Hackelman, for the most part, led the singing though there were several soloists, quartettes and choruses. The singing of the Netz sisters was perhaps the most popular part of the music. The hymns published in the program, together with pictures and other valuable information, make this a desirable souvenir of the convention and of the city of Buffalo.

Among the men of age and dignity who attended the convention was Hon. T. W. Phillips, of Newcastle, Pa., who is chairman of the executive committee of our Centennial propaganda, and who also acted as chairman of the meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Christian Missionary Society. He not only served his country well as a member of congress, but he has rendered distinguished service to the cause of our common Christianity. His authorship of the now widely known book, "The Church of Christ," is an open secret, at least within a limited circle, and through that work he has reached and is reaching a large number of people who otherwise have not been reached with so clear and lucid a statement of the fundamental principles of Christianity.

Few men have been longer in their service to our missionary societies, and a more regular attendant on our missionary conventions, than W. S. Dickinson, of Cincinnati. Quiet and unobtrusive in manner, but wise in counsel, he has been a rock of strength to our missionary organizations in their days of weakness and struggle, as well as now in their period of greater prosperity.

Mention also should be made of such "honorable women" as Mrs. A. M. Atkinson, whose retirement from the presidency of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is a matter of general regret; of Mrs. Helen E. Moses, whose return to health and whose succession to the presidency, is a matter of general congratulation; Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, the vice-president and editor of the "Tidings," whose influence is widely felt; Miss Mary Graybiel, whose long and useful service on the foreign field, has endeared her to all our hearts; Mrs. Ida Harrison, whose able Centennial address struck the right key on Christian union, and all that splendid galaxy of women connected with the headquarters of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at Indianapolis, together with the state officers who were present from other states, made up a group of consecrated Christian women for which any religious body might well feel grateful.

When the Netz Sisters sang at the meeting of the Benevolent Association, "The home of the soul," by Philip Phillips, it was moved that it be adopted as the national song of the Benevolent Association. As the motion was about to be put a friend at our side suggested that he would like to move that the Netz Sisters be adopted as the national singers, not only for the Benevolent Association, but for the whole convention! The amendment, had it been put, would have met with enthusiastic endorsement.

CONVENTION SAYINGS.

"When can we get the church to put this missionary question along with baptism and the Lord's Supper? Until we do this we can not be called an evangelistic people."—F. M. Rains.

"There's no trouble to get on in this world; the trouble is to get up."—Wallace Tharp.

"The sermons of fifty years ago, if preached verbatim et literatim to-day would not be much more effective in transforming the world than a young man's grandfather's love letters in changing the mind of his indifferent girl."—S. M. Cooper.

"The really respectable churches are coming to have a pride in reaching their apportionments." —F. M. Rains.

"There's a small man sitting behind a large woman"—she had a hat—"Friends, do your duty." —Pres. A. McLean.

"We want no sentiment in China; we want business. I'm getting 100 per cent on my investment."—A. E. Cory.

"We have three missionary families at Tung Chow and not a decent place where they can live."—F. M. Rains.

"Were Luther, Wesley, or Knox—or Alexander Campbell to return to earth to-day and preach the same sermons they proclaimed when they passed this way before we would have to take a walk through the halls of memory and see these great men of God when their preaching was more opportune in order to maintain an appreciation of them."—S. M. Cooper.

"Long Beach, Cal., is supporting three living link missionaries. Friends, the sun is rising in the west."—F. M. Rains.

"The church was born in a missionary atmosphere; it can live only in a missionary atmosphere."—Wallace Tharp.

"A living link is a church that supports a missionary on the foreign field. Quit echoing so much, will you?"—F. M. Rains.

"Neither shall we compass so glorious an end by assaulting or ignoring those who differ from us in matters of doctrine or policy. The representative of any church whose ministry consists in denouncing other religious bodies as sects, instead of advancing the interests of the kingdom of God, but proves himself, as respects breadth of sympathy and extent of vision, an insect."—S. M. Cooper.

" 'Don't hurry?' I am mighty glad to hear you say 'don't hurry.' You have been hurrying me for thirteen years."—F. M. Rains to Pres. McLean.

"It is as if the church were taking up the work of world-saving where the apostles left off."—W. W. Sniff, speaking of the new enthusiasm for missions.

"The dignity of some church members is the dignity of a broomstick."—J. A. Lord.

"The ponderous respectability of inherited orthodoxy."—J. A. Lord.

"A man that spends $15,000 or $20,000 a year to live, and run an automobile and get thrown out and get killed some day, ought to support a foreign missionary."—F. M. Rains.

"The progress of the church depends upon the mutual acquaintance and recognition of the moral worth of its adherents and concert of action as divinely warranted under the banner of the Prince of Peace."—S. M. Cooper.

Editor's Easy Chair.

"Let us build here three tabernacles—one for thee, one for Moses and one for Elijah"—cried the impulsive Peter amid the glories of the Transfiguration scene. This he spake out of the first impulse of his heart, without stopping to weigh the proposition in the scales of reason. Is it not an impulse we have all felt amid the sweet fellowship and high inspiration of our great national gatherings, when the transfigured Christ is revealing to us glimpses of his glory? "How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," wrote one of the godly men of ancient times. Surely it is a more blessed thing for those who have been made one in Christ to "dwell together" in Christian fellowship and blessed communion. Their faith is one, their aims are one, their hope is one, their work is one. Why shouldn't they feel very close to each other, and why should not the well being of each one be very precious to all the others? They are fellow-pilgrims to a common country. They are fellow-laborers in a common cause. They are fellow-heirs of a common inheritance. Jesus Christ has drawn them together in counsel concerning his work. He meets with them. They feel his presence. Their hearts burn within them, as they hear reports of the triumph of his kingdom. They hear once again the voice coming down out of the excellent glory, "This is my beloved Son; hear ye him." Is it any wonder that amid all these inspiring scenes and experiences there should be felt a loathness to separate and go away to our separate fields to labor, often in loneliness and isolation? "Master, it is good to be here." So far, Peter, you are right. It is indeed good to have these mountain-top experiences, and dwell together in fellowship with each other and receive a wider vision of the world's needs, and a greater enduement of power. But after that it is good to come down to minister to the waiting multitudes in the plain below. For this purpose Christ led us up to the Holy Mount.

And yet there have been certain utilitarians in our day who have asked, "Why this waste of money in attending these annual conventions?" Let him answer who has gone away from one of these conventions with his vision widened, his heart enlarged, his faith strengthened, his zeal for missions at home and abroad, quickened, his love of the brethren intensified, and his whole religious nature enriched by what he has seen and heard and felt. Waste? What sort of investment would yield richer returns, both for the life that now is and that which is to come? It is interesting to watch those members who have come up to one of these great assemblies for the first time. Their fight out on the frontier has been a hard one, and they have been outnumbered and often despised by their richer and more numerous religious neighbors. Now they stand in the great congregation of their brethren, and here and yonder are the great, strong leaders of whom they have read, but whose faces they have never beheld before. "Coronation" is being sung, and as the great swelling tide of music rolls over their souls, they feel they are close to the gates of the New Jerusalem. "And all these are my brethren and sisters! We are not a feeble folk, but a great, strong, triumphant brotherhood." Tears of holy joy run down their cheeks. They have caught a vision that will never forsake them, not even when they go down to their hard and humble fields of toil. That great sermon, that inspiring address, the talks of the missionaries who were so glad to give their lives for Christ, those prayers that opened to us the gates of heaven, the sweet songs that lifted us above the world and its trifles, and filled the soul with holy aspirations—will the memory and inspiration of these ever be wholly lost? Not so, and the memory of them will be a perpetual benediction. Does it pay to go to our annual conventions?

Five thousand Christians—more or less—sitting down together in holy communion to celebrate the death of One who, "for us men and our salvation," nineteen centuries ago died upon a Roman cross! No wonder the people marvel at it, and ask what it means. It means that love is the greatest thing in the world. Because he loved us and gave himself for us, in the death of the cross, the world will not forget him. He is the magnetic Christ. He is drawing the whole world unto himself. It is love that has drawn that vast multitude of Disciples together, with one accord in one place, to show forth his death, and pledge anew their faith, and his death for our sins is the ground of their hope. As he is the center of the Christian system, so his death is the central fact of the Gospel, and the remembrance of that fact in the observance of the Lord's supper is the central act of worship. How reverently the people sit and wait for the opening word! Softly and sweetly the old songs of Calvary are sung. Many a little meeting house, or upper chamber, with its handful of communicants, rises before the memory of the faithful, as they look out upon this sea of upturned faces radiant with Christian faith, hope and love. The sweet old hymns, the words of Holy Scripture, the prayers of thanksgiving, and the great audience is quietly, orderly and speedily waited upon with the sacred emblems, an offering is made for aged and destitute ministers and their families, a parting hymn is sung, and the great multitude disperses but not without a foretaste of what it will be to sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

The highest note of a convention in which there were many high notes, was consecration—more love, more sacrifices, more time, more thought, more money, more of ourselves, for Christ and his kingdom. That was seen to be the antidote for every ill and every evil. Our Centennial aims heighten and brighten, as the time approaches. Everywhere there is a girding of the loins for a nobler effort. What Browning calls "the lit lamp and the girt loin" is now the watchword among us. When, before the Minneapolis convention in 1901 we called attention in The Christian-Evangelist, to the approaching Centennial of the Declaration and Address, and suggested the importance of planning for the celebration of that event, and later, brought in a report pointing out a suitable method of marking the completion of the first century of our history, there was more acquiescence than enthusiasm on the subject. It is not so now. Every department of our work is enlisted, vagueness has given place to definiteness, and indifference to enthusiasm. The next three years will witness a remarkable development not only in financial gains but in spiritual power and efficiency. And the best thing about our Centennial when it is past will not be the monuments we have erected in the form of enlarged missionary receipts, endowed colleges, equipped homes and hospitals, memorial churches or better and more widely-circulated religious journals, but the enlarged faith, love and consecration which made these possible.

Niagara! It 's another name for sublimity. Its ceaseless thunder is the voice of God, calling men to adoration. Its majesty is a rebuke to human pride. Its beauty is a reproof to all forms of ugliness, and especially to moral impurity. Its magnificence is a challenge to all that is noblest and greatest in man. Its unwasting bountifulness condemns and shames our stinginess. Its cloud of incense rising continually, appeals to our reverence and awe. Its rainbow encircling its brow, formed by sunshine and mist, reminds us that the most beautiful things in life come from God's love shining through human tears and suffering. It is Nature's noblest anthem. It is one of the masterpieces of the great Artist. It is a royal gift to humanity. Seen on a bright October day when all the trees of the forest are clothed in crimson, green and gold, it forms a picture of incomparable beauty and sublimity which time can not efface from the tablet of memory. Flow on thy rapid way, O mighty Niagara, and fling thyself with sublime abandon over the lofty precipice that Nature has prepared for thee, until the roar of thy falls shall be lost in the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds!

Importance of Christianity to America*

By S. M. Cooper

To what does American character owe its strength and energy? Our climate, our material resources, our superior educational advantages, have played a prominent part in the formation of the American's character, but much of his strength and energy, much of that which constitutes his chief success and glory is traceable to the stern discipline of Puritan morality practiced by his forefathers.

And that which will guarantee the increase of our strength, and the molding of men of all nationalities into one dominant American type worthy of our noble ancestors, is an increase of faith in God and of love for God and man, expressing themselves in sober, righteous and godly living.

Americans through their government have expressed the highest confidence in one another, for our government practically says to all of us, "Manage your own business affairs, found and direct your own educational institutions, enact and administer your own laws, look after your own religious development." Commensurate with this freedom there must be knowledge and virtue on the part of the people, for otherwise liberty will degenerate into license to do wrong. Americans have been wise enough to recognize this fact, hence all along our pathway we see the establishment of the school and church.

He who is faithful to the church stands for everything that is essential to our free institutions. He stands for purity, strength and courage in the individual; for wisdom and love in the home; for righteousness in our social and industrial life; for intelligence and patriotism in our political life. If any one doubts the value of the church to our free institutions, let him but trace the history of home missions in our northwest territory which has justly been denominated "The Keystone of our American Commonwealth."

Joseph B. Clark says, "Take away this keystone from our national arch with its Yankees from the East, its Hoosiers from the South, its Teutons from Middle Europe, its wealth of agriculture, manufacture and commerce, and above all its men and women with what they have done and what they stand for, and the republic would crumble with its own weight."

When this territory was opened up, and men and women went thither to occupy it, there were those in New England and other parts of our country whose vision was extensive enough, whose faith in God and man was strong enough to prompt them to show rare foresight and courage by helping the people of this new territory to plant churches. With the development of the church there appeared her inseparable companions and most potent allies, the school and the college. Dr. Storrs, referring to their loyalty and its causes, said, "Home missions saved this country once and if necessary will do it again."

Statistics tell us that there are in the United States 160 cities having in the aggregate a population of 20,000,000—about one-fourth of our entire population. Fifty-three per cent of these 20,000,000 are either foreign-born or are of foreign parentage. Many of them have been men of intellectual freedom, men of faith, of hope and courage, possessing those sturdy qualities needed in our economic and political life. With many of them, however, there have been imported ideas destructive of our free institutions, and being away from the restraining influences of home and native land withal surrounded by many new and strong temptations, the clear vision of their needs compels the recognition of our indebtedness. The unifying influences of the school and the purifying influence of the church must be applied to the millions coming to our shores that the composite man representing all nationalities may be a true American. If there is any plea suited to the intelligent foreigner, it is that of the Disciples of Christ. Its exaltation of the Christ, its recognition of the worth and authority of the individual, its advocacy of union and its democratic spirit clothe it with great power for this work which not to use is to abuse.

But we must evangelize not simply the foreign population in our cities, but our entire cities irrespective of race or nationality. This must be done because the people are here. It must be done because our cities are the centers of civilization. Here there is manifested the greatest and most general indifference to the duties and responsiiblities of citizenship. Here as nowhere else the ignorant and corrupt control politically until it has been justly affirmed of our municipal governments that "They are the worst in Christendom, the most expensive, the most inefficient, and the most corrupt." Here we see the moral overstrain of our modern life disproportionate to our moral strength, and hence account for the fact that the ratio of criminals in this country has risen within the last forty years from one in 3,000 to one in 700. Brethren, if this republic ever fails, the secret of its failure will be found in the ignorance and corruption of our great cities. If the government of our country is losing faith in any class of its subjects to-day, it is in those who dwell in cities; and if it be true that the greatest tragedy that can befall the American government is to lose faith in its subjects who are its authors.

Let us then give more attention to the evangelization of our cities. We have in the main been a country people. For the most part we are still a country people. But this fact, instead of disqualifying us for city work only emphasizes our obligation to capture the cities for Christ. The majority of men in our cities who control our factories, stores and banks, who own and edit our papers, who plead our causes and sit in judgment on our cases, who cure our ills, who occupy our pulpits, who superintend and teach our schools and colleges, are from the country. Emerson says that the city would have died out and rotted long ago had it not been recruited from the country. If our cities are to be redeemed our country churches must help accomplish it. If I wanted to rejuvenate a disintegrated downtown church, I would call as its leader a young man of mind and heart from the country.

As I survey the condition of the church, as I contemplate the distinct tendencies of American civilization, there is nothing more apparent than the absolute necessity for the renaissance of enthusiasm for the program of Christianity. There must be a profound religious awakening. As England was saved from a revolution as terrible as the French revolution by the power of evangelistic revival under Wesley and Whitfield, so we may say of this country that she can be secured from Paganism and revolution only by a vigorous campaign of the soldiers of the cross.

We can not carry on this campaign successfully either by putting dead leaders on horseback or by employing methods adapted to former generations. God is still unchangeable; life is still eternal; but men's ideas of God and of life are constantly changing. Our social, economic and political life are constantly changing. New duties are ours. The man who would effectively apply the Gospel to society to-day must interpret and declare it in the light of to-day's experiences and needs.

We can not carry it on by relying solely upon the character of our plea. Our plea may be the Gospel of Christ, but our justification and the salvation of others are dependent not simply upon its nature, but in our proclaiming it as inspired by divine love and directed by divine wisdom.

Neither shall we compass so glorious an end by assaulting or ignoring those who differ from us in part in matters of doctrine or polity. As citizens of the divine kingdom, we long for that visible and invisible union for which our Savior prayed, but in order to its realization, Christians and churches must be big enough and loyal enough to practice together in part, as they are enabled to see alike in part. If it be true that in this country, inhabited by the representatives of every race and clime, by the representatives of every known political and religious faith, the progress of civilization depends upon mutual acquaintance and its consequent intellectual humility, it is also true that the progress of the church—so vital to the advancement of civilization—depends upon the mutual acquaintance and recognition of the moral worth of its adherents and concert of action as divinely warranted under the banner of the Prince of Peace.

Loving men and desiring their salvation, our business is to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

As we contemplate the character, power and influence of the 130,000,000 English speaking people in the world today, recognizing the fact that they govern not only themselves but nearly 400,000,000 Asiatics and Africans, that under their allied flags labor one-third of the human race; that they are the supreme custodians of waterways of the world; that of the dry land they control the richest territory in three continents; that they go everywhere, visiting all lands, trading with all people; their governments touching those of all nations—I say, as these facts are held up before us the vision appears clear as the light from heaven—let this mighty people be fully enlisted under the leadership of Christ and the day will soon be ushered in when the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

Christ, the Inspiration of Missions*

By W. F. Turner

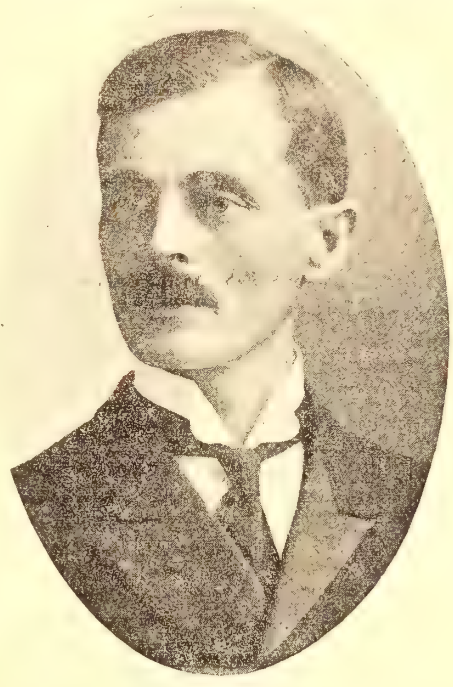
The discovery has been made that the Bible is a missionary library. It opens with a universal promise and ends with a vision of universal triumph. Starlight promises, moonlight prophecies, sunlight precepts and blazing noonday practice of Spirit-filled apostles, all proclaim the note of jubilee to a lost world. Moreover, this purpose is to be consummated through human instrumentality, the highest expression of which is the Church. "How shall they preach except they be sent?" And to know the Master's will and do it not means many stripes.

We, too, have been warned against the sin of ingratitude. The foundation of present-day civilization has been traced to Christian missions. Whatever we may say of evolution, it is a fact that we came from a heathen ancestry. Our forefathers were fierce savages who practiced free love, idolatry and cannibalism. Going back to Plymouth Rock and Jamestown, we find the Pilgrims and Cavaliers landing on our shores with the Bible and a devout faith. Further back we find Anskar going to Scandinavia. We find Boniface going to Germany. We find Columba going to Scotland. We find Boniface going to Germany. We find St. Patrick going to Ireland. Back of all these we find Augustine, who brought the Gospel to England from Rome. Back yet we find Paul, who brought it to Rome direct from the Lord, who brought it from heaven to earth. Here is at least one line of succession that can not be broken. It is a line of Gospel heroes conquering a line of barbarians, whose work led to Anglo-Saxon culture and liberty. Freely we have received; freely must we give. "This is a day of glad tidings; evil will overtake us if we hold our peace." Were there not ten thousand congregations of Disciples healed? Where are the seven thousand who are failing to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

The example of Christ has been set before us. "He went about doing good." When asked to remain in one place, he said: "I must preach the Gospel in other cities also." "He left us an example that we should follow in his steps." To follow him we must go. A church that is not missionary should not put on its corner-stone, "Church of Christ," whoever be its preacher or whatever be its creed.

The command of Christ has also been emphasized. We say the command because it is the last and only command after the resurrection. The Moravians feel that the desire of Christ is sufficient to move every fifty-seven of their number to send the fifty-eighth one to win the travail of Christ's soul that he may be satisfied. But beside the desire we have the command backed with all the authority of heaven and earth. We may as well face the proposition that indifference to this command is treason against God.

Humanitarianism has been presented as a motive. The nations are sick and wounded. Priests and Levites are passing by. As we think of the Good Samaritan we hear the Master's words, "Go, and do thou likewise." Even Charles Darwin, though not a believer in the divine origin of Christianity, when he saw the marvelous results of missions in the islands of Tierra del Fuego, became a life contributor to the London Society. Many preachers and churches among us might well imitate the theology of Darwin on this point. G. L. Wharton, now in Jubbulpore, India, tells of a mother who brought her daughter to worship a hideous idol. The little thing drew back with cries of terror, but she was forced to kneel before it. Just across the way at the mission station the girls were at that very hour at their prayers, saying in Hindu, "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name." That incident alone should convert the whole Church of God to missions.



W. F. Turner.

Our Church pride has been stirred up Our faithful secretaries and editors have given us line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there quite a good deal. They tell us that a great increase of numbers without a corresponding increase in liberality is a humiliating inconsistency. One and a quarter million members does not sound well in the same sentence with a quarter million dollars. And, frankly, brethren, we should be ashamed to preach among the churches of the great brotherhood and have no part in the great missionary activities of our brethren. If love does not constrain us, pride should.

Last, the law of reflex influence has been demonstrated before us from actual experience. To succeed we must have the presence of Jesus. But his presence is conditioned upon obedience to his last command. The "lo" is promised only when we "go." If we would have the barrel of meal never fail, and the cruse of oil always full, we must make God a little cake first.

Yet, with all the mighty array of argument the Church halts and the chariot wheels of Zion drag heavily. Fifty years of marvelous missionary achievement are past. A century has gone since the organization of the American Board. Nineteen hundred years the Church has been the custodian of the priceless message, and as yet we are only playing at the task. We have, like children, picked up a mission station here and there, while the great sea of humanity lives unconquered before us. Rich clusters from Eshcol tell of lands flowing with milk and honey, but Israel waits at the border. Spies report walled cities and giant evils to be overcome, but with one voice say, "We are well able to go up and possess the land." What then is the matter? We have waved the first fruits. Doors are open. The earth is explored. We have the men. We have the money. The whole world can be reached in this generation. Where lies the difficulty?

In this. We have had appeal; we need the inward fire. We have been compelled; we need to be impelled. We have had incentive; we need an inspiration. Appeal is not without its value. "The law was pure, and holy, and good." It was our tutor to bring us to Christ. But we are now no longer under law, but under grace. Has not the hour arrived for us to pass under the new covenant of missions? Incentives are external and temporary, and must be used with increasing frequency. A galvanic battery applied to the legs of a dead frog will induce muscular activity. But life is what is needed. Many churches moved with a fervent appeal or a stinging rebuke will make spasmodic offerings. They will show signs of activity and sometimes indulge in kicking. But that church is dead while it lives. The church that drinks of such waters will thirst again. The one that drinks inspiration from Christ will not thirst, neither require a secretary to come all the way hither to draw. In them will be a fountain springing up evermore.

This principle is in harmony with history. The world's great religions are at a standstill. They are ethnic. Their message is local. They have truth and power, but lack life from which expansion can only come. Hence they have no missions. They are content to hold their own or decline. Enthusiasm is dead. This was true of Judaism. It was local and external. A few reluctant efforts were made to reach others such as Jonah's visit to Nineveh and the presence of Israel in Egypt and Babylon. But here they wept. There was no song. A few proselytes satisfied the most optimistic. There was no world-wide mission till a divine life filled their hearts. Then they went everywhere. Fagot, stake, cross and sword could not stay them. Motley tells us of a Protestant congregation in Brussels that was seized in part with their officers and burned alive in the public square. The pastor and those left continued their devotions in an upper room overlooking that square, reading the Scriptures by the light of their burning brethren at the stake. Where this inbreathing has been experienced such sacrifices have been made clear from Paul to the Armenian and Chinese martyrs of our own day.

On this ground we explain how missionary effort was arrested. After the world was becoming filled with truth the Church ceased to proclaim and began to debate. So doing, the vision of Christ was lost. In these latter days we have heard the cry, "Back to Christ," and as the sun of righteousness is rising to the meridian of our hearts the mercury in the missionary thermometer is also rising. Somehow when Christ gets into the human heart that heart is anxious about others. Philip seeks Andrew, the Samaritan her neighbors, Saul the Gentiles. Our first impulse after confession is to invite others to go with us to the better land. Pity that new convert or newly organized church that is not invited to join the missionary enterprise.

This inspiration is the need of the hour. The worker on the far-away field needs it to hold him to the task. The secretary needs it to help when the hands hang down. The preacher needs it lest he flee from his church to Tarshish. The Church needs it that duty may be done if all others fail. Then our interest will not wane. There will be no spasms of giving. Stormy days will not ruin the offering. Men will not need to become prematurely old to stir up a negligent church. Changing ministries will not affect the missionary programs of any congregation.

*An address before the Foreign Christian Missionary Society of the International Convention of the Christian church at Buffalo, slightly abbreviated.

Yes, the church has the machinery, the money and the men. Only the power is lacking. When Isaiah had a vision of God, he exclaimed, "Here am I, send me." Oh, for a vision of God in Christ that will impel us now.

May we not join in the prayer of the psalmist, "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills from whence my help cometh." First, we see with uplifted sight the hill of Calvary, where our Savior died. There are many things in the Catholic Church which we can not endorse. But may we not endorse the Golden Litany which Dr. Storrs pronounced the greatest litany ever written? A few of its sentences run thus: "By that cold crib thou layedst in, wrapped in poor clothes, have mercy on us; by thy flight into Egypt and all the pains thou didst suffer there; by thy thirst, cold, heat and hunger in this vale of misery; by thy wonderful signs and miracles thou wroughtest; by the inward and great heaviness which thou hadst, when praying to thy Father in the garden beside the Mount of Olivet; by the spitting on thee and the scourging of thee; by thy purple garments, and the crown of thorns violently pressed down upon thy head; by the nailing of thy right hand and shedding thy precious blood, cleanse us, Lord, from all sin; by the nailing of thy left hand and thy most holy wound and precious blood, save us, purge us, enlighten us and reconcile us to God the Father; by the lifting up of thy most holy body on the cross and thy sore bruising thereof, that gave to all parts of thy body an incredible pain; by the bitterness of thy death and the intolerable pains wherewith thy heart brake; by thy glorious resurrection in body and soul; by thy wonderful and glorious ascension, comfort us; by thy glory and divine majesty and virtue of thy holy name, save us and govern us now and forever." As we read this marvelous litany may we not endorse the sentiment that "here we touch the flaming heart of all that is best in the Roman Catholic Church. We cease to be amazed at such heroes as Xavier, Francis of Assissi or Raymond Lully."

We look again and see the mount of Olivet. Near the hill of sacrifice was the hill of ascension. One was the scene of shame; the other of triumph. The heavenly train came to escort him back to that glory he had before the world was. There he lifted his hands of blessing and gave his commission. "Go, make disciples of all nations," and then he went to the Father.

Once more we lift our eyes to the hills. Between the hill of Calvary and the hill of Olivet is the hill of Zion. On this height the little band waited for the promise of the Father. From there was to go forth the new law of love. From there the angel was to fly through the world with the everlasting Gospel to be preached to all nations. After ten days' of waiting the Spirit came and the work began which is to continue till all rule and authority are put under his feet and which if we had not faltered would long ago have been accomplished. Looking to Calvary for pardon, to Olivet for the word of command and to Zion for the Spirit-filled message we are able to go forth from this convention to attempt the task before us.

God, Yourself and Your Neighbor*

By Mrs. W. W. Wharton

There are two forces that must precede all accomplishment—the power to see and the will to do. But the vision must come first. Before the real cometh the ideal. Every notable deed has first been a thought, a vision, in some one's mind. To-day we have been upon the mount of vision God has led us up and has given us the power to see. We have seen the army of the Lord upon its onward march. We have heard of its battles, its conquests and have caught a vision of the country yet to be possessed.

And have we not had the vision which shall stir our hearts to their deepest depths, so that mind and heart alike shall force us to action? We have heard the bitter cry of India's millions for light; we have quivered with pity for the darkening doom of the islands of the sea. As I look into the face of my little daughter and think of the sweet heritage of womanhood soon to be hers, I think of that heathen mother who dares not even love her hapless little daughter, that sweet little woman-child whose life, if she be allowed to keep it, must be a nightmare of hopeless misery. And when I think of the little head that was once pillowed on my breast, but now finds a resting place upon the Master's breast—oh, when I think of that little lamb of worldly wisdom undefiled, whose little feet have pattered through the pearl-set gates straight into the outstretched arms of the Good Shepherd, I long to take the comfort I have found to every mother who longs for the touch of a vanished hand, the sound of a voice that is still. Our womanhood and the sacred gift it brings us, motherhood, calls us to carry the peace and comfort God's Son has brought us on to our sisters in every clime.

Linked with this love to God, Christ has joined two other loves—the love to self and love to neighbor. Some one has said that it takes three persons to express the Christian religion—God, yourself and your neighbor. Christ has made our love for our neighbor dependent upon our love for self. So in pleading for a greater love for our brother for whom Christ died, I point you to your heart. There is so much dangerous teaching in regard to the love of self. We are told to empty ourselves of self and allow the power of the Almighty to flow in—to stand still and wait—that not in striving do things of life come to us, but that what is ours will find us wherever we are. Sly half truths have done more harm in this world than bold untruths. The foremost fact for me in all the universe is that I am. I may add predicates as knowledge comes and life develops, but first I am, and I am myself wholly different from you or any one else, and first of all responsible for what I do with the talents with which God has endowed me.

Mrs. W. W. Wharton.

Does not your heart thrill within you as you witness what God hath done? One hundred years ago missionaries were derided as fanatics, lunatics; to-day they are honored as God's elect. One hundred years ago they met with opposition on every hand, and could scarcely gain an entrance into their field of labor; to-day every land is open. The opening of the doors of opportunity into Africa, Corea, China and Thibet is a story of love and sacrifice more thrilling than the mind of man can imagine. The greatest heroes are the heroes of the cross, and they have prepared the ground for the harvest we shall reap by the shedding of their own blood. A century ago the great heathen religions seemed to occupy impregnable positions, but to-day their power is waning. They have been gradually undermined, and their followers are losing faith. In India, statistics show that the Hindu population has decreased, while the native Christian population has increased forty per cent in the last decade. The Christian nations are coming more and more into control of the world, so that the Word of God and the Man of God may to-day find entrance into every land and the means of going and the facilities for work have been wondrously improved. The doors are open, the pioneer work done and the laborers are laying aside human opinion and are letting the heathen world see Jesus only, who is the Light which lighteth every man who cometh into the world. John R. Mott, after a tour of the world, says that "few facts on the mission field inspire one with more hope for the immediate future of missionary enterprise than the certainly growing tendency toward practical Christian unity among the organized forces of Protestant Christianity."

We have left the Mount of Vision, we have crossed the Valley of Decision, and have given ourselves, our best, our highest, most exalted selves, to Him. What shall we carry back to those who wait for us, who lean on us for inspiration? Many are striving in this work and in that to satisfy their longing for mental culture, and by this philanthropy and that to still the cry of their hearts and lessen the sum of the world's misery. Can we not make these noble souls, these true hearts, realize the dignity of our cause, the breadth of mental culture, the study of the field brings with its study of the land, its history, its art, its literature—the depth of spiritual culture the effort to give eternal life and a happier earth-life to humanity brings? Heart-hunger, mind-hunger and soul-hunger, all find their satisfaction in our work of love.

*Some extracts from the closing address of the C. W. B. M. Convention at Buffalo.

The Missionary Bump* By Cecil J. Armstrong

In my boyhood days the subject of phrenology was much discussed. The phrenologist read the character and predicted the future of his subject by feeling the various bumps on his cranium. In the course of the examination such expressions as "the bump of courage," "the bump of memory," "the bump of finance," were frequently heard. It had been many years since I had thought of phrenology. About two years ago an esteemed member of my congregation forced the subject upon my mind in a very startling manner. In speaking of our missionary development at Winchester, he said: "Yes, it is all right, I guess: but, to be perfectly frank, your missionary bump is overdeveloped." Now, I had heard of many different kinds of bumps, but that was the first time I had ever heard of a missionary bump—and an overdeveloped missionary bump at that! I could hardly refrain from feeling my cranium to find out if thereon there was not a knot as large and as prominent as the can that sits so serenely on the head of the renowned Happy Hooligan.

This remark of my esteemed brother was called forth by the fact that the church at Winchester has in the last five years had a great growth in missionary liberality, as the following figures will show: To all missionary causes the church gave in 1902, $687; 1903, $1,637; 1904, $2,985; 1905, $3,600. And all this my worthy brother attributed to an overdeveloped missionary bump!

This remark has suggested to me three questions, viz—(1) Can the missionary zeal of a pastor be too great? (2) By whom is the pastor's zeal to be judged, by man or Christ? (3) Must the pastor slacken in his zeal because of some who oppose great missionary development in his church? These questions I wish briefly to consider in their order.

1. Can the missionary zeal of a pastor be too great? In every church there are those who will answer this question affirmatively. Sometimes pastors, by action, if not by word, thus settle this question. But the pastor who ascends the mount of vision and beholds the world's degradation and need, who really enters into God's purpose in Jesus Christ, who fully appreciates the divine imperative to evangelize the world must answer this question in the negative. The pastor's missionary zeal can not be too great. It was missionary zeal that consumed the Lord. Was there ever such an incarnation of the missionary spirit? Is the disciple above his Lord? Will the faithful pastor forsake the path of sacrifice, the path made sacred by the feet of Jesus? What if it does cost him suffering because his zeal is misunderstood, or is not rewarded with a commensurate response from his church? What if it does cost him his pulpit? He will be rewarded with fellowship in the sufferings of Christ, and the sacred joy that comes to those who have done their best.

2. By whom is the pastor to be judged: by man or Christ? We pastors need to have this question thrust upon our attention for so often we are tempted to make our recognition of Christ's judgeship theoretical and the judgeship of man real. Yet in our heart of hearts, in spite of plausible excuses and fallacious reasonings, we know that it is unto Christ that we stand or fall. The judgment means more to the pastor than to the man in the pew. The pastor bears a double responsibility. He is accountable for his life and deeds, and also for the way in which he instructs and leads the people of God. When a pastor really grasps the awful fact that Christ, not man, is his judge he realizes that to preach the Gospel is more than to instruct in first principles, to emphasize Christian unity, and to impress people with the necessity of righteous living. It means to do that, but to do much more. It means to clarify the church's vision that she may see "unto the uttermost part of the earth," to enlarge her heart that she may love the heathen for whom Christ died, to expand her liberality so that, joyfully and lovingly she may give her money to send the Gospel to all men. Well may the pastor, as he faces the responsibility of his office, tremble and exclaim: "Woe is unto me if I am not true to the missionary obligation. Christ is my judge. It is in his presence that I must stand to be judged faithful or unfaithful." Let men judge as they may, the pastor must be faithful to Christ.

3. May the pastor slacken in his missionary zeal because of opposition in his church? This question has virtually been answered, but I discuss it here because it needs great emphasis. When the pastor is confronted with opposition (and every pastor will meet opposition to a missionary propaganda) he is tempted to slacken in missionary zeal. Good friends will sometimes advise it and prominent members sometimes demand it. Caution will whisper "Go fast slowly." But, granting that the pastor is wise in his methods, he must refuse to listen to those cautious ones who advise cessation, or to those who, lacking the spirit of Christ, and being willing for the church at home to languish and the heathen abroad to live in darkness, demand cessation. The call to missionary effort is a "heavenly vision" granted by the risen, radiant Christ to the pastor, and he who is "disobedient unto the heavenly vision" must stultify his soul and betray his trust. While the pastor is in a true sense the servant of the church, in a much higher sense he is the servant of him who died for all men. The message of the Cross is more than a call to repentance; it is a call to worldwide evangelization. Who is the supreme master of the pastor? Is he the man who says "Be cautious," the man who says "Stop," or the Christ who says "Go"? Faith must never be subservient to caution, nor optimism the bond servant of circumstances. There is a place where faith must refuse the advice of caution, and optimism must break the shackles of bigotry and covetousness that would enslave it. This faith and optimism the pastor must have. Missionary development does not come in a night. It is the result of prayer and anguish on the part of the pastor. It is nurtured amid the struggle with opposition that stops not at the repudiation of the last command of Jesus. The pastor must never slacken in his missionary zeal. In too many pulpits to-

A FOOD CONVERT

Good Food the True Road to Health.

The pernicious habit some persons still have of relying on nauseous drugs to relieve dyspepsia, keeps up the patent medicine business and helps keep up the army of dyspeptics.

Indigestion—dyspepsia—is caused by what is put into the stomach in the way of improper food, the kind that so taxes the strength of the digestive organs they are actually crippled.

When this state is reached, to resort to stimulants is like whipping a tired horse with a big load. Every additional effort he makes under the lash increases his loss of power to move the load.

Try helping the stomach by leaving off heavy, greasy, indigestible food and take on Grape-Nuts—light, easily digested, full of strength for nerves and brain, in every grain of it. There's no waste of time nor energy when Grape-Nuts is the food.

"I am an enthusiastic user of Grape-Nuts and consider it an ideal food", writes a Maine man:

"I had nervous dyspepsia and was all run down and my food seemed to do me but little good. From reading an adv. I tried Grape-Nuts food, and, after a few weeks' steady use of it, felt greatly improved.

"Am much stronger, not nervous now, and can do more work without feeling so tired, and am better every way.

"I relish Grape-Nuts best with cream and use four heaping teaspoonfuls at a meal. I am sure there are thousands of persons with stomach trouble who would be benefited by using Grape-Nuts. *Delivered at the Buffalo National Convention, Monday, October 15, 1906, by Cecil J. Armstrong, pastor First Christian Church, Winchester, Ky.

The Convention As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. POWER

The journey from Washington to Buffalo, a trip of twelve hours through Maryland, Central Pennsylvania and Southwestern New York, is a delight in October. On the hills the autumn flames are being kindled. In the fields the corn is shocked and the pumpkins lie scattered in careless and rich profusion; while goldenrod and wild asters are blooming everywhere. It is not the richest agricultural region, nor are there pretty cities and towns, but there is a certain ruggedness and picturesque aspect to the country that attracts, even to the quaint stump fences by the roadway. Buffalo itself is a great center of life and activity. It is the eighth city in the world. Its people are called Bisonians and there are 400,000 of them. It has some of the greatest things—the largest coal trestle in the world, the largest flour depot, the largest individual steel plant, the largest office building and the largest art gallery of its kind. It is a city of handsome residences, lovely parks, fine squares and great industries; the terminus of "Clinton's Ditch," and the owner of the biggest waterfall on the continent.

The Churches of Christ on this Niagara frontier are among the best in the brotherhood. They are thoroughly missionary. There are about 2,500 Disciples in and about the city. The Whartons and Miss Mary Graybiel went out from these churches. They now support three missionaries. It is a fine atmosphere for a national convention, and they have handled it well. The hall was an excellent one with every convenience and comfort, beautifully decorated; and the homes of the best people were open to our delegates. The papers gave generous notices, though Buffalo can scarcely boast of a first-class press; and the convention impressed the city.

The convention opened as usual with the meetings of our C. W. B. M., which were well attended and full of interest. It was a great report the women rendered of their stewardship. The 2,661 auxiliaries and circles and 47,210 members that constitute the working force of this organization, contributing the past year $206,553, show a great work accomplished for Christ and the church. One can not but feel how much more might be done if our 600,000 women were all enrolled. There were many good things in the program. W. F. Richardson's report for Jamaica, H. J. Derthick's address on the mountain work in Kentucky, and the introduction of missionaries were all excellent features. Mrs. Atkinson, after thirty-two years of official service, retires; Mrs. Moses becomes president, and Mrs. M. E. Harlan, the corresponding secretary. "Work, Pray, Give," makes an inspiring motto for another year.

The preaching on the Lord's day in many pulpits, the great communion service where over 5,000 came together "to break bread," had a most wholesome influence. Eighty churches opened their pulpits and in every case cordial words of welcome were spoken and fervent prayers uttered for the convention and its work. One Presbyterian pastor stated his prayer-meeting for the week would be omitted and exhorted his people to attend the session given to Christian benevolence. The papers spoke of the communion service as "a religious spectacle such as Buffalo had never seen before. The scene was inspiring, yet devotional; spectacular, yet reverent. Hundreds of people seemed deeply affected by the religious significance of their act of loving worship, and tears coursed silently down the cheeks of bowed faces here and there amid the throng of worshipers."

The Foreign Society had a most successful session on Monday, October 15. The thirty-first report shows an income of $268,726, and a gain of 344 churches making offerings. Of 11,110 churches reported by our statistician only 3,178 gave anything for foreign missions, but the growth in the number contributing is surely encouraging. President McLean conducted the sessions in his usual spirited way, using his handkerchief to dust off his speakers with becoming grace and missionary activity. Tharp and Denton, Lord and Armstrong, Turner and Philputt, made trenchant talks on various aspects of this great work. The introduction of missionaries was an inspiring scene and many of the short addresses were very stirring. Secretary Rains is as unique as ever and Secretary Corey is a splendid second. The venerable President Loos was a welcome and impressive figure in the assembly. He shared the patriarchal honors with W. T. Moore, J. B. Briney, L. L. Carpenter, Addison Clark, Abram Teachout and J. H. Gordinier. The home society reported the most successful year in the society's history of fifty-six years. A record of 373 workers, 116 churches organized, 15,013 persons brought into the church, and $103,647 in receipts is no mean work for the year of grace, 1906. Then the two departments: ministerial relief, raising $11,059, and Church Extension, $59,697, and the state organizations raising $186,129; together with $109,090 given by the Woman's Board to work in America, make a total of $469,619 for home work during the year.

President Cooper made a worthy presidential utterance, and one does not hear once in a long time such addresses as those of Medbury and Daugherty, Tanner and Smith, Lichtenberger and the rest. In all my experience at national conventions I have never heard a more splendid series taken from first to last. That of E. F. Daugherty deserves the very highest mention. The old men must look to their laurels. This was a young men's convention, and they did credit to all the traditions of the church for inspiring sacred eloquence. The choice of George H. Combs as president of the American Society for next year, of W. J. Wright as corresponding secretary, and of Norfolk, Va., as the place of meeting, was just the right thing to do in each case. The usual exploitation of the different sections of the country as ripe for the harvest was well done by Alex McMillan, S. T. Willis and W. H. Sheffer, and the cause of education and the Sunday-school were well cared for by President Josephus Hopwood and E. B. Bagby.

The fellowship was great. The college banquets and reunions were delightful. Bethany had over 200 and many turned away for lack of room. Some words like "Holy Writ," "zealot," "pre-

HUSBAND DECEIVED
But Thanked His Wife Afterwards.

A man ought not to complain if his wife puts up a little job on him, when he finds out later that it was all on account of her love for him. Mighty few men would.

Sometimes a fellow gets so set in his habits that some sort of a ruse must be employed to get him to change, and if the habit, like excessive coffee drinking, is harmful, the end justifies the means—if not too severe. An Ills. woman says:

"My husband used coffee for 25 years, and almost every day.

"He had a sour stomach (dyspepsia) and a terrible pain across his kidneys a good deal of the time. This would often be so severe he could not straighten up. His complexion was a yellowish-brown color; the doctors said he had liver trouble.

"An awful headache would follow if he did not have his coffee at every meal, because he missed the drug.

"I tried to coax him to quit coffee, but he thought he could not do without it. Our little girl 3 years old sat by him at table and used to reach over and drink coffee from papa's cup. She got like her father—her kidneys began to trouble her.

"On account of the baby, I coaxed my husband to get a package of Postum. After the first time he drank it he had a headache and wanted his coffee. We had some coffee in the house, but I hid it and made Postum as strong as I could and he thought he was having his coffee and had no headaches.

"In one week after using Postum his color began to improve, his stomach got right, and the little girl's kidney trouble was soon all gone. My husband works hard, eats hearty and has no stomach or kidney trouble any more. After he had used Postum a month, without knowing it, I brought out the coffee. He told me to throw it away." THE CONVENTION---The Home Society

The sessions of the American Missionary Society were held on Tuesday and Wednesday morning. After a devotional service and the appointment of committees, G. A. Hoffman read his statistical report, the substance of which will be found on another page. G. W. Muckley followed with his statement of the work of the Board of Church Extension. This will be found elsewhere.

The fifty-sixth annual report of the Acting Board of Managers of the Home Society was presented by W. J. Wright. It referred to the special difficulties of the work due to the vacancy in the secretaryship for a portion of the time and to the great disaster in California. The total receipts were $103,647.34, surpassing last year's record by $3,324.31, and exceeding the best former year, 1903, by $1,201.24. A summary of the work showed that there were 373 missionaries employed, 100 of whom are supported by direct appropriations from the treasury and 273 by appropriations to the various state boards of missions; 116 churches were organized and 15,013 persons brought into the Church, of whom 8,273 were by baptism and 6.740 by commendation or statement. A summary of the work of all the state boards showed missionaries employed 598, baptisms 14,542, total additions 26,012, churches organized 166, amount raised for state missions $186.129.64. There was a gain of 158 schools remitting from Children's Day, the gain this year being $2,130.65. A number of the missions have become self supporting. Over $5,000 was given to help the brotherhood in San Francisco and towns affected by the earthquake and fire. The report spoke of the good work of Julius Stone among Scandinavians. The standing committee on evangelism expressed its encouragement in the work it is doing in making all churches evangelistic. The Home Board finds many new fields that ought to be entered. The calls for aid are numerous. Now is the formative period in many parts of our country and the needs are as appalling as the opportunities are great. The report referred to the clashing of offerings as the different days are now arranged, and recommended that a committee report upon a new and better scheme. The solution of deciding which places need immediate help, it said, is a five-fold greater fund, and for this fund a call was made to make the present year's offering greater than any that has ever been given.

There was perhaps little difference of opinion about the resolutions presented, as passd in the executive committee, and practically no discussion. It was resolved that a committee of three be appointed to consider a revision of the constitution; that a member of the Acting Board of Managers, removing from Cincinnati may have his traveling expenses paid by the board from points within Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky, should this be deemed wise; that it be recommended that the Board of Ministerial Relief employ a secretary for all his time, and that such other means be adopted as is necessary to present the work more fully to all the churches, with the hope that not less than $25,000 shall be raised next year; that a committee of three be appointed to ascertain whether the Board of Church Extension can legally continue its work should it separate itself from the American Christian Missionary Society, and, in the event that this should be found impracticable, ascertain whether the Board of Church Extension can be legally employed to execute all papers required in its work, said committee to report the result of its findings with recommendations to the American Christian Missionary Society Board at its next meeting; and, finally, that a large, impartial, representative and competent committee, whose task it shall be to consider faithfully all our organized interests, report at the next annual convention a new and better scheme of offerings, which, we hope, will hurt none; will, if possible, prove of advantage to all, but will at least help some of those which now suffer because of their poor location.

The first address was a strong one by E. F. Daugherty, of Wabash, Ind., its theme being "God's Purpose and Plan in Home Missions." We shall not attempt to give any outline of this speech, as we shall give it large space in a subsequent issue of The Christian-Evangelist. It was, by many, regarded as the speech of the convention. Brother Daugherty surprised those who were not familiar with his delivery by his virility, his magnetism, his fine voice and his dramatic power. The other speech of the morning was by Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, Ky., the theme being "Higher Ideals in Christian Stewardship." This address was a very admirable one, and we shall present it to our readers as soon as we can find space. It was the kind of speech that one styles classic. The report on union with the Free Baptists, which was prepared by Robert Moffett, was read by S. H. Bartlett. This will be found in its essence under Brother Moffett's own signature in our next issue.

S. T. Willis presided at the afternoon sesssion, when the subject of ministerial relief was at the forefront. The report of the boad was presented by A. L. Orcutt, its president. This showed in the general fund a total of $11,054.39 receipts, with $5,759.50 expended for ministerial relief, and a balance of $2,861.76. The receipts of the general fund stand at $29,245.07. There were 114 new churches and 72 new individual contributors last year. Eight churches gave $100 or more.

C. J. Tanner, of Detroit, Mich., made a very admirable plea on behalf of the old and sick preachers, under the title "The Oughtness of Ministerial Relief."

"Evangelism" was the theme of J. P. Lichtenberger, of New York City. It was a great address, broad in its scope, keen in its analysis and scintillating with bright and shrewd remarks. We trust that we may be able to present it in somewhat extended form in our columns for the benefit of the readers of The Christian-Evangelist.

It was decided that the place of the next meeting should be Norfolk, Va., New Orleans waiving its claims until the following year. The following officers were elected: President, George H. Combs, Kansas City; first vice-president, R. M. Miller, Buffalo; second vice-president, Vernon Stauffer, Angola, Ind.; third vice-president, E. W. Thornton, Long Beach, Cal.; recording secretaries, R. F. Thrapp, Jacksonville, Ill.; C. R. Hudson, Frankfort, Ky.; Charles Watson, Connellsville, Pa.; corresponding secretary, W. J. Wright, Cincinnati; treasurer, C. J. Neare, Cincinnati; field secretary, George B. Ranshaw, Cincinnati; statistician, G. A. Hoffman, St. Louis; superintendent of Christian Endeavor, Claude E. Hill, Mobile, Ala.; Acting Board of Managers, S. M. Cooper, H. T. Loomis, Benjamin Sebastian, Carey Morgan, H. C. Kendrick, R. W. Abberley, P. Y. Pendleton, C. J. Neare, A. M. Harvuot, Joseph Hagin. The superintendent of evangelism is to be chosen by the standing committee on evangelism, constituted as follows: H. O. Breeden, B. S. Denny, I. N. McCash, C. S. Medbury, H. E. Van Horn, G. B. Van Arsdall, Finis Idleman, Charles R. Scoville. Other committees are as last year.

In the evening a great audience listened with intense interest and pleasure to the speeches by C. S. Medbury, who spoke for Church Extension, and S. M. Cooper, who delivered his presidential address. The latter will be found slightly abbreviated in the present issue of The Christian-Evangelist. It was a worthy deliverance, and Brother Cooper rose in the estimation of many who have only known him as a business man with a clear head for business matters. A very pleasing and effective part of the program was the singing at this point by the Netz sisters of "O, My America," as they swung the stars and stripes to the time of the music.

"The Challenge of the Canadian Northwest" was the very striking title of a short address the following morning by Alexander McMillan, of Winnipeg, Manitoba. We still have a great west above the forty-ninth parallel, he told us, and Roman and Greek churches are contending for the mastery. Winnipeg, a city of 4,500 people four years ago, now has a population of 100,000. Over 57,000 Americans settled in the Canadian Northwest last year. He urged that home mission work be done there by the Disciples, and he made such an impression that the matter was recommended to the attention of the convention in one of the committee reports. There are, he informed us, about 12,000 Disciples and 50 preachers in that territory.

S. T. Willis, by chart and word of mouth, brought before the convention what he called "the greatest mission field in the world." It was within the Empire State, and the speaker divided his attention between New York and the Imperial City. The speech deserves greater space than we can give to it in this report. It was indeed a great mission field that the speaker presented. What was needed, he said, is sacrificing young men who will plant Sunday-schools and churches, burying themselves, if necessary.

The last address on the Home Society's program was by W. H. Sheffer, of Memphis, Tenn. It was a fine speech on "The America of the Future and Our Contribution to It," delivered in the style of the southern orator. We hope to publish the greater part, at least, of the speech.

The committee on recommendations reported (1) that the acting board should give immediate and favorable consideration to the claims of the Northwest; (2) that the request for a living link evangelist in Mississippi to be supported by offerings in that state be granted and the state work helped from the board's funds, if possible; (3) that the board assume the support of C. S. Osterhus in work among the Scandinavians, extend this as far as possible and inaugurate a work on far broader lines looking toward the evangelization of all foreign peoples within our borders; (4) that the board make effort to secure a special fund in behalf of San Francisco sufferers, and that funds used in building houses of worship be administered through the Board of Church Extension; (5) that a field secretary be employed whose special work it shall be to raise funds for the society.

The committee on the Centennial, through F. D. Power as spokesman, suggested as aims $250,000 for American missions by 1909, 1,000 evangelists in the field, 500 new churches organized and 300,000 converts, a contribution from every church and from every member of every church, and to this end it emphasized the spiritual edification of our people through the faithful proclamation, on the part of all our leaders and workers, not only of the first principles, but of the second principles of the Gospel of Christ.

The committee on time did not find itself unanimous. One member from the south urged that May or June was best. Another member suggested either the last of June, when preachers are leaving for their vacations, or the first week in September, when they are returning to their work. He contended that October is especially bad for business men, for teachers and even for preachers. Two members were satisfied with present conditions. This left it for the chairman of the committee to decide. He recognized the objections to the present month, but believed any other month would be open to objection. After considerable inquiry he found no decided trend of sentiment against October and gave his vote for no change.

The vote of the convention was to hold to October. W. T. Moore immediately moved that the question of time should be referred to the state conventions for careful consideration and that they should instruct the national convention. This was adopted unanimously.

The Foreign Society Session

The opening session of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society began on Monday morning in convention hall with devotions led by Miner Lee Bates, and prayer by Dr. E. I. Osgood, missionary in China. The appointment of committees followed.

This year the presentation of the report was divided between Secretaries Stephen A. Corey and F. M. Rains. It was Brother Corey's first year of work with the Foreign Society and he said it had been a very happy one. As we give this week in some fullness many of the striking points of the annual report, of which an abstract appeared in our last issue, we will not attempt to report here the speeches of Brother Corey or Brother Rains, but we must emphasize what Brother Corey regarded as one of the most noteworthy points in the work, which is the trend toward Christian union. A move is being consummated in union education work in China where it is almost certain that our college will unite with the Presbyterian college in Nanking. It is further proposed that the three missions in Nanking, the Christian, Presbyterian and Methodist, unite in building up a great university, each organization to have equal control in the teaching force. There will be perfect liberty for our instructors to teach as the Bible and conscience dictate. F. M. Rains, in speaking of finances, said that the society was very much encouraged. Yet he could not understand the fact that 700 churches have ceased to contribute. There are now seventy-two living link churches and it is hoped next year there will be 100.

Only one of the Foreign Society's missionaries died during the past year, it being T. J. Arnold, of China. Eleven new missionaries were sent to the field. The greatest need emphasized was buildings for hospitals and homes. Over $25,000 a month is required to meet the expenses of the society.

George H. Combs having offered prayer and the report having been referred to the proper committee, Wallace Tharp made a brief address on "The Lord Working With Them." The part of the text here quoted, he said, was the jewel, while the seven verses were the seven facets. "The go" is the center and circumference of all religious duty. This was the word spoken to Christ's disciples while to all the rest of the world he said "come." Christ worked with his disciples because they worked with him.

H. A. Denton, whose theme was "Our New Responsibilities," argued our new responsibilities from the following considerations: (1) new wealth and numbers; (2) new knowledge of the field; (3) our new constituency; (4) we must hold occupied territory by "helping the army up the hill;" (5) there is much land yet to be possessed; (6) the marvelous success of the Gospel bids us to enter the open doors; (7) homes and schools for the missionaries and their children is another question the church has to face; (8) we can not redeem those who have given their lives on the foreign field, but our responsibility is to make the country where they rest, Christian.

There followed what is usually one of the most interesting hours of the convention, that of the introduction of the men and women who have been on or are going to the foreign fields. President McLean introduced them one by one, stating briefly something of their character or work, and in a paternal kind of way indicating when it was time for them to take their seats. R. Ray Eldred, of Bolengi, Africa, reported that there had been sixteen more baptisms there; that Mrs. Dye had been confined to her bed for more than forty weeks, but still was able to do some effective work. He urged that the missionary work should not be considered as a sacrifice but as a glorious privilege. "People ask me if I am going back," he said. "Of course I am going back. I had rather die and be buried amid the pines of Bolengi than in any spot I have ever seen." Brother Eldred is a graduate of Kentucky University and has spent one term of service on the Congo. He has gone to the forest and cut down trees, and sawn them into boards. He has made brick with his own hands. Brother McLean says he has something of a Livingstone in his nature. David Rioch said that more workers were needed in India and that he knew of no greater miracle that the Lord had wrought than in the hearts of the orphan boys there. Mrs. Rioch brought a message from 163 of these who were members of the Christian Endeavor Society at Damoh, and sent their greetings. Brother Rioch was born in Canada and was educated in Butler College. He has been seven years in India. Mrs. Rioch was born in England, her maiden name being Minnie Henley. She took her medical degree in Indianapolis and has been most active and helpful in the work in India. Little David Rioch was introduced; though, as President McLean said, he is not on the staff as a paid worker, he is a missionary and speaks to the people by his life and through his lips. Miss Jessie Asbury sang "Now I lay me down to sleep" in Japanese. She hails from Augusta, Ky., but has been in Akita, Japan, for eight years. She teaches in the day and Sunday-school and works in the homes of the people. L. C. McPherson and Mrs. McPherson spoke of their work in Havana, Cuba, mentioning the increase in membership, interest and money raised. Miss Meldrum, who belongs to Buffalo, but has work in Havana, gave a bright little speech of which this quotation is a sample: "If I told you my mission in Cuba was to teach the young idea how to shoot, I might be charged with starting the revolution." Mrs. A. E. Cory spoke of the work in China and its need of more workers. She has been very near death's door, but her health has been restored and her joy is boundless in the thought of returning to her chosen work. Dr. E. I. Osgood, of Chu Cheo, China, spoke of the medical work in that land. China is open now as never before. Dr. Osgood does all sorts of things. He preaches and teaches and goes far and wide as a physician and surgeon. Mrs. Osgood is the daughter of O. G. Hertzog, of Hiram, O., and is a graduate of Hiram College. She was present, but though not afraid of a Chinese mob, she preferred not to face the convention. Dr. Osgood said he would rather be in Chu Cheo, a little mud thatched place, than in Washington, Cincinnati, or Des Moines. The missionaries, he said, were molding the nation. "We've got the greatest thing," he concluded. A. E. Cory spoke of the missionary propaganda in China and said that no man could estimate what the medical missionaries have done for that land. He gave a thrilling account of some of the results of Dr. Macklin's work which brought forth its fruit after fifteen years when the father of the patient who had been healed in the Nanking Hospital, met Dr. Macklin in another city, and falling at his feet sought to worship him. The missionaries of the C. W. B. M. were also introduced by President McLean, but did not speak.

The second session was opened with a devotional service led by Amos Tovell, of Canada, after which committee reports were presented, all of which were adopted.

Prof. T. C. Howe submitted that on missionary study courses. The basis of this was that an adequate knowledge of missionary fields and forces is absolutely necessary to the realization of the church's ideal. The report stated that since 1902, when the first volume of the Forward Mission Study series was published, a new epoch began in missions. Every year since, a book has been written by some specialist and studied by thousands. As a result there have been increased offerings for missions, the spirituality of the young people has been deepened. Best of all out of the mission study classes our young people are coming to bless the world through consecrated lives.

The committee recommend that every minister and every C. E. society be urged to organize and promote in every way missionary study classes; that the purchase of missionary books by church members be encouraged. The volume to be studied this year is Thoburn's "The Christian Conquest of India." After a commendation of the work of the F. C. M. S. the report recommended the preparation of a compendium, including all the missionary work of the Disciples of Christ.

The report of the Centennial committee was read by L. E. Sellers. It spoke of the things for which we had to rejoice, for the victories of the cross, for the spirit of Christian union and co-operation and for bright prospects. Our movement is essentially a missionary movement, it urged. It mentioned a few of the achievements of the society which has in its history expended three millions of dollars. Marvelous growth has been witnessed in recent years; the receipts have been doubled in seven years and more than trebled in ten years. The number of missionaries has more than doubled in ten years. In view of the Centennial three years hence the report recommended (1) that an endeavor be made to increase the annual offerings so that $500,000 shall be reported at the Centennial and be the basis for future development. (2) That endeavors be made to enlist 5,000 contributing schools by 1909. (3) That the 156 missionaries be increased in number by at least 100. (4) That the number of living links be increased and fifty wealthy individuals be secured to assume the entire support of a missionary, thus forming a group of living link individuals as well as living link schools and churches.

A. E. Cory read the report on open doors, for which we have not space here.

W. F. Richardson presented the following nominations brought in by the committee which were promptly accepted without any discussion whatever. A. McLean, president; B. C. Deweese, J. J. Spencer, G. A. Miller, W. S. Dickinson, J. L. Hill, A. B. Philputt, vice-presidents; Justin N. Green, recorder; M. Y. Cooper, auditor; F. M. Rains and Stephen J. Corey, secretaries; P. I. Kilgore, M. D., medical examiner.

The address of J. M. Philputt, of St. Louis, was, as its title, "Completing Christ's Suffering," would indicate, deeply spiritual, it being a fine plea for a reincarnation of the spirit of Calvary. We shall publish this address, which was listened to with the closest attention and will well repay perusal. On another page in this issue will be found the address of Cecil J. Armstrong, which, though of a different character, was certainly of a kind to help "the bump develop." The young Kentucky preacher captivated his audience.

A cablegram was read expressing the greetings of the Australian churches to the convention and George T. Walden, of Sydney, welcomed to the platform. He spoke of the value to the foreign missionary sentiment in Australia of the visits of the American brethren and said Australia expected to send over a large delegation to our Centennial celebration and would raise $20,000.

After F. M. Rains had explained the retirement of S. M. Cooper from the duties of treasurer he led a symposium on the taking of the March offering. S. E. Fisher said that the sermon before the offering must be well born of faith in God and faith in men. Speaking of the co-operation of the deacon J. E. Lynn said he must be (1) intelligent in missions, (2) enthusiastic, (3) of great boldness. Mark Collis considered the offering as an act of worship. We prepare for it by listening to the call of God through every week, he said, and without gifts, worship is in vain. J. Walter Carpenter was in favor of asking for a definite sum. We must not let the greatest business in the world go at loose ends. G. B. Van Arsdall insisting upon "getting something from every member," told how out of 450 churches in Iowa the 67 who gave to three of our missionary societies averaged 35 cents per member, while those who gave to two averaged 13 cents per member and those who gave to one only averaged 8 cents per member. G. B. Townsend thought that in order to have a worthier offering we must be led to the mountain top of vision, where we can see the great tribes and nations that know not God and through this realize that we must do our part if humanity is to be saved. T. P. Ullom said the preacher must have seen the Lord before he could have his rightful part in the offering. S. T. Willis, speaking for the preacher as a leader, said he must be (1) a student of missionary literature, the field and its needs and the Bible; (2) a man of prayer; (3) he must make an offering himself; (4) he must organize the forces, and bring to bear upon the people all he knows and feels out of his experiences. "No other offering" was the theme of P. H. Welshimer who said "lead all men to give if you can, compel them if you must." C. R. Hudson in suggesting how to take the offering mentioned a few "don'ts." Don't neglect the scattered disciples, don't apologize for the work of missions, don't pass the hat, don't have the organ play, were some of these.

It was a great audience that filled the hall in the evening. When the Foreign Society session was concluded, F. M. Rains made a brief statement about the special Centennial fund that is to be raised for land and buildings. "Let's haunt this brotherhood with that $250,000," he concluded. Round about the hall were banners and streamers with such "aims" as the following: "$10,000,000 Increase in Assets," "Every Preacher Preaching," "Every Preacher His Timothy," "50,000 Pittsburg, 1909," and "Every Church Its Mission. And in the course of the evening Dr. Peck, for the International Reform Bureau, was permitted to present a resolution urging that liquor be kept from the uncivilized races. "We keep out the liquors from this hall, let us enlarge our vision," was a statement that preceded the thunderous "Aye" of approval while one delegate added that he wished the resolution would take in the United States. No one from Cincinnati or representing the "rank and file" was heard to protest against this missionary convention "resoluting" upon the actions of foreign governments! Oh, what a surprise! The first speaker of the evening was W. W. Sniff, of Rushville, Ind., who made an inspiring address upon "Grounds for Encouragement." Delivered without a note, the speech was chaste in its diction, perfectly balanced and admirable in every way. Everywhere throughout the Scriptures, he said, the reign of God upon earth is set forth as sublimely triumphant. The enterprise of world-wide evangelism is sealed and sustained by divine authority and pervaded and guided by the unfailing divine presence. The best commentary on the Great Commission is found in the Acts of Apostles and the record of modern missions. In the last century the church has been returning to the purpose and plan of the Master for the salvation of the world. The church is again hearing above the confusion and distracting sounds of the world the great words on the Galilean Mount. As the Disciples of the Lord have gone forth in obedience, the signs have everywhere followed. All excluding barriers have yielded or are yielding to the message of light and love. The church of to-day has a missionary literature filled with the triumphs of missionary labors, which is bringing inspiration to the hearts of millions at home. Mission study is being taken up systematically in colleges and universities as well as churches. Yale University has established a new department of the theory and practice of missions. Young people as never before in the history of the church are committed and consecrated to the highest and best and many hearts are eager for missionary work. What we lack most of all is the grace of giving. But even in this there has been rapid growth. Encouraging signs are everywhere manifest. The sun is rising upon every dark land and no hand can bar the gates of the morning.

The second address was by W. F. Turner, of Joplin, Mo., and it is printed on another page. Brother Turner was quiet in his delivery, but he said things that reached their mark. J. A. Lord, editor of the "Christian Standard," followed, reading a rather lengthy address on "The Dignity of the Missionary Enterprise," and adding a peroration that was probably of the moment. A text was chosen: "And the word became flesh," etc. The incarnation, said the speaker, was as much a divine as a human necessity. The salvation from sin was the sublime end of God's intention through Christ and the complete ministry of Jesus will result in some way in a new heaven and a new earth. But now the redemption is fully in the hands of men. Every disciple must be a missionary. The hottest fires will be for an anti-missionary and traitorous church. The whole significance of Christ's life is missionary. The missionary enterprise gives true dignity to life; it is beyond all human speech and thought. The dignity of love, unselfishness and consecration is in Calvary.

GOLD NUGGETS.

From the Report of Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

Best Yet.—The thirty-first annual report is the best in history of society. Great advances made in foreign fields, and largest receipts at home.

Income.—The receipts amounted to $268,726, a gain of $12,804. The gain in regular receipts was $13,053.

Offerings.—The total number of offerings, including those from churches, Sunday-schools, Endeavor Societies and individuals, was 8,979, a gain of 232.

Churches.—Number contributing 3,178, a gain of 344, or more than 12 per cent. They gave $109,018, a gain of $13,517, or more than 14 per cent., the largest gain from the churches, as churches, in history of society. Churches averaged $31.11, and 928 reached their full apportionment. It is unfortunate that 697 churches which contributed in 1905 did not respond in 1906.

Living-Links.—Seventen new Living-Link churches enlisted past year. Present number Living-Link churches, 74.

Sunday-schools.—Number observing Children's Day, 3,638, gain of 86. Amount contributed, $66,809, gain of $4,992. Average offering, $18.33, and 1,483 reached Roll of Honor, a gain of 218. Begin preparations now for Children's Day, 1907.

Endeavor Societies.—Gave $12,007, gain of $1,134; number contributing, 969; gain, 169. They support the great orphanage work at Damoh, India. This orphanage is one of the bright stars in the black night of heathenism. Already 150 mission-study classes have been organized. Christian Endeavor Day is first Sunday in February.

Personal.—Gifts amount to $36,706; number of gifts, 1,198, which averaged $30.66. Received one gift of $10,000, another of $5,000. We ask friends of the work to send direct personal gifts.

Bequests.—Amount from this source, $7,662; gain, $2,563. A larger number of Christian people should remember Foreign Missions in their last will and testament.

Annuities.—About $250,000 has been received on the Annuity Plan since 1897. During the past year $22,012 was received. We are anxious to interest more people in this plan. Its advantages are: 1. Yields a large income. 2. The value of an annuity will not decline. 3. It continues uninterrupted. 4. There is no risk. Illustrated booklet explaining fully, sent on application.

New Missionaries.—Fourteen new missionaries were sent out during the past year. Many more are urgently needed.

Missionary Force.—The whole missionary force now numbers 487, a gain of 21, including 333 native evangelists and helpers.

Medical.—The society supports nineteen hospitals, and last year 90,333 patients were treated, a gain of 30,530. This is a marvelous work.

Educational.—Forty colleges and schools are supported, and the attendance last year was 2,225, and 79 of this number are preparing for the ministry.

Orphans.—The Foreign Society feeds and clothes and houses and educates about 400 orphans. This is a Christly work indeed.

Literature.—Much literature is written and translated and printed and distributed in the different tongues, where work is being done. This branch of the service needs to be enlarged.

Membership.—The membership in all the fields numbers 8,252. The number in the Sunday-schools is 8,831.

Contributions.—Contributions from all mission fields is $45,827.

Fees.—The medical fees received by our medical staff from natives and others amounted to $3,467, a loss of $756. School fees amounted to $2,836, a loss of $216. Total fees amounted to $6,303.

Great Work.—The above facts indicate that the Foreign Society is doing a great work indeed, in the regions beyond, a greater work than many suppose. The work is worthy of and demands the liberal support of members of the Christian church in all the world.

Whole Amount.—Received by this Society since its organization in 1875 is $2,768,799. This comparatively small amount has accomplished wonders in planting the Gospel in fields where it had never before been heard.

Enlargement.—What is now needed is a great enlargement in every direction—more missionaries more native evangelists, more schools and hospitals, more churches and a large number of new stations. To this end the churches should give larger amounts, more churches and Sunday-schools should be enlisted, and a larger number of personal friends should remember the work.

Centennial Fund.—We want to raise a special Centennial Fund of $250,000 by personal gifts by 1909, to be used in buying land and erecting buildings on the mission fields. Your personal offering is solicited. With $1,000 or more we can erect memorial building. Correspondence is solicited.

Payments.—Last year the payments of the Foreign Society reached the great sum of $278,042, the largest by far in our history, and $9,316 more than the receipts.

Offerings.—The time for the offerings is as follows:

Endeavor Societies,	First Sunday in February.
Churches,	First Sunday in March.
Sunday-schools,	First Sunday in June.
Individual gifts,	Every day in the year.

Leading States.—Missouri leads in number of contributing churches, 332; Ohio next, 329; Illinois and Indiana next, 322 each. Kentucky leads in offerings from churches as churches, $14,065; Ohio next, $12,318; Illinois next, $10,875. Illinois leads in number of contributing Sunday-schools, 430; Indiana next, 400; Ohio next, 383. Ohio leads in amount contributed by Sunday-schools, $10,369; Illinois next, $7,701; Indiana next, $6,970. Ohio leads in total amount given from all sources, $34,200; Indiana next, $25,591; Kentucky next, $23,080; Illinois next, $21,577.

Communion Service.

The united communion service was held in convention hall and never before had Buffalo seen its like. About 5,000 people partook of the emblems which were passed by 120 deacons. Favorite devotional and communion hymns were sung by the congregation and large chorus, lead by W. E. M. Hackleman, with fine judgment. R. H. Miller, chairman of the local executive committee, and S. M. Cooper came to the platform promptly at 3 o'clock and the former asked the congregation to unite in repeating the twenty-third Psalm. After a song by the Netz sisters W. T. Moore, who presided at the center table, was called on to give thanks for the loaf. There was no confusion at all and the large concourse was served with celerity and quietness. Prof. C. L. Loos gave thanks for the cup. A. L. Orcutt made the plea for the aged and infirm ministers and the collection amounted to $526.86. J. B. Briney pronounced the benediction.

The Affiliated Interests

The Wednesday afternoon sessions were of the most interesting of the entire convention, and the attendance was as large as at any save the night meetings. Charles S. Medbury, of Des Moines, ably presided. The devotional services were conducted by T. E. Cramblet, of Bethany. President W. H. McClain presented the annual report of the National Bible School Association, and E. B. Bagby, of the Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, delivered an eloquent plea in behalf of the schools. He presented statistics showing that a large percentage of the new additions to the churches come from the Bible schools, and urged the institution of mission schools in city and country as most helpful to the up-building of the churches. During this Bible school period a great and rapidly growing interest in our Sunday-schools throughout the entire brotherhood was very manifest.

General Secretary J. H. Mohorter made the annual report for our Benevolent Association. The receipts were nearly $92,000, being a very substantial increase over any previous year in the history of the association. He presented for the ratification of the convention a resolution adopted by the Central Board of the association looking to the removal of any friction between the Benevolent Association and the C. W. B. M. over their conflicting claims to the celebration of Easter and the accompanying offerings. It provided that the offerings for next Easter collected from the Bible schools and Junior Endeavor societies should be equally divided between the two organizations and that this arrangement should continue until the committee appointed by the American Christian Missionary Society to secure a better adjustment of days between the various interests of the church should make its report. The resolution further provided that the C. W. B. M. should use its influence in securing for the association a regular and generally recognized day for the presentation of its claims to the churches and receiving of gifts for the prosecution of its ministry. This resolution was unanimously adopted by the convention.

President J. Hopwood, of Lynchburg, Va., gave an able address, setting forth the value of Christian education to the proper development of this Restoration movement. He was followed by President C. C. Rowlison, of Hiram, who referred very feelingly to the sacrifices that have been made for the advancement of education among the Disciples of Christ and especially for the sake of an educated ministry. He declared that not all the martyrs were in foreign fields, but that men who, like W. E. Garrison, of Butler, and Burris A. Jenkins, of Lexington, had sacrificed health and strength for the sake of Christian scholarship, were as truly heroic as those practicing self-abnegation in foreign lands. This sentiment was heartily endorsed by his hearers.

In the absence of President J. H. Allen and Secretary J. W. Henry, of the Business Men's Association, George L. Snively directed its part of the program. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, J. H. Allen; vice-president, F. E. Udell; secretary, W. Davis Pittman; treasurer, S. H. Thomson; auditor, S. B. Sala. F. E. Udell, of St. Louis, made a brief but telling appeal to men to be as loyal to heaven as to their business. A general discussion as to the value and ministry of this association was very spirited and helpful; it was the general opinion that the best interests of the churches of Christ demand a thorough organization of its work and its perpetuation. During this session occurred one of the most touching incidents of the entire convention. The venerable A. B. Teachout, of Cleveland, more than 90 years of age, who has given fortunes to the church, gave a brief address heard throughout the hall, in which he urged all business men to make it an inviolable rule to deal fairly with the Lord in all their business enterprises and to give generously for the extension of the Kingdom and the exaltation of the King. He announced this to be the last convention he would attend, and as he gave the few parting words of counsel and encouragement every eye was suffused with tears.

The convention was brought to a close on Wednesday evening, when there was another fine session, the speakers being F. D. Power, on behalf of benevolence, and W. R. Warren, for the Centennial Committee. The report of this committee will be found on page 1355.

Church Extension

The report presented by George W. Muckley showed that the total receipts through the corresponding secretary were $61,113.87, a gain of $14,459, while the treasurer's receipts were $103,205.55 from returned loans, making a grand total of $164,319.42. The statement showed the total amount, including the Logan fund to be $588,882.28 with 1,022 churches added since the beginning. The board has paid or closed 92 loans during the year, aggregating $114,840. In addition to this, 59 congregations have been promised help to the amount of $83,100. During the year $99,640.13 has been paid in interest and returned principal. Eighty congregations have paid their loans in full. The total amount which these missions have paid in returned loans and interest since the organization of this work is $577,301.64. Of 190 requests on file Mr. Muckley stated that eight were from one of our oldest states—Kentucky. Seven new named funds were added, making twenty in all, and there have been 178 gifts in the annuity plan, amounting to $194,434.14. In the course of the convention Brother Muckley received a letter from George F. Rand, one of our wealthy brethren at Buffalo, stating that he would pay $5,000 to the name loan fund. Brother Rand was already a contributor to the general funds.

The Church Extension speech was a thrilling one by Charles S. Medbury. His subject was, "Loyalty to the Loyal," and the address was a plea for a recognition of the character worth of congregations who are pleading for the help of the general brotherhood that they may build church homes. It was a great speech, delivered with an abandon that sacrificed no dignity, but thrilled every hearer. He emphasized in the first place, the fact that these scattered Disciples are loyal in general lines of righteousness. New standards of life have not won them from old moorings of faith. In the second place, he spoke of the loyalty of these struggling bands to the distinctive things for which the Church of Christ

INTERESTING CONTEST
Heavy Cost of Unpaid Postage.

One of the most curious contests ever before the public was conducted by many thousand persons under the offer of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., of Battle Creek, Mich., for prizes of 31 boxes of gold and 300 greenbacks to those making the most words out of the letters Y-I-O-Grape-Nuts.

The contest was started in February, 1906, and it was arranged to have the prizes awarded on Apr. 30, 1906.

When the public announcement appeared many persons began to form the words from these letters, sometimes the whole family being occupied evenings, a combination of amusement and education.

After a while the lists began to come in to the Postum Office and before long the volume grew until it required wagons to carry the mail. Many of the contestants were thoughtless enough to send their lists with insufficient postage and for a period it cost the Company from twenty-five to fifty-eight and sixty dollars a day to pay the unpaid postage.

Young ladies, generally those who had graduated from the high school, were employed to examine these lists and count the correct words. Webster's Dictionary was the standard and each list was very carefully corrected except those which fell below 8000 for it soon became clear that nothing below that could win. Some of the lists required the work of a young lady for a solid week on each individual list. The work was done very carefully and accurately but the Company had no idea, at the time the offer was made, that the people would respond so generally and they were compelled to fill every available space in the offices with these young lady examiners, and notwithstanding they worked steadily, it was impossible to complete the examination until Sept. 29, over six months after the prizes should have been awarded.

This delay caused a great many inquiries and naturally created some dissatisfaction. It has been thought best to make this report in practically all of the newspapers in the United States and many of the magazines in order to make clear to the people the conditions of the contest.

Many lists contained enormous numbers of words which, under the rules, had to be eliminated. "Pegger" would count "Peggers" would not. Some lists contained over 50,000 words, the great majority of which were cut out. The largest lists were checked over two, and in some cases, three times to insure accuracy.

The $100.00 gold prize was won by L. D. Reese, 1227-15th St., Denver, Colo., with 9941 correct words. The highest $10.00 gold prize went to S. K. Fraser, Lincoln, Pa., with 9921 correct words.

A complete list of the 331 winners with their home addresses will be sent to any contestant enquiring on a postal card.

Be sure and give name and address clearly.

This contest has cost the Co. many thousand dollars, and probably has not been a profitable advertisement, nevertheless perhaps some who had never before tried Grape Nuts food have been interested in the contest, and from trial of the food have been shown its wonderful rebuilding powers.

It teaches in a practical manner that scientifically gathered food elements can be selected from the field grains, which nature will use for rebuilding the nerve centers and brain in a way that is unmistakable to users of Grape-Nuts.

Statistical Report By G. A. Hoffmann

In securing church statistics, we have great difficulties; (1) Because many of our church clerks keep a very poor record of their membership. (2) Many of our church boards are indifferent to the importance of statistical information and therefore do not instruct their church clerks to make the proper reports. (3) There is no pay to anyone for this work. (4) It often requires from five to ten years for a new state secretary to secure sufficient experience to properly supervise the reports he receives from churches, counties, or districts in his state.

Our instructions to state secretaries are, "Where there is no local organization between churches secure statistics direct from the congregation. Where there is city organization secure your reports from this organization for that city. Where there is county or district organization secure your reports through these organizations wherever it is possible, and whenever it can be done have these reports published through these local organizations in connection with their annual minutes. In states where reports are not so published print them in connection with the state minutes." These published reports serve as a correction to any error that may be made. In a number of states these instructions are followed and accurate results are secured.

As there is some question also as to the comparative growth of the Disciples of Christ, I have prepared a table for your perusal on this question. The presentation of our statistical tables has not always satisfied all of our brotherhood at all times, and your secretary is not at all surprised at this. The table that I wish to bring before you shows the number of communicants in the various religious bodies in the years of 1890 and 1905 together with the gain percentage of each body. It must not be forgotten when we compare the Disciples of Christ with others that their gains over and beyond all others are being made without close national organization and with a great lack of funds to aid young men in their preparation for the ministry as well as properly endowed colleges for this purpose. In addition, there is no foreign immigration to swell the ranks of the Disciples of Christ.

Baptists (13 bodies)	3,594,093	4,974,047	38

Unitarians	67,749	71,000	6
Universalists	49,224	53,641	9

As much is said about the growth of the Universalists and the Unitarians we thought it well to add them although neither have 100.000 members. In fact their membership in 1830, seventy-five years ago, was nearly as large as it is now. The six great bodies which have over a million members each show gains as follows: Disciples of Christ, 94 per cent; Roman Catholics, 73 per cent; Lutherans, 51 per cent; Methodists, 40 per cent; Baptists, 38 per cent; and Presbyterians, 35 per cent. It will be noticed that there is but little difference in the growth of the denominations of Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians. The Disciples of Christ show more than double the gains of these bodies. The Lutherans gain more rapidly than the three mentioned above. Their gains have come largely from Germany, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, together with their children, who remain in the faith. They have but few additions from conversions. The Roman Catholics, of course have their gains from foreign immigration. Nearly two-thirds of the immigrants who land on our shores at the present time are Catholics. If all of these who have landed on the shores of the United States had remained Catholics and their descendants had remained in the faith we should now have at least 30,000,000 inhabitants of the Catholic faith, and possibly more.

In regard to the statistics of the Disciples of Christ I would say that there are thousands of members outside of our church organization and even in the church membership of denominations who were turned to God under the preaching of our ministry and for a time were in fellowship in one of the Churches of Christ who firmly believe with us in all essentials but for various causes, which seem sufficient to them, are now worshiping with others or have become non-affiliated in church work.

The great need is more ministers to shepherd our smaller or weaker churches. Men who will be willing to labor and live in our country and village churches. Our schools are doing well for their opportunities but their financial basis is insufficient to render aid to many young men who would cheerfully preach the Gospel if they could secure the proper training.

Allow me again to present to you our most remarkable growth of the past century, brought down to 1905:

1850	118,000
1860	225,000
1870	350,000
1880	473,000
1890	641,000
1900	1,025,000
1905	1,242,000

The growth in some departments of the church has even been more surprising than the gains in members.

	1890	1895	1900	1905
Churches	8,096	9,169	10,101	11,110
Ministers	4,039	4,929	5,737	6,675
Members	641,000	889,019	1,120,000	1,242,690
Students studying for ministry	468	690	807	1,017
Amounts contributed to National Missionary Societies	$146,343	$208,616	$413,641	$628,310

Whole No. of churches contributing to missions	2,764	4,764	5,556	6,415

*Partly estimated.

Bear in mind that this table represents the growth of fifteen years only. Reliable statistics back of 1890 in a good portion of this table could not be secured. There is one thing in connection with this table, the very work, that is, national missionary organization, of which we were most fearful, has prospered and gained most rapidly. Here is a multiplication of nearly 350 per cent in the receipts of the treasury in fifteen years. In these reports we only count funds actually received and expended by the treasury of our national societies.

Another interesting thing is the comparative growth in different parts of our country known as our missionary fields. Frequent appeals come to the American Christian Missionary Society with more or less urgency and all claiming to be the field which will return the greatest results for our Master's kingdom for the labor expended. I have made three groups of the states in which our cause is not strong and present to you the membership, growth, and gain for ten years. The eastern group includes District of Columbia, Maryland, and West Virginia, thirteen states in all. The South-Eastern group includes Virginia, Tennessee, Louisiana, etc., nine states in all. The western group includes all prairie, mountain, and Pacific states, except Texas, west of the Missouri or Kansas City, seventeen in number. None of the central states, with large memberships, are included.

	1896	1906	Gain.	P.C.Gain.
Eastern Group	42,307	66,090	23,183	55
So. East. Group	112,581	132,683	20,101	18
Western Group	116,900	162,076	45,176	40

Do not forget that this table represents a ten years' gain in these several sections. Although the gains in Delaware, New Jersey and six New England states are comparatively nothing, the other four, including the District of Columbia, have made very large gains. Our membership and churches in these states, while few in proportion to their immense population, are among the most vigorous in the brotherhood. While the south-eastern states have made only 18 per cent gain in the ten years indicated there is good growth in some parts of them. But taken together these districts show the least activity and the smallest gains of any great district among us. The great western field, comprising over one-third of the territory of the United States, has made a considerable but not nearly so large a gain as the emigration of our people to that part of the country would indicate. Our losses in the far west are simply enormous. Our American Christian Missionary Society is without the means to answer the calls of this great field and in all this immense territory there are but three feeble efforts made as yet to educate young men for the Christian ministry; one in Oregon, one in California, and the other at Bethany, Nebraska. These schools report seventy-one students studying for the Christian ministry where there should be not less than four hundred to properly supply the needs of this great field. It is sad to think that hundreds of inviting opportunities to build up splendid churches are perishing before our eyes on account of lack of means to answer these calls of our Master.

The year just closing has in some respects, made an excellent record. It has been remarkable for the large gains in many larger towns and cities and the quietness in many of the country churches. Could we have gained alike in the country churches as well as the town churches, we could report one of the largest gains in our history. Where large gains are reported we generally find upon examination an efficient and active ministry. Our ministry among and for the country churches is passing away.

Our gain in membership at the present time is a little below three per cent per annum. The increase of the churches is about one and one-half per cent. While this growth is greater than the average Protestant religious body in the United States it is not as large as it might be.

Our Budget

—Here's a glimpse of the Buffalo convention.

—There will be more to follow. It was too big to report in one number.

—Read these addresses carefully and catch the spirit of the convention.

—Now begin to get ready to go to Norfolk next year to take in the convention and the Jamestown exposition.

—We are having trouble to get enough CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS printed to supply the demand for extra copies.

—All hands around now for the greatest autumn and winter's work in our history. Simultaneous meetings in St. Louis begin November 4.

—State mission offerings November 4.

—We regret very much that we were unable to supply the demand for our "Alexander Campbell Pictorial Number." A large number of copies were printed with the expectation that the brotherhood would want them, but we entirely underestimated the demand. We could easily have used 5,000 or 6,000 more copies than our presses printed. We are still receiving requests for this number. We are very glad to see this interest in things historical that pertain to the origin of our reformatory movement, and we regret that brethren did not pay attention to our warning and order in advance, as we suggested they should. From one quarter alone came a demand for 1,000 copies, when we had not a single copy available. Had this good brother expressed an interest in the matter before we went to press we might have been able to run off the extra number of copies he desired. We have so much printing and so many papers to get out that careful computation has to be made in order to get out the different editions so as to reach their various destinations on time. It is not possible, therefore, for us to get out second editions or else we would be glad to print copies and to supply the great demand which we have had for this Campbell number. We trust that all who sent money for copies we were not able to supply have received this back again.

—As we have already indicated we have other interesting articles and pictures relating to the life of Mr. Campbell and his associates which we hope to publish as we shall find opportunity.

—The picture of Mr. Campbell at the lower right hand corner of page 1295 in our recent issue is, we learn from W. B. Taylor, of Moberly, Mo., taken from a daguerreotype made in Versailles, Ky., about 1853. Our house of worship there was completed in that year and Mr. Campbell preached the opening sermon. The picture was taken by Brother Benjamin Duvall and his daughter gave it to Brother Taylor a few years ago. It appeared first in F. D. Power's "Life of Pendleton."

—The largest single church delegation was, perhaps, from Uhrichsville, O.—thirty-two all told.

—It was announced during the Christian Endeavor session of the convention that the church at Summerside, Prince Edward Island, which is the home church of President A. McLean and several other preachers, had been burned in a fire that destroyed a large part of the town. A collection was immediately taken amounting to nearly $250, and at a subsequent session it was suggested that the church should be rebuilt as a memorial to Brother McLean, and that he should receive subscriptions for this purpose. We trust that the necessary money will be forthcoming at once.

—Referring to the article by C. C. Redgrave, in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I. J. Spencer writes us that it is true that the old church edifice in which was held the Campbell and Rice debate was for a time "used for political meetings and cheap theatrical performances," but two years ago one of the most attractive structures in Lexington was erected on the general location of the old church property. The exact spot where the old church building stood is now the central part of the front yards of the new depot, and it is to be ornamented with grass, flowers and trees, and is to be made a beautiful garden in the heart of the business section, and, as Brother Spencer says, no worthier or more monumental use of the old historic site could be desired.

—A new secretary of Christian Endeavor was elected at the convention, Claude E. Hill, of Mobile, Ala., being chosen. Brother Hill promised to send us a report of this session, but this and much other matter relating to the convention must be reserved for another issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—A. C. Corben writes that he is greatly pleased with the brethren at Dallas, Ore., where he has just located.

—M. L. Anthony has been holding a meeting at Scottville, Ill., which was one of his first charges some thirty years ago.

—A pastor is to be located for full time at Putnam, Ill., as a result of a meeting held by J. E. Parker. This is an old and influential church.

—J. M. Settle, of New Franklin, Mo., writes us that the church there desires to get in touch with a good preacher who may succeed A. M. Lindsey.

—The church at Rensselaer, Ind., is in good condition for the meeting which Allen Wilson and his singer, Brother Lintt, are to hold in December.

—Lowell C. McPherson and wife, who recently resigned their work as missionaries to Cuba, have accepted a call to minister with the church at Wellsville, N. Y.

—Brother Haile, of Fort Worth, Texas, has just entered upon the pastorate at South Chicago. This results from the meeting just held by H. E. Wilhite, who is now at Downs, Kan.

—F. T. Porter, minister of the Park Church, New Albany, Ind., writes us that an $1,800 pipe organ will be installed there before the special meetings in November, to be led by W. M. Gard.

—We regret to learn from a brief note that Mrs. C. S. Reinhart, well known in the church work of Oregon and Washington, died at her home in Olympia, Washington, October 3.

—N. H. Brooks takes up the work of state evangelist for Washington and George A. Webb and wife, singing evangelists, who have been working with him, go to Red Bluff, Cal., to assist S. M. Martin.

—W. G. Herne, pastor at Eldorado Springs, Mo., writes very enthusiastically of Brother Sterling, of Warrensburg, who has just held a meeting for him. Brother Herne will continue in his pastorate at least another year.

—J. L. Thompson, writing of the meeting now being conducted at Blue Mound, Ill., by W. H. Harding and his faithful co-laborers, says that Brother Harding deserves much credit for the handsome new building recently dedicated.

—Guy Hoover is doing a good work at West Pullman, Chicago, while studying at the Chicago University. The accumulated interest and $500 of the principal of the church debt has been raised and paid during the past year.

—The church at Grand Island, Neb., is making an effort to pay off the indebtedness of about $400 and improve the church property. James R. McIntire, pastor, writes that he hopes soon to organize a large class for Bible study.

—J. D. Lawrence, of Muncie, Ind., is ready to hold meetings anywhere east of the Mississippi River. Brother Lawrence is a good worker and a consecrated man. He is especially suited for churches in the country districts. We can commend him as a faithful servant of the Master.

—J. D. Nance, New Albany, Ind., writes that he is passing through the deep waters of affliction, having lost his beloved wife who departed this life Sunday morning, Oct. 14. Brother Nance and his two daughters have our sincere sympathy in their great bereavement of a wife and mother.

STATISTICAL REPORT.

At the close of the year on September 30, the reports received indicated that our statistics stand as follows:

	1905	1906
Churches	11,110	11,198
Communicants	1,238,515	1,269,591
Bible schools	8,761	8,952
Enrolled in Bible schools	850,500	870,622
Ministers	6,675
Gain in membership for 1906		31,076

The following table shows a gain in missionary receipts of $60,982. This is a most important gain, being about 7 per cent.

MISSIONARY RECEIPTS.

Foreign Christian Missionary Society	$ 268,727
Christian Women's Board of Missions	206,553
American Christian Missionary Society	103,415
Board of Church Extension	85,597
State and District Missions	241,217
Miscellaneous Missions	30,000
Total	$935,509

EDUCATION AND BENEVOLENCE.

Buildings and Endowments of Schools	$ 375,000
National Benevolent Association	91,795
Ministerial Relief	22,750
Kentucky Widows' and Orphans' Home	10,000
Total	$499,545

LOCAL CHURCH WORK.

Ministerial Support	$4,475,000
Incidental Church expenses	1,100,000
Church Buildings	750,000
Church and Bible school literature	350,000
Total	$6,575,000
Grand total	$8,010,054

Another year's gain like the present will bring our missionary receipts up to $1,000,000. Our motto, however, should be $1,500,000 for missions and 1,500,000 of Disciples by 1909. Not more than one-half the churches make an offering and not more than one-half of the membership participate where the offering is taken.

Our schools are prospering and gathering strength from year to year. We have sixteen colleges and universities in which young men are being trained for the Christian ministry. We also have seven Bible Chairs or schools doing excellent mission work in connection with state universities.

The future outlook for our Master's kingdom is full of hope. Taking the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma we find that the Disciples of Christ are the strongest religious force in these states when taken together. This is the heart of the nation, through which the mighty arteries of commerce are flowing.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY,
Y. M. C. A. BUILDING,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—It has been a good year with the Hyde Park Church, Kansas City. Louis S. Cupp's first anniversary as pastor has just been celebrated, and on that occasion there were 374 persons in the Bible school. The year closed with eighty-five additions at regular services and about $3,000 raised for all purposes.

—George A. Miller has been wooed away from Covington, Ky., where he has been pastor, we believe, for eleven years, to accept a call from the Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C., which it will be remembered, was the one for which E. B. Bagby preached so long. Brother Miller will enter upon his new field January 1, 1907.

—W. A. Morrison is in a meeting at Potwin, Kan., where Oscar Hunsaker is pastor. The latter will preach on Sunday at McPherson during this meeting. The church at the latter place raised its apportionment for Church Extension. Brother Morrison will hold a meeting at Groveland during November. This is a newly organized church.

—Cephas Shelburne preached at Wabash and Anderson, Ind., while T. W. Grafton and E. F. Daugherty were at the convention. He says: "These are great churches, and audiences of one thousand people, four hundred of them men, greeted me at Anderson. The interest and enthusiasm created by the Scoville meeting still keeps up."

—H. J. Corwine has resigned his work at California, Mo., to accept a call to Bartlesville, I. T., where he expects to go November 1. Brother Corwine has rendered most useful service for the church in California and the churches thereabouts, and he will be a source of strength to our growing cause in the new state of Oklahoma.

—Otto Shirley, Burton, Kan., will be assisted in a meeting to begin October 28, by Evangelist David Lyon. These brethren see the advantage of using Christian literature as an aid to their pastoral and evangelistic work, and 300 CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS will be circulated in the town where they are calculated to do most good. We hear nothing but good reports from preachers who are using a high-toned religious paper to aid their own earnest efforts.

—Alva W. Taylor recently entered upon the fifth year of his pastorate of our church at Eureka, Ill. During the four years there were baptized about 100, while 300 were received into the church. There was a net gain of about fifty, more letters having been granted than received. There was raised for all purposes about $23,000, $8,000 being given to missions. Brother Taylor is a man of lovable character and well fitted for the work of the ministry.

—W. L. Harris, who has just been holding a meeting for C. C. Taylor at Hale, Mo., says he never found a more devoted or heroic band than at this place. There are six preachers living there who do not believe in the use of the organ and the "anti" church is stronger than those who are allied with our own organized efforts; yet harmony and love prevailed during the meeting and a new and beautiful church has been built and paid for by those who believe in a more progressive policy.

—L. C. Howe, Newcastle, Ind., is not only an effective pastor but one who believes in the mission of good literature. He recently took a personal interest in helping THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S agent in putting 106 copies of our paper into the hands of his church members. Brother Howe will get good returns from this investment for he will have a more intelligent congregation, one who can appreciate the good things he may bring to them, and one that will be alive to the great things that are being done by our brotherhood.

—J. Q. Biggs has been asked by a unanimous vote to remain with our church at Buffalo, Mo. We had the pleasure of visiting this church some time ago and were delighted to find what a hold Brother Biggs has upon the young people. During the past year he has organized a prayer-meeting and Ladies' Aid Society, the Sunday-school has grown from an average of fifty to 100 and collections of the church amounted to $1,700, the amount for missions being four times as much as that given the previous year. A meeting will be held in November, with H. E. Wilhite and wife assisting.

—R. H. Lampkin delivered his sermon on "Tithing" to several of our churches in Buffalo and neighborhood during the convention season. We hear the address very well spoken of and we have not a doubt but that could Brother Lampkin be secured to give this address in our churches all over the country it would be productive of very much good in the settling of financial questions. Brother Lampkin's address is Dexter, Mo. He has a very admirable book on this subject which is published by the Christian Publishing Company.

HYGIENIC UNDERWEAR

A New Popular Priced Undergarment That is Having a Remarkable Sale.

Hygienic underwear at a popular price is something entirely new—heretofore such a garment sold at $1.50 and upwards. Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece Underwear is made by a patented machine which makes it possible to sell a high-grade underwear at 50 cents. This low price combined with the hygienic value, perfect fit and superior quality of Vellastic Underwear has created such a demand that the mills find it hard to keep pace.

Vellastic Underwear is an elastic ribbed garment with a soft downy fleece next the skin. The elasticity of the rib allows perfect fit and comfort, while the fleece keeps the body warm and allows perfect ventilation. Vellastic Underwear will not shrink, nor will the fleece bunch or mat.

Prices: Men's and women's garments, 50c. Ladies' Union Suits, $1.00 each. Children's union suits at 50c; two piece suits at 25c a garment.

The trade mark, Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece, is sewed on every garment. If not at your dealer's, write us, giving us his name. Booklet and sample of fabric free.

—Several weeks ago we made reference to the good work at Maplewood, Mo., since F. A. Mayhall entered upon the pastorate. At the very outset of his work he stated that he hoped to see all the past indebtedness paid, the church decorated and the church membership doubled during the coming year. R. A. Swink, chairman of the board, writes us that in less than three months from that time $1,300 have been raised and all the past indebtedness paid. The Sunday-school pledged itself to decorate the interior of the church and in eleven weeks raised the $140 necessary for this purpose. A resolution was passed by the congregation at a recent Lord's day service, expressing the church's great satisfaction with the work of their new pastor. Surely this is an encouragement to other churches, and an emphatic comment on what can be done when harmony rules in a congregation.

FROM THE MOMENT OF BIRTH

Mothers Should Use Cuticura Soap, the World's Favorite for Baby's Skin, Scalp, Hair and Hands.

Mothers are assured of the absolute purity and unfailing efficacy of Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, and purest of emollients, in the preservation and purification of the skin, scalp, hair, and hands of infants and children. For baby humors, eczemas, rashes, itchings, and chafings, as a mother's remedy for annoying irritations and ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery, Cuticura Soap and Ointment are priceless.

The Cough of Consumption

Your doctor will tell you that fresh air and good food are the real cures for consumption. But often the cough is very hard. Hence, we suggest you ask him about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

We publish the formulas of all our preparations.

J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

—J. H. Smart closed his pastorate with the First Church of Christ, Danville, Ill., the end of September, having served just twenty-nine months. He reports the field a difficult one, on account of local causes, despite which Brother Smart accomplished some excellent work. All the societies were largely increased, but the prayer-meeting was not a great success. An old indebtedness of more than $600 was paid, a $600 mortgage with interest and taxes were paid, a $2,500 pipe organ installed and paid for, and 206 additions to the church were gained, while the missionary offerings were increased. Brother Smart leaves the church in better shape for aggressive work and hopes his successor, M. B. Ainsworth, will lead the church on to greater success. The address of Brother and Sister Smart is now 2096 North Union street, Decatur, Ill., where they will be pleased to see their friends. We believe that it will give our good brother pleasure to do some evangelistic work or to serve churches in the neighborhood in such ways as he can.

Constipation—Its Cause and Cure.

A person in order to be healthy must get rid of the waste products (or poisons) of the body. Nature has provided three ways to get rid of them: The Bowels, the Kidneys, and the pores of the Skin.

If the Bowels become inactive, that portion of the food which should be thrown off lies in the intestines and decomposes, causing Blood, Nerve, Liver and Kidney Trouble, and closes the pores of the skin, thus creating disease in the entire system.

You can quickly relieve and permanently cure yourself of stubborn Constipation of distressing Stomach Trouble and perfectly regulate your Kidneys and Liver by taking one dose a day of Drake's Palmetto Wine, a purely vegetable compound. Any reader of this paper can secure a bottle absolutely free by writing to Drake Co., 312 Drake Bldg., Wheeling, W. Va.

A free test bottle alone has brought health and vigor to many, so you owe it to yourself to prove what it will do in your case.

Write the company this very day.

—Replying last week to a statement of the "Christian Courier" that while the Revised Version had rendered eis by into, in Matt. 28:19 (baptizing them into, etc.), the American Revised Bible had gone back to in, we stated that this was not the case in the American Revised Bible which we were using and which this House was selling. This is true, but we find on examination that an edition of the American Revised Bible in 1900, does contain the rendering in; but "the Standard Edition" of 1901, has into in the passage mentioned. The former must have been a typographical error. In buying the American Revised Bible see that you get the Standard Edition.

—Edward Tilburn has just begun his second year with the church at Mishawaka, Ind. During the past year there were 121 accessions to the church, with a net increase of 104. Over $3,160 were reported from all departments of the work, $275 being contributed for missions. The Sunday-school has trebled and the Christian Endeavor doubled its membership. Many improvements have been made in the church building and arrangements made to pay the debt which has been hanging for ten years on the church. The annual evangelistic season will commence December 31, with W. E. M. Hackleman conducting the music. Brother Tilburn begins his second year with an increase in salary.

—The congregation at Mt. Sterling, Ill., having outgrown their building, have recently expended some $3,300 for an addition and repairs. This work was accomplished under the enthusiastic leadership of J. L. Lorton. The dedication was held on October 14, and Russell F. Thrapp, of Jacksonville, who spent the day with the Mt. Sterling brethren writes us that enough money was raised to wipe out all indebtedness and have enough left over to finish the basement. The Bible school at Mt. Sterling which is led by Edward E. Clark, is the largest in the country.

—The lot which was purchased for the First Christian Church, Oakland, Cal., about a year ago as a site for a new church home has recently been sold at an advance of more than double the price originally paid, which was $12,250. Another lot has just been purchased for $18,000 just a block to the north of the former one and the difference of $7,000 is sufficient to practically pay the balance over and above what has been paid in on the subscriptions, so that almost all that may come in on the building fund in the future will go towards the erection of the house.

—As a result of a good meeting held by James C. Burkhardt, pastor at Connersville, Ind., the brethren at the Hennigan Church, Rush county, will have preaching half time, James Teeter dividing his time between that point and Lyons Station, while he is in attendance at Butler College. At Philomath, Wayne county, many people had never seen a baptismal service and there was no kind of organization or building, but as a result of Brother Burkhardt's efforts his nephew, John W. Burkhardt, will now preach at that point once a month in the schoolhouse. The work at Connersville goes forward. The offerings during the year have been over $17,000 and the indebtedness on the new $40,000 building is now less than $10,000. The offerings on a recent Sunday amounted to $1,220.

—During the past year the church at Hope, Ark., employed a pastor for all of his time. This was a decided step in advance. For the first time they supplied their minister with a home to live in. The result has been that more money has been raised and expended than in any two previous years and 130 additions to the church are reported, 89 by baptism, and all through regular services, excepting 29 that came during the meeting with Brother Sanders. church has become a living link in the Home Society and by November 1 Brother Humphrey, of Kentucky, will be at work in the Hope district. Forty-five other additions are reported and one church organized as a result of the work of the pastor, Percy G. Cross, during his vacation. He will continue at Hope with an increase of salary.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

stands. They are unwilling that their identity should be lost, and are willing to get under mortgage for their faith's sake. As a further appeal, the speaker urged the loyalty of these little bands of workers to the ethics of Christ in the business realm. He spoke of the truly wonderful record of the Board of Church Extension in dealing with these churches. In all, 1,022 loans have been made, and in the work over $1,000,000 has been handled, and yet the board has only lost in all its dealings in forty-three states and territories during the past eighteen years the insignificant amount of $563. The churches have maintained their credit in clean cut business life. A fourth mark of loyalty was noted in the missionary activity of 100 representative Church Extension churches. In spite of heavy local obligations these 100 representative churches gave to missionary enterprises during the past year more than $9,000. The last line of emphasis was the loyalty of these churches which the brotherhood had helped to the work of evangelization. Fifty-eight out of 100 representative churches reported 13,771 additions since their Church Extension loan was granted, 3,748 of these additions being during the past year. In closing, the speaker urged an even more generous response on the part of the churches at large to loyal but homeless bands of Disciples still knocking at the doors.

Princeton's Evangelistic Campaign.

Princeton, Ind., will enter upon the great state simultaneous campaign on Monday evening, October 29. H. J. Otto, pastor of the church there, will have as his special evangelists O. D. Maple and J. R. Miller. It is probable that this movement will, in some respects, differ from the usual movements employed in evangelistic efforts in that its first endeavor will be to summon all the power at its command towards impressing the public with one text, "That ye love one another as I have loved you." Like other cities, Princeton does not lack for varied forms of Christian teaching, nor is it without signs of prejudice. It has much that commends it in the way of religious activity, but its religious forces need to be united in Christ. The Christian body of Disciples desires to disprove the prevailing impression that salvation is by water only, as well as that it is trying to bring about Christian union by proving that baptism is immersion in water. Where the "If you love me" is emphasized, we may hope for the matter of ordinances finding its own solution. Brother Otto has been planning, preparing, and praying that souls may be saved and the local congregation which has assisted so faithfully in the preparation is looking with delightful anticipation to the great work of evangelization. It is hoped that Princeton will catch the spirit of the real Pentecostal love. Evangelist Maple's first sermon—"A United Army Means Victory" is one in which he will urge, first, that the members of the Christian church work as one man for the saving of souls; second, that Christians of all churches aid in the greatest of all vocations; third, that the intention of our Lord and Master was and is to have only one faith, one fold, one church. Other subjects for the first week are "The Revival Princeton Needs and Must Have," "To Serve is to be Grand," "The Enthusiasm of Evangelization," "Soul Winning," and "Qualifications of Soul Winners." During the meeting announcements will be made of how the campaign is going throughout the state and in other states as well.

H. J. Otto, Princeton, Ind.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

West Kentucky Notes.

The Sunday-school Convention of the Twenty-third District will meet at Fulton, November 1 and 2. This district is composed of the eight western counties known as "The Jackson Purchase."——The erection of the new church building at Mayfield is being pushed forward with great energy. When completed it will be one of the best in the state.——West Kentucky College has opened up finely with an excellent body of students in attendance. The high grade of the student body is most gratifying. New students are entering every week.——Bro. W. T. Wells, pastor of the Bowling Green church, is assisting R. L. Clark at Mayfield in a protracted meeting with fine prospects of success. Brother Wells is a strong, well-equipped and fearless preacher of the Gospel.——Bro. R. L. Clark has resigned his work with the Mayfield congregation to take effect January 1. Here is an excellent opportunity for some church to secure a strong preacher and a good pastor. During his four years' pastorate, the Mayfield church has increased from a membership of about 400 to 600, and the money has been raised and the contract let for one of the finest houses of worship in West Kentucky.

Illinois Notes.

Bell Plain, or Pattensburg, has one of the oldest churches in the state. It was near here that Mrs. O. A. Burgess grew to womanhood and from which she entered Eureka college. Near here father Palmer, a pioneer preacher of great power, resided a half century ago, whose influence extended to all this region of country, and whose name is dear to all the old people. The church is perhaps smaller and weaker than fifty years ago, because of deaths and removals to railroad towns, but it is still a good church holding forth the word of life and taking liberal offerings for all our enterprises. F. A. Scott is the faithful and devoted minister.——At Bell Ridge, H. M. Brooks preaches, which necessarily means public enterprise and progress. Three years ago a woman, Mrs. O'Hair, determined that the country community, which is ten miles south of Paris, should have a Sunday-school. She organized it in the nearby school house, which was soon filled with people. Preaching was occasionally had, finally a meeting, $5,000 church was built, another meeting by Brothers Brooks and Idleman, with more than 100 additions. In short, a woman's devotion, husband's co-operation, a community's right purpose, all helping, the right preacher, a mind to work and the blessing of God, which always waits to help the willing-hearted, in three short years results in the conversion of nearly 200 people, a church of 220, a $5,000 house, a Sunday-school averaging 100, with one of the finest companies of young people that I have seen anywhere. What cannot the Lord's people do with his gracious help! In how many places is he waiting and longing to be gracious, if only his people would arise in their strength and his, and go forward. There are but few churches now in our state that ought not to be planning a great meeting this fall or winter. Never in our history has the Lord poured out upon us a more fruitful season, nor greater harvests. Shall we liberally honor him by having the Gospel preached? So far as in us is, let us be worthy of his bounty.——J. I. Gunn is getting well into the work as well as into the hearts of the people at Arcola. This is one of our strongest churches, which through several years' ministry of L. T. Faulders took great strides forward. It will be no small task to hold the ground already taken and keep advancing in all lines of church activity at home, and take an increasing interest and part in all the great enterprises of the church. Brother Gunn, with the faithful co-operation of the church, will be able for these things.——At Atlanta, I. W. Agee is devoting his Christian energies. A splendid new parsonage is a valuable acquirement of the church. The Sunday-school, under the leadership of Brother Mountjoy, is full of life and interest. It has the best Sunday-school orchestra that I have seen in Illinois.——The Minier church is enjoying a vastly improved house of worship. The audiences at church and attendance at Sunday-school are fine. J. E. Couch, for several years the minister, has resigned, and expects to go west. The church that secures his services will be fortunate. He is a native of Illinois, and we are sorry to lose him. May his work always be blessed.——The work at Mason City prospers under the splendid ministry of O. C. Bolman. There are additions most every week. The church audiences and Sunday-school are large. The church membership is 145, 55 having been added in the year and a half of Brother Bolman's ministry with the church. The Christian Endeavor and C. W. B. M. are prosperous. This has been the home for about 40 years of J. M. Haughey, whose preaching has blessed many parts of Mason county, as well as of Mason City. He has married about 1,500 couples and buried 1,500 dead. He is now enjoying a quiet and peaceful old age with his wife, who has been a partner truly in all his labors and joys. How beautiful to grow old with a sweet, loving spirit and heart in humble trust and loyal faith in Christ.——The strong church at Petersburg is still doing business in its old house. Occasionally a stir calls for the new and modern, but quiet is soon restored. It is a good time to build while times are prosperous. Petersburg is a good town. Many of its young people go away to college. Some come to Eureka. Some of our former students are among the leaders of the city's life. W. M. Grove, the popular minister of the church is full of enthusiasm and is eminently successful in his work. He led one of the best and most enthusiastic prayer-meetings that I have attended for some time. We miss from the happy faces in the congregation of other years, Judge Blane and father Smoot, but younger people are taking their places, whether as faithful and true, or not time will tell. Bro. L. F. Watson, of Watseka, now lives here and as ever is active in the church.——The Athens church still struggles and succeeds. It numbers about 125, with 100 or more in Sunday-school. Its new, modern house is paid for and makes a splendid spiritual home for young and old and all departments of church work. Their young and active preacher, F. E. Welton, is in his first pastorate, having left a lucrative business in Decatur last spring to preach the gospel. Some forty have been added to the church since he came and all parts of the work seem to prosper. There are many men in business and in the professions who ought to be preaching the gospel and saving the people. We need, so much, more preachers. We have more than twice as many churches in Illinois as preachers, many communities have to suffer. The college in its present support and patronage falls far short of supplying the demand.——J. H. Henderson is getting well into his work at Tallula. This is one of our older churches and it likes its preacher and is doing good service for the Master. H. E. Monser was just closing a meeting with some 35 additions to the church. He is an able evangelist. Miss Nellie Polluck, of Nebo, led the singing and I heard only words of praise of her work. It was here that R. F. Thrapp, now the pastor of the Jacksonville church, grew to manhood and from here entered Eureka college. Here H. O. Breeden, now of the Central church, Des Moines, Iowa, preached his first sermon while a student of Eureka college. Both these men feel much indebted to that godly woman, now gone home, Mrs. J. W. Judy for many wise and helpful suggestions. Her husband, Col. Judy, still resides here to bless the church.——At Literberry, H. G. Vandervort, of Clayton, ministers half time. They have a good house, some 150 members, Sunday-school of 100. All missionary collections are remembered. I was there "Rally day" for Home Missions. The collection was $16.56. The church, Sunday-school and Endeavor society are all thoroughly alive.——Bro. Charles Coleman has been at Chandlerville nine months. There have been 16 additions to the church which numbers 135 with a Sunday-school of 100. All is peace and harmony and a good work is being done. This is the home of Dr. H. B. Boone and wife, both graduates of Eureka college, and are thoroughly alive and active leaders in the church. Whether a Christian college means more to the cause of Christ in training its ministry or its laity is still an open question. Whether it pays for Christian parents to patronize a Christian college or not, depends on the value put on the Christian life, influence and destiny of the child.

We are happy to announce that John L. Brandt has nearly recovered from his recent surgical operation. We hear that he has gone to marrying people again.——Sister Princess Long, of Paris, Ky., gave a musical and literary entertainment in the Compton Heights church last week. The audience was delighted. Sister Long's entertainment is of very high grade. It is not only entertaining but helpful and inspiring. Any church or Aid Society that desires a delightful entertainer for an evening, will find it to their advantage to get sister Long, if possible.——The St. Louis preachers are working overtime now. Together with our preparation for the simultaneous meetings we are taking interest in the effort to put other than saloon men into our city and state offices at the next election. We have often heard it said that there is nothing so peculiar as people, we have about decided that politics is.——The revival interest is already on in the Compton Heights church. We had six additions Sunday of last week; three were baptized on Wednesday evening. One hundred and fifty-five attended the Christian Endeavor meeting, about eighty attend the mid-week prayer-meeting, and the Bible school is crawling toward the four hundred mark in regular attendance.——Good reports from the Buffalo Convention are already coming in. Many of us were deprived the privilege and pleasure of that great meeting, but we are planning to be in Pittsburg in 1909.—F. N. Calvin.

Advancing the Cause at Springfield, Ill.

Conspicuous among the younger congregations throughout the brotherhood is the West Side Christian Church of Springfield, Ill. This congregation was organized a little less than five years ago. The First Christian Church, under the leadership of her pastor, J. E. Lynn, now of Warren, Ohio, gave a notable example of unselfishness when she entered heartily into this new movement, releasing one hundred and ten of her own number, to form the charter membership list and contributing, as a body, generously, to the erection of the new house. In this comparatively short time, the West Side Church has made its way up into the ranks of the thoroughly organized churches of the state. Its name is found upon the books of all of our missionary societies with liberal gifts, and its local work is regarded as one of the most successful in the city. The membership has grown rapidly, more than six hundred having been received into its fellowship. The present membership is about five hundred and forty. The Sunday-school enrollment is something over five hundred, the largest attendance at any one session this year being five hundred and five. All departments of church work are thoroughly organized and well supported by the membership. The Sunday-school has one of the largest kindergarten departments and some of the most efficient teachers to be found in the city.

The congregation is, at the present time, engaged in a series of evangelistic meetings, which are being conducted by Victor Dorris, of Pendleton, Ore., and Chas. H. Altheide, of Bloomington, Ia. Under their leadership, the congregation expects to make a most successful campaign. Victor Dorris is too well-known to require any words of introduction. Though his time has been spent largely in pastoral work for the past twenty years, holding a pastorate at Georgetown, Ky., continuously for ten years, he has yet held some of the great meetings of the church. He uses no sensational methods of any kind, but is a strong, persuasive preacher whose messages are enforced by a deeply spiritual life and a winning personality. Chas. H. Altheide is comparatively new in the field of singing evangelists, but has been eminently successful and comes to Springfield at this time for his third meeting. He has just assisted Wm. J. Lockhart in one of our Kansas City churches.

CHRISTIAN UNION:

A Historical Study

By J. H. GARRISON.

THIS latest book of J. H. Garrison deals with the living question of Christian Union from the historical point of view. The author presents Christian Union as it existed in—

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.
II. THE POST-APOSTOLIC AGE.
III. THE GRAECO-ROMAN AGE.
IV. THE PROTESTANT ERA.
V. THE PERIOD OF REUNION, beginning with the Nineteenth Century.

These are the five chapters of the book with numerous subtitles under which the subject is discussed. The closing chapter deals with present day movements toward Christian union, in which the plea of the Disciples of Christ is strongly stated. One of the most interesting features of the book is its treatment of recent interdenominational movements, including that of federation, in their relation to Christian union.

This is one of the timeliest books that has ever been issued from our press, and we predict for it an extraordinary demand as an up-to-date statement of this vital question, both in the light of history and of current movements in the religious world. It contains 207 pages, is bound in the best silk cloth, and sells for $1.00, postpaid.

The Missionary Bump.

day there is a theoretical acknowledgement of the authority of Christ, and a practical acknowledgement of the authority of narrow-minded and stingy brethren. The acknowledgment of the authority of Jesus is valueless unless it is proved by a sincere preaching of the Gospel of giving and a fearless effort to engage the church in her real mission, viz:—the evangelization of the whole world. Let men oppose if they will, let the church be cold and unresponsive if she will, but do thou, O pastor, behold the towering figure of the Son if God, as, clothed with all authority in heaven and on earth, he points to the regions beyond, to the unnumbered millions who wander beneath the stars vainly wondering if they be the myriad eyes of an avenging deity or the blossoms that mark the footprints of a beneficent God, and do thou hear him as, in a voice that tolerates no disobedience, he commands thee to send to them his Gospel. Dare you disobey? Dare you?

No, brethren, let the missionary bump be developed. It will never become large enough to disfigure the classic contour of your massive craniums. When tempted to turn aside from this sacred duty, this divine privilege, spend a while at the foot of the Cross, fight out the battle in the presence of the agonies of Calvary, and there you will receive inspiration and courage to do the work so dear to the heart of your dying Redeemer. As you gaze into the face of the Crucified One you will hear him gently say:

"I gave, I gave my life for thee:
What hast thou given for me?"

"What song is sung not of sorrow?
What triumph well won without pain?
What virtue shall be, and not borrow
Bright lustre from many a stain?

"What birth has there been without travail?
What battle well won without blood?
What good shall there be without evil
Ingarnered as chaff with the good?

"Lo, the Cross set in rocks by the Roman,
And nourished by blood of the Lamb,
And watered by tears of the woman,
Has flourished, has spread like the palm;

"Has put forth in the frosts and far regions
Of snows in the North and South sands,
Where never the tramp of His legions
Was heard, nor reached forth His red hands.

"Be thankful; the price and the payment,
The birth, the privations and scorn,
The Cross, and the parting of raiment,
Are finished. The star brought us morn:

"Look starward; stand far and unearthy,
Free-soul'd as a banner unfurled,
Be worthy, O brother, be worthy!
For a God was the price of the world."

Kansas City's Greatest Meeting.

Our splendid meeting, in which the largest number ever won for Christ in any church in Kansas City, closed Sunday night, October 14, with 307 additions. Wm. J. Lockhart and Chas. H. Altheide were the evangelists. I have nothing but words of praise for these splendid men. Brother Altheide is a good leader of song and gave us perfect satisfaction with his chorus of from sixty to seventy members. Brother Lockhart is an ideal evangelist, earnest, clean and true. He has no methods that are objectionable and never said one word that we wished he had not spoken, and is a tireless worker. Our entire church and community wish to recommend him as a consecrated and noble man of God. We have no wounds to heal, no mistakes to overcome and no actions to cover up.

Frank L. Bowen, Kansas City, Mo.

The meeting lasted six weeks and one day and from the very first service, when 15 came, until the close of the meeting there were additions at every regular service. There had been hard work in preparation for months before the arrival of our men. We talked of the meeting everywhere. The final work was done by sixty of our consecrated women, who canvassed every home within four square miles, ascertaining the religious attitude of the people and leaving an invitation to the meetings. No expense was considered in our advertising. Thousands upon thousands of invitations were given out as the meeting continued and we also used a large bulletin board erected on a prominent corner upon which were the facts of the meeting. Fifty or more young men and women gave us constant service as messengers. Daily visitation by our workers was a feature. Among the converts were 138 married men and women and about 75 young men and young ladies. Twenty-nine came from other religious bodies and almost one hundred from our Sunday-school.

C. H. Altheide, Springfield, Ill.

Brother Lockhart closes his meetings with good results. After his sermon to the new converts pledges were taken for the current expenses of the church and $1,500 were pledged by the new members. One of the very best results was the securing of fifty-one new subscribers for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

We are a happy church. We must enlarge our building. Jackson Avenue Church is now the third church in the city in size of membership. We shall soon take our offering for missions and hope to move forward in every department. We praise our God for all the influences that helped to gain the victory. The glory is the Lord's. The blessing is ours. FRANK L. BOWEN, pastor.

From the Evangelist.

In March of this year Frank L. Bowen wrote me saying, "We want you to come and lead us in the greatest meeting Kansas City ever had." Arrangements were made for the meeting. On September 1 I met the pastor and his people in conference. I said, "You may ask what you will, for God is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that worketh in us."

Brother Bowen's faith was the strongest of all and he said, "I shall not measure this meeting by numbers reached, but I shall hope to see as many as 300 brought into the Kingdom." I mention this that I may again register my conviction that the Church of Christ may have anything asked for when there is a great passionate longing for the thing desired. There was not a service held without additions. There were no wonderful days—33 was the largest number added in one day—but a steady stream of those turning to the Lord or consecrating themselves anew to his services.

Aside from the divine power that enlists into every great meeting the strong factor was the work and influence of Brother Bowen and his faithful wife. Ten years ago the Jackson Avenue Church that now numbers over 700 members was a mission just started by Brother Bowen, who was city evangelist. This was but one of several missions under the supervision and direct pastoral care of Brother Bowen. For seven years he was pastor of all of these missions. During those past years good church buildings were erected Jackson avenue, Budd Park, Ivanhoe Park and Mt. Washington, and during the past three years pastors were located in three of these and they are all growing into strong churches. Brother Bowen is still the general superintendent of city missions, but for three years past he has been pastor also of the Jackson Avenue Church. His has been a great work and he is now enjoying the large fruitage of the ten years of planting.

The people of the Jackson Avenue Church have the spirit of sacrifice and devotion that should mark a true Church of Christ. There was never an objection or a criticism as to the way the work was done. Never have I had more loyal support. Money was no consideration when the object was the reaching of more people for Christ. The people are all a working people, but money for all purposes came without an effort. Much money was spent in direct advertising of the meeting and this was no small factor in the success.

Chas. H. Altheide, of Bloomfield, Iowa, as leader of song, won the sympathy and support of the people from the start. He is a splendid chorus leader and even stronger as a soloist. His collection of music is of the very highest order and he spares no time or money to better equip himself for his chosen work. A special service that demands more than a passing notice was a sacred concert planned and executed for the purpose of winning men to Christ. It was a success and did what it was intended to do.

I should do that great body of preachers an injustice if, in closing, I should not mention the faith, courage and devotion of the Kansas City ministers. Never have I met a cleaner, more wholesome body of men and I feel that I have been made much stronger for my work because of the sympathy and fellowship of the ministers of Kansas City, who stand for the exaltation of Christ above creed. Would that in every city there might be the same high standard and sweet fellowship! The unity of our work in Kansas City makes it entirely correct to use the Scriptural term, "the Church at" Kansas City.

OBITUARIES.

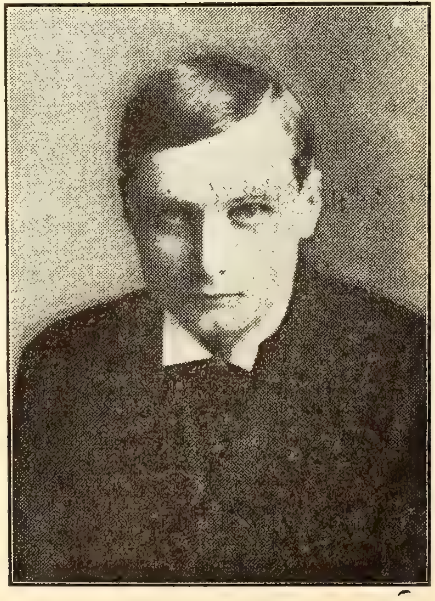
BROWN.

Emma Thomasene Dillon was born in Owen county, Indiana, April 4, 1856, and passed to be with Christ October 10, 1906. She came to Coffeyville, Kan., in 1886, where her parents joined her shortly afterward. Her marriage to S. W. Brown, pastor of the church in Coffeyville, was consummated March 26, 1895. Two children blessed the home for a short time only, both dying in infancy. She became a Christian when 19 years of age, and has been active and devoted to the Lord ever since, assisting her husband very much in his work as a minister, until the past few months, when her sickness prevented her from so doing. Loving and unselfish, she ministered to others as long as her strength would permit. She with her husband served the church at Coffeyville from 1895 till 1899, at Eureka, 1899; at Beloit, 1900, till 1903, and Eldorado 1903 till death. The church, a large circle of friends, her brothers and sister, husband and little adopted daughter, remain to mourn their loss.

Eldorado, Kan. S. W. B.

With the Church at Odessa, Mo.

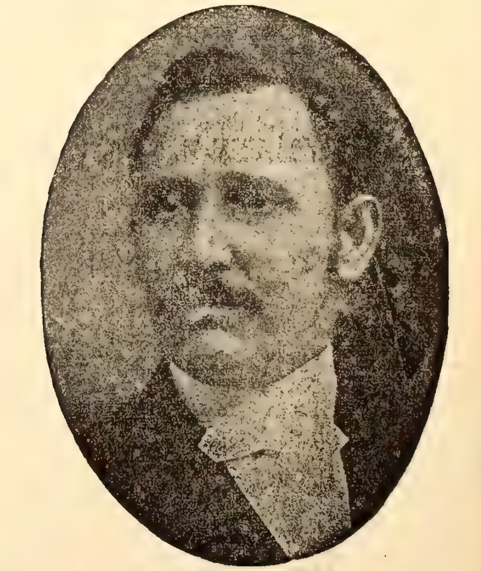
The work of the church at Odessa, Mo., under Frank Waller Allen, only son of F. G. Allen, of "Old Path Guide" memory, has been greatly blessed. Some thirty have been baptized, as many added otherwise and the church brought into a harmonious fellowship during the present pastorate, beginning May, 1904. The missionary offerings have been doubled each year, and the current expense fund increased from $900 to $1,800. Repairs to the extent of several hundred dollars have been made, and other exterior improvements are contemplated. The present membership is about 275.



Frank Waller Allen.

This is Brother Allen's first regular pastorate and manifests his ability to fill larger fields to which he has had calls, but the loyalty of his people and his advocacy of the longer pastorates, have thus far held him at Odessa.

On November 5 his brother-in-law, E. J. Fenstermacher, of Poplar Bluff, will join him in a meeting. Brother Fenstermacher is not a stranger in Missouri. Besides his pastorates he has also held some good meetings, notably here at Mexico, where about 75 were added. The official board of the church bears tribute of appreciation in a special letter from which I quote one sentence: "Your manner has been unostentatious, your speech eloquent, and your message most lovingly and intelligibly delivered as one who had the Master's command 'Go preach' at heart."



E. J. Fenstermacher.

Sister F. G. Allen, who yet survives, now residing with her daughter at Poplar Bluff, will be present during the meeting.

Added to this strong combination will be the influence of 300 copies of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST distributed weekly.

Pomona.—Am now in a meeting with home forces. Twenty additions in two weeks. Will continue one more week.—M. A. Hart.

Corona, Oct. 12.—Closed my work at Waitsburg, Wash., September 23, with three additions. Commenced work here October 7.—W. T. Adams.

Bakersfield, Oct. 11.—Nine added the last two Sundays. Membership has more than doubled in the last ten months without a protracted meeting. Every department of church work is prospering.—R. E. McKnight.

Colorado.

Ft. Collins, Oct. 16.—The meeting just closed at the First Church resulted in 27 additions, making 71 in our work. All departments of church work are making good progress.—J. F. Findley.

Idaho.

Weiser, Oct. 16.—One more addition last Sunday.—G. M. Read.

Illinois.

Cairo.—Eight added.—O. D. Maple, evangelist.

Putnam.—Closed a splendid meeting October 3, at Putnam, Ill., with 20 additions.

Scottville, Oct. 15.—Ten added here in two weeks, six yesterday. Meeting will continue a few days.—M. L. Anthony, evangelist.

Blue Mound, Oct. 17.—Our meeting here with W. H. Harding has opened with bright prospects. Five confessions so far, and fine audiences.

Springfield, Oct. 18.—Evangelists Victor Dorris and C. H. Altheide are now in a splendid meeting at the West Church. Twenty-four accessions to date.—F. M. Rogers.

Chicago, Oct. 18.—Thirty-nine accessions have been gained at the West Pullman Church during the past year, 23 by confession and baptism, and 16 by letter and statement.—Guy Hoover, minister.

Niantic, Oct. 18.—Fifteen added here—13 by confession, during first ten days of our meeting. Charles E. McVey is conducting the music. Forty have been added since I began here last March.—J. Will Walters.

Chicago, Oct. 8.—Closed our meeting here with seven confessions the last day. Eighteen additions in all. Had to close too soon. Interest and attendance greatly increased during the last week. I begin in Downs, Kansas, next Sunday.—H. E. Wilhite.

Indiana.

Hartford City, Oct. 16.—Two by letter last Lord's day.—William Elmer Payne.

New Albany, Oct. 15.—Four added since last report.—F. T. Porter, minister Park church.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.—Matt. 26:17-30.

Golden Text.—This do in remembrance of me.—1 Cor. 11:24.

Memory verses, 26, 27.

The man who furnished the room in which the last supper was eaten is one of the obscure and unnamed contributors to the Lord's work—like the owner of the ass used in the triumphal entry, and the boy whose loaves and fishes fed the five thousand. These are of that noble company of the humble saints whose names are written in no earthly record, but who, by hidden deeds of helpfulness or by small but timely aid which they alone could give, have contributed to the advancement of the kingdom.

This last passover supper had three meanings. First of all, it was a passover supper eaten in accordance with the requirements of Jewish law and custom, for Jesus made no unnecessary and premature break with the religion of his fathers. Second, it was a friendly meal by which was symbolized the close brotherly relations of the group which ate it, for by oriental usage breaking bread together was a token of intimate fellowship and alliance.

In the third place, the bread and the cup were made the symbols of the body and blood of Christ, and thus of his approaching death, so that the supper became a symbolical statement of what Jesus had much earlier expressed in figurative speech when he said: (John 6:35), "I am the bread of life," and (John 6:53), "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, ye have not life in yourselves."

Did Jesus mean that his disciples should observe the supper as a perpetual institution? Was he consciously establishing an ordinance? Or was he merely putting a new meaning into the common meal and asking to be remembered with every breaking of bread. The texts do not support either view with certainty as opposed to the other. But one thing is clear from the history of the apostolic church; the disciples who were present at the supper, and who heard the whole of the discourses and instructions which are reported to us only in fragments, were of the opinion that it was an ordinance for perpetual observance. Their understanding of the matter must carry more weight than the interpretation of any particular text.

So the Lord's supper became an established and recognized institution in the church. At first it was held in connection with a real meal, within a century this meal, called the "love feast" or agape, was discontinued and only the symbolical elements in minimum quantities were retained. At the very first in the Jerusalem church the meeting for breaking of bread was probably daily (but this is a disputed point), but very soon, in apostolic days, the weekly observance was the universal rule.

A DEAD CHURCH.—Rev. 3:1-6.

"My soul, it is thy God
Who calls thee by his grace;
Now loose thee from each cumbering load,
And bend thee to the race.

"Make thy salvation sure;
All sloth and slumber shun;
Nor dare a moment rest secure,
Till thou the goal hast won.

"Thy crown of life hold fast;
Thy heart with courage stay;
Nor let one trembling glance be cast
Along the backward way."

Sardis may be destroyed, but even amid the shadows of her impending desolation the Spirit would still in full confidence breathe forth: "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

It is well to note that in heavenly parlance the clerk of the church is called "angel." There ought to be some similarity in the characters of clerk and angels as well as in their duties. In selecting this officer there should be closer scrutiny of his spiritual timbre than of his penmanship. Indeed every one who serves in the house of the Lord in any capacity ought to put on the Lord Jesus Christ and endeavor as others do not to live as and be God men and God women.

Many of us have a name to live, for are not our names on the church register? Were all names transcribed from the records of the angel of the church at Sardis to the Lamb's book of life? There are reasons for believing that he who sees by all the light of the seven stars and knew the spirits of those ancients cherishing the delusion that church membership was a guaranty of immortality and glory, wrote opposite many names —"and art dead."

Possibly Sardis had been well instructed in the ways of the Lord, and knew so well the plan of salvation they could unerringly give to sinners the formula of redemption, but "I have not found thy works perfect before God." O that men would realize that it is not in statements of belief, nor in the smoke of burnt offerings, nor in eloquent exhortations to righteousness but in the doing of the will of God, divine approval and salvation are found.

Through her sins Sardis had not separated herself from God's love or watchfulness. Sardis was dead in the sense that she was separated from God, was drawing no strength, warmth, conscience, courage or hope from him. It was only through penitence, her melting away with penitential tears the barrier in sinfulness she had thrown between her and the sources of her life the old life could be resumed. It is so with us. The old inheritance of love is still ours if through repentance, renunciation, restitution and sanctification we come into vital relationship with it.

Sardis was the capital of ancient Lydia. It was the home of Croesus, the richest man of antiquity. The wars of Saracen and Turk and earthquake shock have made a ruin of the great and once splendid city. We know nothing of the history of the church there save this testimony of Jesus. It was neither the oppression of the Croesus spirit, nor the contamination of the luxuriance of wealth, nor the havoc of war that extinguished the light of that church for Christianity has triumphed over them all myriads of times, but the refusal of the members to walk in the light as Jesus was the light.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath.

Bad Odor of Indigestion, Smoking, Drinking or Eating Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking, give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning—that awful sour, bilious, bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines, all the impurities there massed together and which cause the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal, and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner" inside.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address

THE BLESSEDNESS OF COMMUNION WITH CHRIST.—John 14:15-26.

(Consecration Service.)

Master, speak! and make me ready,
When thy voice is truly heard,
With obedience glad and steady
Still to follow every word.
—Frances Havergal.

A most significant expression is, "Practice the presence of God." Think of him as very near. Act as if realizing his immediateness. This communion will ever become closer, sweeter, more helpful, until lo, heaven is ever around us.

We communicate with multitudes but we commune only with a few choice, congenial spirits. 'Tis so with Christ. "If ye love me, keep my commandments" is an announcement of one of the things necessary to secure the blessedness of communion with him.

Do not think communion with Christ is all joyousness to the exclusion of seriousness. His severest reproofs to those he loves are not administered in public but in the privacy of close communion. In tears often as in smiles do the most consecrated emerge from these communion hours. But there is always sunshine after the rain.

How great comfort there is in the knowledge that a good man is continually bearing up our interests in his prayers. Kingdoms and all their glory were they ours would be as baubles to be thrown aside to receive this blessing conditioned on our obedience to Christ, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever."

It would seem the halcyon days of the race were when God walked and talked familiarly with Adam and Eve in Eden, but I doubt not he is nearer to many today than to them. They received him in a garden; but the happiest of earth's children have enshrined him in their hearts. His presence there filled our first parents with guilty fears; may it fill ours with peace and joy. After their communings in the garden they saw the flaming sword guarding the way to the tree of life; after ours may we see the throne and the scepter and fadeless glory.

Two men look on the same sunset but it speaks to them a different language. To one it tells how soon the burdens of the day may be laid down and the evening's rest begun. To the other it suggests the close of life, the end of dynasties, the fading glory of days and eras, other worlds eagerly awaiting its coming and eternities where there is no need of suns because God is their light. It is even so in communion with Christ. It is a privilege as common as looking into sunsets but for the one prepared for it there is in each moment of it a blessedness the crass minded can not comprehend, nor of which he can become possessed till there is in him more of the mind of the Master.

miership," "isolated," "truths," "penchant," need looking up in the Standard or some other dictionary. "Strategic," "age-long" and "along these lines" were overworked as usual, the last in some form appearing five times in one short report. "Ponderous respectability of inherited orthodoxy," "Put your heart into China," "Cubans are good for something else beside raising Cain literally and figuratively," "We can trust the common people with a trust second only to our trust in God," "Your face is similar to me, but I can't recognize you," "We are not ungenerous, only untaught with respect to money," "We give by fits, but the trouble is the fits are neither violent nor protracted," were some of the crumbs swept up. Our old friends "reactionaries," "commercialism," and "the strenuous life," were there.

Found your Muvver's pantry key?
All ve folks stayed out till late,
An' we ate an' ate an' ate!
Ma was s'prised, so she confessed,
Vat we didn't eat ve rest.
An' we did it, by-um-by.
Course you 'member? So d' I.

'Member when your Muvver said
"At she wisht I'd run an' do
All ve mischief in my head
All at once an' get it frough?
S'pose we did, why, maybe ven
We could do it all again!
Guess we could if we should try.
Will y' sometime? So'll I.

The Bronze Vase.

PART IV.

CHAPTER II.

The train for Kansas City did not leave till the next morning, but Raymund took Mrs. De Fer's advice about packing his trunk. He and Rhoda and Mrs. De Fer spent tht night at Mr. Willby's, though the fleshy, irascible old gentleman never entirely forgave the French lady for not telling her age. The next morning, Raymund and Rhoda had a few minutes alone in Mr. Willby's parlor, for their adieus.

"Now that we are starting out in life," said Raymund, "let us shape everything for improvement and advancement. As for me, I shall never rest satisfied with my work, but always be looking ahead toward greater service. And I will save and save till those debts are paid off!"

"You'll go to Mrs. Bannerton's for a room, I know," said Rhoda. "Give her my love, if she is still there. And—and Raymund—" She paused, and looked down.

"Well," said Raymund a little impatiently, "why don't you look at me, Rhoda? Well, what were you going to say?"

"Nelsie Loraine will be there," said Rhoda, "and—"

"It isn't likely that I'll ever see her," said the young man; "she'll go in the society of the rich. She'll know nothing about poor tutors."

"I'm not sure," said Rhoda. "But I want you to remember that once—" she stopped in confusion.

Raymund thought he knew what she was thinking, for he said quickly, "And I remember that you gave me Jack Bellfield in the toe of my stocking, for a Christmas present. Sometimes I think you want it back."

Rhoda blushed brightly and smiled and cried with energy, "I don't want it back, and I never have!"

"Oh, Rhoda!" cried Raymund embracing her, "I thought that was what was the matter!"

"There isn't any thing the matter," exclaimed Rhoda trying to break away. But Raymund kissed her once and then again, before he let her go. "There!" he cried, "I'm going to love you, Rhoda, in spite of yourself! I am going to be the brother to you that mother expected me to be. And no matter how indifferent you grow, or how little you get to caring for me, I mean to be your protector, and I mean to keep you my rose!" Then with a very high head, and a heart wounded and half-angry, he marched from the room, leaving Rhoda in tears. At the station, as she bade him good-by, her face was still pale and his eyes were still accusing. He had never found her so unsatisfactory at parting as now. It seemed even after the train had started, that he must go back and ask her why she was a different Rhoda from the Rhoda of his boyhood. When they reached Kansas City, Mrs. De Fer took him at once to one of those splendid houses on Troost avenue that look so aristocratic and are so new. She introduced him to the Geisthauser family. There were the father and mother, and the two Geisthauser boys of nine and fourteen.

"My father," Mr. Geisthauser explained, "was a saloon-keeper from Germany. He could hardly speak English, and he worked so hard after he came to this country, that he had no time to polish himself. I had to knock around considerable myself, in my young days. But the old man had his eyes open, and he kept me in school and wouldn't let me learn German except the public school course. And now, I'm running a distillery—quite an uplift, hey? Now, my sons here, they're to go a notch higher and cut out the whisky business altogether. I want you to make gentlemen out of them. Fix 'em up for Congress. I've got plenty of money and I can control the wards in my district, through the saloon-keepers. I'll get 'em in Congress all right, but I want them to be able to stand on their legs when they get there."

"Me," spoke up Ernest Geisthauser, the older boy, "it's nearly impossible for me to learn. Looks like my head won't respond, somehow. Mrs. De Fer, herself, she says it is awful hard for me!"

"Yes," said Mrs. De Fer, "but as kind hearted a lad as ever lived."

"Yes," said Mr. Geisthauser, "it's going to be uphill work, Mr. Revore, but I'm giving you an uphill salary. You just go to work on 'em, for be educated they must, and if you have to bore a hole into their heads to get it in, I'll help hold the augur!"

"We want to learn," said Ernest, "but it looks like we can't. That's why we've quit the public. Every class slipped away from us at the public. Now, I'll tell you how it was. You've seen a boy standing on a sled, and of a sudden some fellow would sneak up and give the rope a pull, and the sled would go on right out from under the boy. That's the way it was with us—wasn't it, Franz?"

"Just that way," the younger Geisthauser nodded. "It looked like we couldn't do nothing! The teacher he always said so himself, and we knowed it. And you ask Mrs. De Fer, she'll tell you the same story."

"We think," chirrupped Mrs. Geisthauser, "that Mrs. De Fer has dropped the work because it was so hard for her that she looks on marrying as easier."

"Yes," said Mr. Geisthauser, "I don't think she'd ever have dreamed of taking a man, if Ernest and Franz hadn't been such pudding-heads."

Mrs. De Fer laughed, and Ernest and Franz beamed with stolid good humor. The elder Geisthausers were highly satisfied. "There's one thing," the father remarked, "if you can't do anything with these boys, they're rich anyhow, and can just buy their way through life, if they've no wits to win out with!"

Having made his arrangements for the first lessons, to be given on the morrow, Raymund parted from Mrs. De Fer and hunted up the three-story lodging house on Thirteenth street where he had spent a week with Rhoda in their fifteenth year. How well he remembered their flight through the dark streets and the wildly-beating hearts with which they had climbed the few stone steps! It all came back to him and when in answer to his ring, a maid opened the door, he felt a little shock of surprise because it was not his former landlady. He asked if Mrs. Bannerton still kept the lodging-house, and being told that she did, asked to see her. He now found that the front room was occupied by Mrs. Bannerton; in the old days it had been leased by one of the high-priced lodgers. He was shown in to her. Mrs. Bannerton, supposing it was a stranger come to engage a room, peered at him intently through her near-sighted glasses.

"I am sorry, sir," she said, "but every room is taken, except a little back room on the third story. There is no flue in it, but if you would be willing to use it till cold weather, you can have it for a dollar a week. I do not think you will find another room in a respectable house on this street any cheaper, though I should tell you before you see it, that it is very small and plainly furnished."

"It is the very room I want," said Raymund, smiling. "I remember how it delighted me when I was in it before; and I can't afford a high price for lodgings."

"Do you mean that you were once in that room?" asked Mrs. Bannerton, peering harder than ever. Before he could answer she had recognized him. "Raymund!" she cried. "Mr. Raymund," she corrected herself. She grasped his hand warmly.

"Yes, Mrs. Bannerton," he said, greatly pleased. "But I wonder that you remember my name after all this time. I was here only a week, and four years ago."

"Not remember your name?" cried Mrs. Bannerton, smiling at him tenderly, and brushing a sudden tear from her eye, "I owe you a month's visit from my boy! Do you remember? He was about to pawn his watch in St. Louis—you spoke to him. He had fallen in with wild companions. He told me all about it when he came. Do you think I can ever forget your name?" Then they had a long talk. She wanted to know all about his sister, but about him, most of all. He learned that her daughter had graduated in music, and had a class in the city. She lived with Mrs. Bannerton, and from their combined earnings, and from what the young soldier sent, they were enabled to keep help and to live in comparative ease and comfort. "I say comparative ease and comfort," said Mrs. Bannerton, correcting herself; "perhaps the case is only comparative, for my daughter works hard with her class, and I have a good deal of management upon my hands. But such comfort! It is a perfect comfort, Mr. Raymund, because I can be proud both of my daughter and of my son. And I often think that if Mr. Bannerton had lived, he would not have been ashamed of them. And when I go to him, Mr. Raymund, do you not think I can give a good account of my guardianship?"

"Call me Raymund," cried the young man. "We are such good friends that you ought not to build up a barricade of a 'mister' between us." Presently he was shown to the little back room on the third story. Left alone, he gazed about, with what emotions! How uncertain of the future he had been when last those walls looked down upon him, with their faded paper. How restless his young feet had trod that linty carpet. The piece of lead pipe peeping through the ceiling had watched him planning to escape from Boggs. The iron bedstead had held his form as it tossed in feverish despair because no employment could be found in the city. And yet, in a way, he was not so happy now as in those troubled days! He was sure of a roof, now, sure of a position, sure of a steady and generous salary. But he was not sure of Rhoda. In the old days there had been the terror of Boggs and of Mrs. Van Estry; but there had also been the warm, impulsive, outspoken love of his sister. He found himself looking back upon the past with a sigh of regret. "Everything is so much better, now," he sighed, "and yet . . . And yet, somehow, I wish I had that old cracked pitcher with the wire twisted around it to keep it together! And I'd prefer the broken mirror to this new one! I wonder if anybody is ever satisfied?" He threw himself upon the bed and stared out the window. Below was the basement yard into which had once shone the light from Rhoda's window. Beyond was the green lawn leading to the brick residence. He had seen Boggs, four years ago, dodge behind that residence. "I wish I could see him now," muttered Raymund grimly. "How happy I was in those days! I'd even be glad to see Boggs again!" He laughed at himself, but it was not a happy laugh.

Suddenly he smote the window sill with his fist. "They've even put a fire-escape to this window," he muttered. "Everything is for my convenience and comfort. But it's no use! I'll tell you what I'm going to do," he went on, addressing the piece of pipe whose presence in the room was as much a mystery as ever. "I'll go to Crawley at the first chance—probably Christmas—and ask at the bank for that tin box. Mother said that if a difference ever came between me and Rhoda I could do that. Mother didn't want me to see that box, but the difference has come. Once, I imagined it never could! I will see that box," he went on with renewed determination. "Perhaps this difference in Rhoda is the very difference mother foresaw, or rather, feared would come. I've thought of it for a long time. Now I've made up my mind. I must know the meaning of this secret!"

Piles Cured Quickly at Home

Without Pain, Cutting or Surgery.
Instant Relief.

We Prove It. Sample Package Free.

Seven people out of ten are said to have Piles. Not one man in a million need have them and we are proving it every day at our own expense. We send a sample package of the wonderful Pyramid Pile Cure to any person absolutely free.

We don't do this as a matter of amusement or philanthropy, but because it is to our interest to do so. We know that the sufferer from piles, tormented and driven almost crazy by this wretched trouble, will find such immediate relief that he will go at once to his druggist and buy a box and get well.

We know that we have got the greatest remedy in the world for piles, and we are ready and willing to stand or fall by the verdict of those who make the trial. We have been doing this for some years now and we never yet have had occasion to regret it.

And the remedy at the drug store is exactly the same as the sample we send out. As, for instance, here is a man who got such immediate relief from the sample that he at once bought a box. Was it just the same? Undoubtedly, since it cured him after all sorts and kinds of things had failed.

Here is a sample of the kind of letters we get every day and we don't have to ask for them:

"Received your sample of Pile Cure and have given it a fair trial and it has proven the best I ever tried and effected a complete cure. I can recommend you highly in this vicinity. Have used your sample and one box and it has been a complete cure. It has been worth $100 to me.

"Thanking you for the sample and the cure, I will recommend you to everybody. Yours respectfully, Julius Mayer, Dealer in Feathers, Ginseng and Hides, Bedford, Ind."

Pyramid Pile Cure is for sale at every druggist's at 50 cents a box or, if you would like to try a sample first, you will receive one by return mail by sending your name and address to The Pyramid Drug Company, 59 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich.

Pretty Rancid Cheese.

"Recently I visited a small town in the southern part of Kentucky," says a correspondent of the Denver News, "and called on the only merchant of the place. I found him opening a case of axle-grease. He took off the lid of one of the small boxes of yellow grease and left it uncovered.

"Soon an old colored man came in, and, noticing the axle-grease, said:

"'Good morning; Massa Johnson! What am dem little cheeses worf?'

"'About 15 cents, I reckon, Sam,' said the merchant.

"'S'pose if I buys one you will frow in de crackers.'

"'Yes, sam.'

"Sam put his hand into his pocket and fished out fifteen cents, and Mr. Johnson took his scoop and dipped up some crackers.

"Sam picked up the uncovered box and the crackers and went to the back part of the store. Then he took out his knife and fell to eating.

"Another customer came in, and Mr. Johnson lost sight of his colored friend for a moment. Presently Mr. Johnson went to the back part of the store and said:

"'Well, Sam, how goes it?'

"'Say, Massa Johnson, dem crackers is all right, but dat am de ransomest cheese I eber eat!'"

A Short Railway Journey in India.

BY ADELAIDE GAIL FROST.

Two of our friends at the Mahoba railway station, Mr. and Mrs. Higgs, asked me to take a trip with them to Banda, thirty-three miles from Mahoba. When we arrived at our destination the large traveler's bungalow there seemed quite like a home, as Mrs. Higgs had sent on her household servants and "tiffin" or luncheon was ready when we reached the bungalow. Mr. Higgs is called the "Plateer Sahib," as he is the "plate-layer," or permanent way inspector on this branch of the India Midland railway. His work is to see that the road is in perfect repair over a section about sixty miles in length. In the rainy season he must take especial care and inspect or oversee the inspection with great fidelity and accuracy. Heavy and sudden rains make washouts and the ballasting of the road must also be carefully attended to. Through the months of July, August and September, night patrolmen go over every foot of the track lest the great iron road of civilization fail in some spot. Each two men have a patrol of four miles.

Traveler's bungalows are such a convenience in India; we were soon quite at home in the large, airy rooms; though if screens did not partition the dining room one might feel desolate in its great and not elaborately furnished, expanse. Its dimensions are 44x21 feet.

We had only finished our luncheon when an ancient native arrived with some boxes tied up in a dirty cloth, not at all inviting looking! Untying these same dingy rags he began to spread out his treasures on them. Soon the topaz and amethyst crystals, beautifully cut and polished shone on the poor cloth in glittering little heaps, then exquisite paper knives of agate and paper weights of a beautiful conglomerate containing a great deal of jasper. There were many lovely cut and polished settings and buttons of moss agate, "grass stone," gold stone and many varieties of chalcedony. Most wonderful of all were the crystals enclosing a few drops of liquid. We saw one most beautiful great agate that must have been five inches in diameter and with so much water in its heart that we could easily hear its sound when the stone was shaken. The price of this sounds large at one hundred rupees, but something less at $33.

We endured considerable temptation, and then came what was to me a real treat. Just at evening Mr. Higgs took us out on his trolley for a ride, this trolley is something like a hand car with a long seat upon which three or four can sit. This was a very exhilarating ride. I was astonished at the agility of the trolley men. When we came to an upgrade or where speed was required, the trolley men jumped off and pushed, running along rapidly on the rails. It was very wonderful to me, they never made a misstep on that narrow surface for the soles of their feet. We glided over the rails in the cool, damp evening air, past the picturesque abrupt hills like mountain spurs which are characteristic of this part of India. Huge pyramids of green and brown and gray, some seemed, and here the rocks furnished foundation for the turrets and bastions of an ancient fort, recalling India's feudal days and there they were crowned by crumbling old temples and many were the tiny, wayside shrines with freshly painted idols within, telling us of the antiquity and the present day belief in gods of stone. Now we come to fields of cotton, broom corn, rice and grain just springing up, so vividly green in this soft light of evening. The rains have been very much better here than about Mahoba. We are "wearying" for the rain there. Here we are at the great railway bridge which spans the Ken river not far from Banda. This immense bridge has twelve spans of 100 feet each and one of 250 feet. The water is about forty feet deep in the deepest place in the hot, dry season, while it comes up to twice that depth in the rains. The river is not yet high and the great, irregular rocky bottom was disclosed in many places, the great swirls of rock looking to me like a huge, petrified whirlpool. Mr. Higgs told me that once while trolleying across the bridge he saw the dead body of a little native child stretched on those cruel rocks where the current had tossed the light form. One shuddered again thinking of the crocodiles in these waters! Did any one care when the little body was thrown there? Did any one miss the baby? It was probably a little girl and some one felt that death were better than life for her and she was not wanted.

Across the bridge we looked away to the sunset, some gleams and bands of crimson rifting the gray clouds, then rose, then ashes of roses, still we sped on until one of the trolley men said: "Your gun, Sahib, hiran!" And there they were, five beautiful deer bounding along on an elevation not far away. In a moment the trolley had stopped and Mr. Higgs was creeping up the embankment, one shot and a beautiful little animal looking so clean and perfect was placed at the back of the trolley. I had never seen a deer bound as I saw what must have been a tame deer near a village, bound along by the trolley. Its graceful little body would spring far into the air, the dainty little feet actually did seem to spurn the ground.

As we came back across the river we saw a ferry boat crossing; there is no bridge for pedestrians and vehicles here and when the rains have been heavy the river is very much wider. There are both low and high water landings for the boats. From this Ken River come the beautiful stones which tempted us earlier in the day.

We passed numbers of villages and as ever a thought went out to those whose lives are so poor in many things we count good and whose few, few wants seem so scantily met, one cloth a year, one full (?) meal a day, for bread—a stone, no comfort in life's tragedies, no shelter in the storms of temptation, no school, no books and these but a few out of the thousands of India's similar villages.

When we returned to the bungalow, one of Mr. Higgs' contractors was there with a huge tray of Indian sweet-meats and another of puris and vegetables, cooked in a most tasty way and brought us in dishes fashioned from leaves, in a beautifully primitive manner, pickles there were, too, made from mangoes, seeds of the bread fruit and many curious fruits, vegetables and seeds.

On Sunday we attended an English vesper service in a very pretty little church, restored since the mutiny. The beautiful stained glass, I am told, was bought with fines the government imposed on the insurrectionists. There is a table in the church to the memory of the young civil officer killed in Banda during the mutiny. He was only 27 years old. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel whose mission is located here in Banda is a "high church" organization whose ritual does not speak to me as it would shorn of some extra flourishes. I thank God that I was, as Miss Graybiel says, "free-born."

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try. Send for it and See.

Those who suffer from it well know the miseries of catarrh. There is no need of it. Why not get it cured? It can be done. The remedy that does this is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, an eminent Southern doctor and minister, who has for over thirty-two years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

He will send you, entirely free, enough to satisfy you that it is a real, genuine, "home cure" for catarrh, scratchy throat, stopped up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, asthma, etc.

His discovery is unlike any thing you ever had before. It is not a spray, douche, atomizer, salve, cream or any such thing, but a genuine, tried-and-true cure, that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs, so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choking, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It saves the wear-and-tear of internal medicines which ruin the stomach. It will heal up the diseased membranes and thus prevent colds, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and a good, free trial treatment and also a beautiful illustrated booklet, "How I Cure Catarrh", will be sent you at once, free, showing you how you can cure yourself privately at home.

Write him immediately.

Two Schools.

BY REV. HENRY VAN DYKE, D. D

I put my heart to school,
In the world where men grew wise.
"Go out," I said, "and learn the rule:
Come back when you win the prize."

My heart came back again,
"And where is the prize?" I cried.
"This rule was false, and the prize was pain,
And the teacher's name was Pride."

I put my heart to school
In the woods where wild birds sing,
In the fields where flowers spring,
Where brooks run cold and clear,
And the blue heaven bends near.
"Go out," I said, "you are only a fool,
But perhaps they can teach you here."

And why do you stay so long,
My heart, and where do you roam?
The answer came with a laugh and a song,
"I find this school is home."

Billy and the Wee Pig.

"Bill-y-y! Bill-eee!" This loud shout went after Billy into the land of dreams—beautiful land, where he rode a horse, owned a farm, and was "somebody pretty fine."

"Ye'es, sir," cried Billy, zealous to obey, the burr of sleep yet on his tongue. He tumbled out of bed, rubbing his shut eyes, and staggering on his slim legs to the head of the stairs, where he appeared in his night shirt, again saying, "Ye-es, sir!"

Billy had never seen a night shirt until he had come to Farmer Tracy's, in May, as a "fresh-air boy." He thought that a night shirt of new unbleached cotton, made long, and with a turned-down collar, was pretty nearly full dress. Farmer Tracy stood at the stair-foot; he had his spurs on, and a riding whip in his hand.

"Billy! do you suppose you could let out the sheep?"

"'Course I could!" cried Billy, getting awake very fast.

"Put them over in the big pasture, beyond the turnip field and the clover meadow."

"Oh, I know," said Billy.

"But they have to be got there, out of the stock yard," said the farmer.

"That's easy," said Billy. "You open the gates, and say, co-eee-ee-ee, and they all run out. They want to, you see."

"Yes; it's easy. You open the gates and call 'em. Then there's the collie in the barn. All you have to do is to open the gates, let out the collie, and he'll herd the sheep. I've got to get to town quicker'n a wink."

Billy was so eager to get out, and be independent shepherd of three hundred sheep, that he very nearly forgot his promise to Mrs. Tracy, that he would not leave his room until he washed his face, neck and hands, combed his hair, and said his morning prayer. However, he remembered at the last minute: "I won't go back on what I promised," said Billy, "and then it does feel nice to start the day kinder clean like inside and out."

At last away, on a sharp run, to the barnyards. The collie was let out, the big gate was thrown open. There was a rush of bleating sheep and barking collie, and ahead of it all a little boy in a red shirt, speeding away to the next gate. The gate was set wide, and Billy mounted the post to watch the sheep come up and go through.

But what was the yellowish red thing, crossing the corner of the clover field, with some pinkish thing on its neck? A lion, or tiger? Not big enough, and none wild here. A wolf or panther? Farmer Tracy said, "None 'round for forty years." A great bushy tail waved up. "A fox! A sure 'nuff fox!" Billy had stood to listen to the men's tales of fox hunts. Great foxes making for their holes across country. Robber foxes, that plundered poultry yards, and little lambs. Oh, if he could catch a fox! The sheep had a field and a half to cross before they came up to the last gate. Hooray for a fox hunt! Away raced Billy along the edge of the clover field, to meet the red robber. On came the fox and his booty to meet him; along the osage orange hedge ran the boy; up drew the sheep and smelled an enemy; the collie smelled him, too; boy shouted, sheep b-a-a-a-a-ed wildly, collie barked madly, and Mr. Fox dropped his burden, stretched out his tail level, and was off like the wind to his den on the hills, just tinted with the rising sun.

No use trying to catch him; race horses couldn't do it. But what had he dropped? Billy ran to search. He heard pitiful wailings. There lay a wee pink pig of a few days old. Its tail was bitten off, half of an ear was gone, and a large piece was torn out of its soft pink nose. Billy took the pig to a little stream, and washed its wounds. He had a clean handkerchief in his pocket, one of four Mrs. Tracy had made him out of a thin flour sack. He wet that and bound up the pig's wounded head. Then holding it carefully, as if it were a baby, Billy ran home toward breakfast.

But first he must tell his story, and minister to that pig. Mrs. Tracy gave him some old linen. "A pig can spare its tail," she said, "and a piece of an ear, but how that pig can ever root, or eat, with half its nose gone, I don't see."

"I'm going to feed it out of a bottle, like you did the cosset lamb," said Billy.

He made a bed in a basket, fed his pig new milk out of a bottle, wrapped it in flannel, and left it in peace.

At tea time Mrs. Tracy said, "I wonder whose pig that is?"

"Mr. Todd's, I reckon," said the farmer; "he owns a fresh litter of choice breed pigs."

This put a new light on affairs for Billy. He had thought this was his pig.

"That pig Mr. Todd's?" he cried.

"Guess so. Whose pig did you think it was?" said the farmer.

"Why, mine. In the city the boys all said—'finders keepers.'"

"Oh, no," said the farmer. "You must try and find an owner. Suppose a boy found that new hat I gave you, ought he to keep it?"

"I 'spose them city boys don't know everything," sighed Billy. "Well, shall I carry the pig over to Mr. Todd?"

"Better go first and inquire if it is his. No need to carry it half a mile and find it isn't his. If it is his, you can take it to him later."

Off went Billy, too sad to eat his supper. He wanted that little pig. Mr. Todd was by the pig pens. "I say, Mr. Todd, did you lose a tiny baby pig?" asked Billy.

"I should say I did. A varmint of a fox carried one off last night."

"I saw him with it and made him drop it," said Billy. "Its tail is gone, an' piece of its ear, an' half its nose, too."

"Pshaw!" said Mr. Todd.

"I bandaged it up and fed it out of a bottle," said Billy. "I'll fetch it over to you to-morrow mornin'. I'm kinder tired to-night."

"Land!" said Mr. Todd, "I haven't any time to feed pigs out of bottles, and I don't take much stock in a pig with half a nose. You can keep it, Billy, if you want it."

"Have it for mine—have it forever?" cried Billy wildly.

"My, yes, boy—I don't want it."

"That boy beats all for kindness to animals," said Farmer Tracy. "He oughtn't to live in the city, where he don't have any brutes to see to. The Bible says, good men are merciful to beasts—also good boys, or words very like it. I say, Billy, do you want to go back to the city?"

"No, sir-r, I don't," said Billy.

"Then what's to hinder your staying on here, for my boy? I'll make a farmer of you before you know it."

That was how Billy, the waif, came to stay where he had, as he thought, the nicest little room, the nicest food, the warmest clothes, the best district school, and the kindest people any boy ever had.

The next spring he sold his mended pig for $9.

"What you going to do with all that money?" asked the farmer.

"Put it in the bank and add more, till some day I can have a farm—a stock farm. Then here's what I'm going to put over the front gate: 'Everyboddy on this plaice has gott to be kind to annimiles.'"—Ex.

—When you secure subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist, you sell a paper the purchaser will actually read. This is different from merely "introducing a religious paper into a home."

—Editor Garrison's books are exceedingly popular to Disciples of every school of thought. "Christian Union" is the latest child of his brain. This scholarly and exceedingly interesting historical work is now ready for distribution. Price $1.

—A representative secured 60 new subscriptions to this paper in one day at Newcastle, Ind., recently. We believe this can easily be duplicated in hundreds of our congregations by Disciples desiring the influence of this earnest advocate of primitive Christianity.

—The men placed on our National programs and who thrill great convention assemblies are readers and thinkers. They get the best books. We correspond with them about books and papers. Let us thus help you into greater usefulness and prominence.

—Numerous letters are received philosophizing over The Christian-Evangelist's remarkable increase in circulation. The consensus of opinion is that it is not due to a change in the paper, but to the growing appreciation of a journal that never watches the weather vane of popularity, but is only concerned as to whether it is acceptably doing what Jesus would have it do.

—One of the greatest premiums we have ever offered for new subscribers is either "Helps to Faith," by Editor J. H. Garrison, or "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell. The proposition is limited to our preachers and students in our Bible colleges. Immediately on receipt of a new name accompanied by the $1.50, we send you your choice of these imperial books. Preacher: Why not thus secure both?

—It is confessedly difficult to keep our children in Bible school after they have passed their earlier teens. The most efficient aid in accomplishing it is a faithful and interesting teacher. The next best help is a vivacious, accurate, picturesque, instructive literature; both are needed. Our churches must furnish the first. In the Dowling series of Bible school supplies, this house will gladly send the second to all our churches.

—We printed 4,500 extra copies of our "Campbell number" of the 11th inst. These were quickly ordered and we could have sold 5,000 additional copies, but the next week's paper was already crowding our pressmen before the Campbell issue was taken from the press. But really every issue is a number of special value. We wish all Disciples were enjoying the weekly treat our editors and correspondents are giving the brotherhood.

—At a very low price we will furnish churches engaged in protracted meetings, with 300, 500, or 1,000 copies of this paper. With the first shipment we will send pink circulars to be inserted in The Christian-Evangelist and distributed throughout the community announcing the meeting, and containing pictures of pastors and evangelists. This not only insures a large audience from the first, but a house full of prepared listeners. Wherever tried, it is a great success. Write us for particulars.

—"Our Young Folks" and The Christian-Evangelist $1.75; a fountain pen and The Christian-Evangelist, $2; "The American Boy" (a splendid paper for boys) and The Christian-Evangelist, $2; "The Ladies' Home Companion" and The Christian-Evangelist, $2.25; a self-filling fountain pen, warranted ten years, and The Christian-Evangelist (to a new subscriber) $2.50; "The Review of Reviews" (price $3) and The Christian-Evangelist, $3. Any of these premiums makes a most acceptable Christmas gift. They may be ordered now and the premiums held until Christmas time.

—We trust all our church interests will be as greatly blessed by the Centennial esprit de corps as is The Christian-Evangelist. But blessings coming to this paper are heralds of greater ones coming to our other church interests. At least multitudes of friends believe that a great circulation of The Christian-Evangelist will be a lever lifting all our other enterprises higher up into places of sunlight, usefulness, and glory. Each week for months we have published lists of new subscriptions received at the uniform rate of $1.50 each in addition to multitudes of names coming singly and in pairs. The following were received last week:

King City, Mo., C. O. McFarland, pastor	3
Amity, Mo.	4
Wheeling, W. Va., W. H. Fields, pastor	4
Morristown, Ind., A. Burris, minister	6
Middletown, Ind., L. E. Murray, minister	12
Seymour, Ind., Harley Jackson, pastor	12
Georgetown, Ky., C. Kendrick, pastor	27

A Commendation and a Theory.

The American people love independence, and are not slow to recognize and reward a true patriot, whether in politics, religion, or society. The great increase in the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist, I think, is attributable to its non-sectarian, non-partisan, and non-commercial stand on recent questions of general interest to the brotherhood. Not that the entire brotherhood endorsed its position in every instance, but that they do endorse its independent non-selfishness, whether right or wrong in the points of contention and argument. Writing to you candidly, in the interest of the cause of Christ from the standpoint of one of the rank and file, I will say that our brotherhood has made a mistake in not building up a great religious weekly belonging to themselves as a whole, and not to private corporations or individuals. Had this been done, or were it done now, the questions of self-interest and commercialism would be eliminated from its leading editorials and arguments, with no effort whatever on the part of the writers. This must be done before we can ever have a mouthpiece for the entire brotherhood, without favor to its own business interests, or fear of loss of patronage, in publishing the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, as it is in Christ, as it is in the church, and as it is in the world. May God and the brotherhood speed the day!

Yours for the cause,
Mobile, Ala. J. Waller Henry.

SPECIAL CENTENNIAL FUND OF $250,000

FOR LAND AND BUILDINGS ON OUR FOREIGN MISSION FIELDS.

IN PERSONAL GIFTS BY THE CENTENNIAL, 1909.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society joins heartily in the Centennial campaign. We want to help to impress the world with its significance. We can never be a really great people in America if we do only small things in the heathen world. The chief strength of the apostolic church was expended outside of itself. This was one secret of its marvelous growth. God will measure us in 1909 as he is measuring us to-day, by what we are doing to redeem the world.

We appeal for a special Centennial Fund of $250,000 in personal gifts for lands and buildings. This is needed, every dollar of it is much needed. Indeed, our splendid army of workers, numbering nearly 500, are greatly retarded in their largest usefulness for lack of better equipment. The missionary in a heathen land must have a home in which to live, a chapel in which to preach, a school in which to teach, a hospital in which to heal, as workers in America. This fact will be appreciated by thoughtful Christian people at once.

YOUR PLEDGE GOOD.

Of course, you will help create this CENTENNIAL FUND. All our people will delight to have fellowship in this magnificent enterprise. We ask your co-operation NOW! Your generosity now will help to provoke many others to a like liberality.

Please sign the following pledge and cut it out or copy on a postal card and return AT ONCE. We hope to make a good report of progress soon. Be kind enough to act promptly and help to insure success from the very start. Make the amount as large as your liberality and purse will permit.

is just the help desired. It is in seven parts, as follows:

I. The Book, a general view and analysis of the books of the Bible, with numerous helpful diagrams and review questions.
II. The Christ, has general view of Names, Offices, Symbols, Types, with analytical view of the Prophecies concerning him, and a series of lessons covering his ministry.
III. The Church is considered in all its phases: The Church in Prophecy; The Church in Type; The Church's Name, Head, Foundation, Beginning, Membership, Ministry, Mission, Unity, and Future Glory.
IV. The Land treats of Bible Geography under "The Old Testament Land" and "The New Testament Lands." Has numerous maps and diagrams.
V. The Institutions are given close and careful study in clear and simple style, classified as Patriarchal, Jewish and Christian, definitions of each.
VI. The History gives full and succinct views of the "Chosen People" of Bible Times, as also, the Nations coming into contact with them.
VII. The People includes all those brought into prominence in Bible History and the Nations about them and dealing with them.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

—The great Buffalo convention was all athrill with interest in the greater one to be in Pittsburg in 1909. From a full heart The Christian-Evangelist acknowledges from many of our men and women who know expressions of appreciation for what it is doing through the dedication of this page and in its editorial columns toward making this Centennial the greatest religious event in American history since the formulation of the Declaration and Address.

—Secretary Rains' "Retrospect and Prospect" is inspirational Centennial Propaganda. The past of this society is glorious and safe. It has received and disbursed nearly $3,000,000. Such is its business standing that it can any day borrow $50,000 at the banks where it does business, yet it has never closed a year with any indebtedness resting upon it. Our hearts are with McLean, Rains, Corey and all who with them are training heathen voices to blend with ours in Centennial hallelujahs. Let us help them realize the quarter million dollars stipulated on the opposite page.

—W. F. Richardson's article following merits consideration. The Christian-Evangelist is no more seeking its "100,000 by 1909" for financial considerations than preachers seek larger fields of usefulness for increased perquisites. The shores of this Restoration are strewn with so many wrecked publishing houses (and so many others are in troubled waters) that our people surely know the publication of The Christian-Evangelist is purely altruistic. It is our way of serving. We wish to render the largest possible service. Will not our friends "adopt some plan, at an early date, whereby The Christian-Evangelist can be placed in every home of the church"? Almost any plan is better than none. What is yours? A greater Centennial awaits your answer.

The Minister's Assistant.

BY W. F. RICHARDSON.

I have read with great pleasure the recent statement of the large increase in the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist during the year just closing. This is a fact of considerable significance, as it seems to me, and I have been asking myself as to the reason for it. If you had been devoting the columns of your paper, during this time, to pushing your circulation, subordinating every other interest to that of your subscription list, and taking subscribers at greatly reduced rates, it could easily be explained. But you have said little, and that quite modestly, about the matter, and have held steadfastly to your regular subscription rates. I must therefore interpret the fact of this increase:

1. As an evidence of the merits of The Christian-Evangelist, as a religious paper, able to win its way by meeting the higher needs of our families, churches and ministers.

2. As an indication of the growing approval of our brotherhood of the spirit of the paper, as shown during some of the recent discussions, wherein some of our papers I fear fell far short of that frank and kindly disposition that ought ever to mark the utterances of brethren in Christ Jesus.

3. As a token of the increasing appreciation of the value of a good religious paper as an adjunct to the work of the pastor in his church and community. If we can secure the regular reading of a good religious paper in all the homes of the church, we will vastly augment our power as preachers of the Gospel, and elevate more rapidly the moral and spiritual tone of our Christian life.

I believe that every minister of Christ among us who realizes the value of your excellent paper ought to adopt some plan, at an early date, whereby The Christian-Evangelist can be placed in every home of the church. Nothing would tell more powerfully for the upbuilding of our people in spirituality and consecration. Let us have a general movement among our ministers to this end. Write to Brother Snively and he will help you in forming and carrying out your plans. We ought to give The Christian-Evangelist a hundred thousand new subscribers within the next year. And what this would mean to our sacred cause only eternity could tell.

Kansas City, Mo.

Retrospect and Prospect.

F. M. RAINS.

Marvelous growth has been made in the foreign missionary operations by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in the past thirty-one years of its history. The receipts have been doubled in seven years; they have been more than trebled in ten years, and the number of native evangelists has been multiplied by five in ten years and doubled in five.

The chief ground of gratitude for the society, however, is the character and faithfulness of the missionaries. What mighty men and women have come upon the stage of action within less than a third of a century! They are the choicest spirits of our churches. It is an honor to provide for them while they are doing the Lord's work. The glory of our people is not our fine churches, nor our great colleges, nor eloquent preachers, nor a great membership, nor wealth, nor learning; but our chief glory is the army of consecrated men and women who have buried themselves in the heart of pagan lands on the frontiers of the world that Christ may be known to those who sit in darkness and in death.

What a marvelous work has been done in heathen lands! Its missionaries have preached the Gospel in many cities and towns where the story of redemption was never before proclaimed. These heralds of the cross have baptized penitent believers in waters never before disturbed by the observance of the sacred ordinance. They have spread the table of the Lord in numerous communities for the first time. Tens of thousands of children to whom the story of the cross had never before come have been gathered into churches to learn of him whose cradle was a manger. Hundreds of thousands have received the kindly and healing touch of the medical missionary who before had never so much as heard of such merciful and helpful skill. The society has opened the doors of forty-two schools and colleges in these pagan lands where almost 2,500 are in daily attendance. About 400 orphans are clothed and fed and housed and daily trained in all Christian activities. Their dark minds are flooded with the light of life that comes down from him who is the light of the world. Christian homes have been planted; the opium eater has become the evangelist and church builder; the idolater now worships in spirit and in truth; and the licentious life has been transformed into one of purity and holiness.

No other society in the world has probably made greater growth in the last quarter of a century than this. But we have visions of larger and better things by 1909, the Centennial of the "Declaration and Address." The income should be doubled by the time 50,000 of our people gather in Pittsburg. To this end we labor.

The larger vision connected with the world's evangelization will do more to enrich and build up a church in its local work than anything else. Such a church stands with Christ on his highest ground, the ground of universality. What many a struggling church needs more than anything else is the inspiration of missions. If you seem to be small at home, annex the world. Have a share in big things. Keep in line with God's eternal purpose. Indeed, this is the need of our papers and our colleges and our pulpits and all who would restore the New Testament church.

The Foreign Society joins heartily in the Centennial campaign. We aim to do our part in celebrating the great event of the publication of the "Declaration and Address by Thomas Campbell.

The fathers of our movement pleaded for the union of the people of God to the end that the world might be evangelized. This is the meaning of our plea. This is our plea. It is primarily and essentially a missionary movement.

Current Events

St. Louis Nominations.

The "St. Louis Republic" in its issue of the 23rd contains an editorial on the nominations of the two leading parties for legislative and judicial officers in state and city, in which it says:

> "The citizens of St. Louis are confronted with legislative nominations that are, to say the least, a source of regret. In many instances the nominees are men who are not only without the necessary qualifications to serve in the legislature of a great state, but are, moreover, wholly unfit for any public office. . . . . The citizen who wants to place the welfare of his city and state above considerations of partisan success is left to choose, not between the better of two good men, but between the lesser of two evils. . . . In the list of candidates are to be found seven men who are bartenders, saloon keepers, or employees of breweries. Two others were formerly engaged in the business of selling liquor."

This is the class of men which the political machines of the two parties ask people to vote for. There is no reason why the citizens of St. Louis should be compelled, as the "Republic" says "to choose between the lesser of two evils." A movement was inaugurated by the ministers of the city, and backed up by the Anti-Saloon League, to put a clean ticket in the field, by selecting the few good men on both the party tickets, and supplementing them with independent candidates whose records give assurance that if elected they would serve with credit the interests of their city and state. But they did not get to work early enough to get the proper legal recognition and so the citizens of St. Louis are left in this deplorable situation. But they can at least scratch.

Mr. Hearst Commended.

A correspondent in the east, referring to a paragraph in this department concerning the gubernatorial situation in New York, infers some things concerning our estimate of Mr. Hearst, which we did not state, but he adds: "Mr. Hearst stands for honest count of the people's votes, against corporate greed and its 'baleful influence'; he prevented the present mayor of New York signing over and making a present of the people's money to the gas trust; he has also paid court expenses for about one thousand poor people to fight against corporate gas trust greed, in its attempt to rob them; he is so much like your own present governor of Missouri that the corrupt ones hate him," etc. If these things be true of Mr. Hearst, and we doubt not that he has his good points, they serve at least in part to account for the popularity which has given him the nomination of his party in that state against the protest of many of its leaders. It is no part of our duty or desire to take any partisan side in any purely partisan controversy. Our aim simply is to state facts and to estimate them in the light of moral principles.

Lake Mohonk Conference.

The Lake Mohonk conference held its annual session last week under the presidency of Andrew W. Draper. This conference is a voluntary meeting of a number of distinguished citizens who style themselves "friends of the Indians and other dependent peoples." May their tribe increase! They have for many years shown themselves good friends and true. Like the Indian Rights Association, of which Secretary Bonaparte has long been a moving spirit, the Lake Mohonk conference has achieved a considerable degree of practical helpfulness toward those whom we conventionaly call the nation's wards, without falling seriously into the feeble sentimentality to which the Indian question so readily lends itself. At the present time the Indians are, in the main, doing quite well. They are not a disappearing race. Probably there are as many of them in the United States as there were in the same territory when Columbus discovered America, and, in spite of the injuries which they have repeatedly received from the government, they are much better off than their ancestors were. Some of them are rich; most of them are comfortable; and nearly all of them are, through the care of the government, entirely free from those economic anxieties and uncertainties which are the lot of the average wage-worker. President Draper is right in saying that the Indian question is small and easy compared with the problems raised by our thirty-fold greater company of Filipino and Porto Rican dependents. There is opportunity for the patriotic and intelligent gentlemen who compose these nonpartisan associations to do a good service in considering and helping to solve these larger problems. So long as the Filipinos and the rest are exploited either for commercial gain or for political advantage, the real problems can not be seriously approached.

The recent lapse of the Cubans from self-government to temporary wardship gives us a new and more vivid idea of the magnitude and undesirability of our task of uplifting the Filipinos. But it must also be something of a backset to those who argue that the Filipinos are ready for immediate independence.

Federal Control of Insurance.

Senator Beveridge's suggestion, which he made in a political speech last week, was one which was certain to come from some one about now. It is that the scope of the federal government's jurisdiction must be stretched to include control of the insurance business, both fire and life. This would doubtless come within the generous limits of the president's newly proposed plan to secure federal control of all aggregated wealth which is enjoyed in interstate commerce. The assets of the great insurance companies certainly represent wealth in a highly aggregated form, and there is no doubt about their being engaged in interstate commerce. What the president said about the futility of state control of corporations is historically true as applied to the control of life insurance companies. Some states have done well, others ill. Some have had strict laws carefully enforced; some good laws feebly enforced; others, lax laws scarcely enforced at all. Massachusetts has been conspicuous for careful control. New York has recently become conspicuous for its inadequate control. Now it is doing better but there are plenty of other states where no proper cognizance is taken of the doing of insurance companies. Federal control is not a panacea for all evils, but it would reduce the danger. The only objection to it is the standing objection to the accumulation of more power in the hands of the federal government.

Revision Without Upheaval.

Senator Beveridge also argued for tariff revision, in the same speech in which he called for federal control of insurance. He wants it to be a very gentle and careful revision touching only three or four schedules—a "revision without upheaval." But can there be revision without upheaval? We have been repeatedly told by the stand-patters that a tariff is a complicated and delicate structure, no part of which may be touched without endangering the whole. It was upon this theory that Secretary Shaw, in his famous metaphor, exhorted the voters not to drop a monkey-wrench into the threshing-machine. It might be worth considering whether this impressive figure of speech is not a trifle too forceful for entire accuracy, and whether gradual revision might be not only desirable but safe. It was a wise utterance of Senator Beveridge's when he said that a tariff schedule which is not revised when it needs revision, becomes not simply an economic error but a moral wrong.

Libel.

We hear that Richard Croker, late boss of New York, and "baron" of Wantage and an English gentleman, recently forced an English newspaper to apologize for calling him the "robber chieftain of New York." The publisher was evidently a timid creature, for he must have known that, in such a case, it is a sufficient defense in a libel suit to prove the truth of the allegation. And it ought not to be hard to prove that Mr. Croker was the robber chieftain of New York. But why this new and strange sensitiveness on the part of Mr. Croker? In the old days his feelings were not so easily wounded. We do not remember ever to have seen the essential fact about his connection with New York politics stated more delicately or with more consideration for the feelings of the former chieftain. Time was when he only smiled and went on working "for his own pocket all the time," when the newspapers daily charged him with all manner of state's prison offenses. We take it that there is no danger of his return to take up his old vocation in New York. His cuticle has become too sensitive. No man who cannot preserve his cheerfulness when people call him a robber chieftain has any business to be a boss. Bosses must be made of sterner stuff.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—X.

The Right Use of Money.

The parable of the unjust steward (Luke 16:1-15) deserves careful study by those who would know the mind of Jesus concerning the right use of wealth. When this steward knew that he was about to lose his position of trust because he had wasted his master's goods, he hit upon the shrewd scheme of making his master's debtors his own debtors by cutting down their bills and thus placing them under obligations to him, so that when he was put out of the stewardship they might receive him into their houses. Even the master himself, at whose expense this servant had provided for his future comfort, could not but commend his wisdom, and Jesus himself adds that "The sons of this world are, for their own generation, wiser than the sons of the light." That is, they are often wiser in looking after their interests, for this present world, than the children of light frequently are in looking after their interests in the world that is to come. He then gives this admonition to his disciples: "Make to yourself friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles."

The right use of money, then, according to Jesus, is such use as will make friends who will receive us into their eternal tabernacles. To give money to care for the widow and the orphan, the homeless and the friendless, to send the Gospel to those who are perishing for lack of it, to endow colleges for the training of young men and women to become teachers and leaders of the people, to establish and promote whatever tends to alleviate human sorrow, promote human happiness and develop a truer and better civilization, would surely be to make friends by such use of it who would receive us into everlasting habitations.

In the same connection we have this lesson on the subject from the great Teacher: "He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much: and he that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another's who will give you that which is your own?" These are questions which we may well ponder upon our knees. It is no wonder that "the Pharisees, who were lovers of money, heard of these things and scoffed at him." No doubt there are rich men to-day in the church who would scoff at such teaching. But of such Jesus would say as he said of the Pharisees: "Ye are they that justify yourselves in the sight of men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is exalted among men is an abomination in the sight of God."

The story of the rich man and Lazarus is too familiar to need reciting. Jesus draws the picture as it is on this side, with the rich man clothed in purple and fine linen and faring sumptuously every day, while Lazarus, a poor beggar, was lying at his gate desiring the crumbs from his table and receiving them not; and then he lifts the curtain and shows us the scene on the other side with Lazarus in Abraham's bosom comforted, and the rich man in torment, and now himself a beggar, begging father Abraham to send Lazarus whom he had despised and neglected in this life, to minister to his relief. Lazarus was not saved because he was poor on earth, nor the rich man tormented in the future world because he was rich in this. The parable is designed to show how human judgments and situations are reversed by God: that a man may be poor and despised here, but accepted of God; and he may be rich and honored here and rejected of God, because of the improper use of the means and opportunities which God hath intrusted him with.

The parable of the pounds which a certain nobleman distributed among his servants to be used in his absence, and his condemnation of the "wicked servant" who made no use of his pound, contains a lesson too plain to be misunderstood. The pound was taken from the unfaithful servant and given to the one that would make better use of it, showing that Jesus intends that we shall make the best possible use of whatever ability we have received. The parable of the talents (Matt. 25) teaches the same lesson with the added thought that our responsibility is in proportion to the amount we have received. Both these parables accentuate the fact that what we have is given to us in trust, and that we will be held to a strict accountability for a wise use of the same.

The spirit in which we are to make our gifts and the standard by which they are measured in the sight of God, Jesus teaches from the incident of the poor widow casting into the treasury her two mites, and who, he said, gave more than all the rich men. Our gifts, then, are measured by our ability and by the spirit of consecration which prompts them. It is a great mistake therefore, and one widely prevalent, that because we can not give but little, we may with impunity neglect giving anything. Giving, it must be remembered, is essential to our own spiritual growth and development. God does not need our gifts, for "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," but we need to give for our own salvation and for the salvation of others.

The prominence which this subject has in the teaching of Jesus ought to give it more prominence in all our teaching and practice. We do not here enter upon the matter of tithing which is ably treated by many modern writers, further than to say that no man is likely to flourish in this grace of giving until he adopts some systematic method of giving, and divides his income with the Lord on some fixed basis, the very minimum being a tenth. When we begin to keep books with the Lord, conscientiously, all his work will prosper in our hands, and no righteous cause will be found begging for support.

"Beginning at Jerusalem."

The national convention has passed, and those of us who attended have come home rejoicing in reports of the success of the Gospel at home and abroad. Those who have read the reports share in this rejoicing. We feel that our labors and sacrifices have not been in vain in the Lord. The blesssed news of salvation from sin and death through Christ is bringing joy and hope to thousands of hearts beyond the seas in pagan lands, while in the general home field the same simple Gospel, untrammeled by human names, creeds and traditions, is winning its thousands to Christ and to our plea for Christian union.

But now we find ourselves confronted with the call for the observance of State Mission Day all over the Union. Is this out of harmony with what we have been hearing and rejoicing in at our national conventions? Not so. We are now to strengthen the base of all our wider missionary activities. At the foundation of all the success we have won in foreign fields, in the new states and territories, and in most of our great cities, is state missions. It was through the co-operation of the churches originally planted within the several states that the cause has been extended, first within those states, and then into the regions beyond and finally into pagan lands. This is a fact we must never forget, though the failure of many churches to observe the first Lord's day in November as State Mission Day shows that many of us are inclined to forget it. The principle involved in "beginning at Jerusalem" is just as true now as it was in the beginning. Let us see if this be not so.

What is the principle involved in the policy of "beginning at Jerusalem"? Was it not to use the most available material at hand out of which to make Christians in order to create a base of operations for carrying the Gospel into Judea, Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth? America is our Jerusalem, and the several states are, in our missionary geography, simply the subdivisions by means of which we are enabled to reach the whole country more effectively. We are strong in America just in proportion as we are strong in the several states of the Union. Or, if we use America in its continental sense, we are strong in America as we are strong within the several states of the Union and within the several provinces of Canada. We can not greatly extend our work either in foreign lands or in the religiously waste places of America, only as we strengthen the base of supplies within the several states and provinces. We can strengthen our base of supplies in two ways: first, by increasing the number of churches, and, second, by strengthening the churches already in existence. This is the twofold purpose of our state co-operations. They seek to plant as many new churches as possible in the most needy fields and at the most strategic points, to enlist as many churches as possible in co-operation in all parts of our missionary work, and through this mutual co-operation to strengthen, both spiritually and numerically, all the churches.

We have said that America is our Jerusalem. It is a very large Jerusalem. Here is to be found the most available material out of which to make Christians to be used in world-wide evangelization. We must continue, therefore, our active operations here while sending out the Gospel abroad, until this wide field has been brought under spiritual cultivation. If it is folly to say, as some do, that we must defer operations abroad as long as we have heathens at home, it would be equally fatal for us to conclude that we may discontinue our evangelistic operations at home in order to push the work in foreign fields. The work at home and abroad must go on, side by side, and the one will prosper as the other prospers, and suffer as the other suffers.

In these days of Centennial preparation there is special need that our offerings for state missions be brought up to a higher figure if we are to reach our Centennial aims. Perhaps the weakest point in our "far-flung battle line" is state missions. Reinforcement at this point, therefore will send a thrill of renewed confidence and of expectant victory all along the line. May we not hope, therefore, that our churches everywhere will observe the first Lord's day in November as state mission day, with the same conscientiousness and regularity as they observe other fixed days for our missionary offerings?

Sam Jones.

He was unique. There was only one original, though there were many imitators. He had a zeal for righteousness, having himself been rescued from sin. He believed in the power of God to save the worst of sinners. His career was more like that of John the Baptist, minus the baptism, than that of any man of modern times. He rose to fame in the mountains of the south as John the Baptist rose to fame in the Judean wilderness, by denouncing sin and calling the people to repentance. He feared God, but the fear of man was not before his face. There was not much sectarianism about him. He said he was a Christian, and that Methodism was only the harness in which he worked. He could work with all Christians and did do so. Our ministers worked with him harmoniously. He seemed to like them and they liked many things about him. When one of our ministers took him aside once and explained to him the way of salvation according to the New Testament, he thanked him most heartily and said he had a better understanding of the subject than ever before. Behind a rough exterior he had a tender, loving heart that sympathized with the sinful and the sorrowing. He was capable of rising to the loftiest heights of sacred eloquence, and of making an appeal before which the strongest men trembled. His methods, perhaps, could not all be approved; his speech often offended ears polite; but he stood foursquare against every popular evil that assailed our humankind, and his whole influence was thrown on the side of righteousness and against wrong. We doubt not that many thousands will rise up in the future to call him blessed, because he aroused them from the stupor of sin and brought them to repentance. May he have many successors in spirit, in courage, in faith, if not in method.

Newspaper Evangelism.

We believe we are entering upon an era of both wider and deeper evangelism—wider, because more workers will engage in it, and a wider scope will be covered; deeper, because of an increasing consciousness that only genuine conversions to Christ strengthen the church. A new force has recently entered into our evangelism. The religious newspaper is being used as never before as an adjunct to the preaching of the evangelist. The Christian-Evangelist, true to its name, has entered this field and desires to make itself increasingly useful, both in helping to turn people to Christ, and in building them up in Christian faith and life.

We are asking the co-operation of a large number of our ministers, in sending us short, fresh, pointed articles on the different phases of our holy evangel, which shall make each issue of the paper an able assistant of the pastor or evangelist in soul-winning. The ministers and others thus co-operating with us will greatly extend their ministry, and we shall all be co-workers together in winning men from the service of sin, whose wages is death, to the service of Christ, whose gift is life eternal. Our evangelists are already using the paper in large numbers, and now that we are taking special pains to make The Christian-Evangelist serviceable in this direction, we shall expect a still greater demand for it.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
When life goes by like a song—
But the man worth while
Is the man who will smile
When everything goes dead wrong.

Convention Notes and Personals.

Our space last week did not permit us to complete all we wished to say concerning our recent convention for the benefit of our readers who were not present. We feel that a religious journal has no higher public function to discharge than to report adequately so great and important a gathering as our national convention.

Considering the proximity of Niagara Falls to Buffalo, it is complimentary to the delegates that so many of them stayed by the sessions of the convention throughout. Any effort to conduct excursions during the regular sessions of our conventions ought to be discountenanced.

One of the best short speeches of the whole convention was a purely extemporaneous one by the chairman of the local committee on arrangements, R. H. Miller, pastor of the Richmond Street church, who, when called out on the last evening, made a most appropriate and effective speech which the convention greatly appreciated. He spoke for the other members of his committee as they were too modest to appear. The last hour of every convention ought to be given to short, extemporaneous, voluntary speeches, summing up the lessons and impressions of the convention.

Few men in our ranks have been more faithful in their attendance at these conventions and have contributed more to their success in the past than the veteran Robert Moffett, of Cleveland, who for many years was the standard bearer of the American Christian Missionary Society. His whole life has been a contribution to the cause of missions. He is now rendering good service as secretary of the committee on Christian union.

This leads us to say, in reply to some inquiries, that at a meeting of as many of the delegates to the Interchurch Conference in New York City last November, as could be gotten together in Buffalo, together with a few other brethren of influence, it was decided that the official communication sent by the committee of correspondence in that body to the Disciples of Christ in convention assembled, be turned over to the standing committee on Christian Union for their consideration and future report.

It was pleasant to note in the convention the presence of S. C. Toof, one of the pillars of our cause for many years in the city of Memphis, who, with his wife and daughter, attended the Buffalo convention and greatly enjoyed its proceedings. To secure a larger number of our business men at our conventions is a most desirable consummation.

The report of the committee on registration, which Bro. A. B. Kellogg has kindly furnished us, some facts from which are reported elsewhere, emphasize the need of a more representative body, not in the character of the men who attend, but in a larger number of representatives from churches in all sections of the country. Steps should be taken at once to remedy this defect by providing for a delegate body. The first step in this direction has already been taken in providing for the revision of the constitution. This revision should embody a new basis of representation, and, no doubt, will do so. The churches must be brought into closer contact with our missionary work, as they are furnishing the sinews of war. This, of course, need not interfere with a large miscellaneous attendance upon the proceedings of the convention, but it would secure a delegated body who would feel responsible for the proper dispatch of the business of the convention.

Much greater space might be given to the brief addresses of the missionaries, if they had been stenographically reported. Cory of China, Eldred of Africa, McPherson of Cuba, and his wife, and others, made ringing speeches. When Eldred said, "I would rather be buried under the palms of Bolengi than in any other place in the world," he revealed the spirit of a true missionary.

Editor's Easy Chair.

As one wakes from some pleasant dream regretfully, wishing its bright scenes and associations might have been real and permanent, so we who attended the Buffalo Convention are recalling now the casual meetings of friends, the warm hand-clasps, and then the passing on of the rapid panorama. There come to us mere glimpses of faces that smiled upon us and vanished in the press of people, and we saw them no more. Now that we look back upon it we wish we might have taken the time for a friendly stroll and chat together with these dear friends whom we so seldom meet. But, alas, there was no time to take. We wonder sometimes whether it were not worth while to have a convention without any program or any business, but just for personal intercourse, where heart could commune with heart. It does seem, at least, that we could afford to be less in a hurry in these great gatherings, and take a little more time to get acquainted with each other and to strengthen the tie that binds. This is by no means the least important function of our conventions. Let us arrange next year, and every year, for at least one hour in which we can all come together without a program, and with only some one to preside and introduce each person with name and postoffice, asking it where he does not know it, and where each speaker will have from one to three minutes to say what is on his heart, or to pray, or to sing, as the Spirit might move him. And then if there could be longer intervals between sessions in which friend could meet friend and in which those happy reunions of various kinds could be held, it would add a satisfying element to these conventions which they seem to lack.

One of the happiest little reunions which the Easy Chair has enjoyed for a long while, was the English tea-meeting at Buffalo, and the reunion of some of the men and women who toiled together in old England a quarter of a century ago, concerning which another pen has written elsewhere in this issue. While enjoying the reminiscenses of that brief hour, and feeling how strong is the bond of friendship that binds together that surviving band of workers, the thought came to us that one of the sweetest joys of heaven will be for friends who have known each other and have toiled together in the kingdom of God on earth to meet up there, in some fair sequestered nook by the river of the water of life, and talk over the scenes, associations, labors, and triumphs of the earth-life. And then there will be so much time for it! One of the verses of an old hymn which used to strike our youthful imagination, was:

"When we've been there ten thousand years
Bright shining as the sun;
We've no less days to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun."

But we do not believe we shall devote all our time to singing, even in heaven. There will be time for association, intercourse, and for recalling the experiences of the life which we are now living in the flesh. And heaven will be all the sweeter because of the blessed memories which join together the life in this terrestrial body, and the life in the body celestial. No heaven that does not link itself with earth, and the conflicts and experiences of earth can ever satisfy the human heart.

To-day is a typical autumn day. The skies are overcast with scurrying clouds and the great oaks at Rose Hill sway and moan before the wind. One feels to-day as he looks out upon the splendid pageant of autumn, the truth of the poet's lines:

"When spring first breathes on the russet hill
In her own faint, lovely fashion,
One's pulses stir with a sudden thrill;
But when autumn comes the heart stands still,
Moved with a deeper passion."

Yes, "with a deeper passion." Somehow these wailing winds and falling leaves do stir up feelings that lie too deep for utterance, and start questions that go down to the very roots of our being. Are these fading and falling leaves one of God's methods of reminding us that all earthly pomp and glory will soon fade away and fall to the ground like these autumn leaves? That God is speaking to the human soul in Nature, as well as in that Sacred Volume in which breathes the Spirit of God, we do not doubt. Every season and every phenomenon in nature has its voice and its message from Him who paints the rose and the lily, and clothes the forests with their autumnal robes. But is it altogether sad—this message from God that "we all do fade as a leaf," and that as the leaves now falling are to be succeeded by other leaves, so others will take the places we now hold, live in the houses we now inhabit, do the work that we are now doing, and enter into the experiences of joy and of sorrow through which we are now passing? Not if we have a heavenly Father whose hand is leading us, and whose love has prepared for us something "far better" beyond, than anything we have known here, glorious as this has been. So we refuse to be saddened by the message of autumn.

Kipling has recently written a verse that is likely to live longer than much he has written. It is a genuine expression of true patriotism which Americans no less than Englishmen can apply to their own land.

"Land of our birth, our faith, our pride,
For whose dear sake our fathers died,
O, Motherland, we pledge to thee,
Head, heart and hand through years to be!"

It is a good thing to renew this pledge of devotion to our Motherland in these election days, and to see to it that we serve her with head and heart and hand. There is a conjunction of two events just now in both of which we may serve our country and show the quality of our patriotism. In the election now pending, we may serve our country best by voting only for men known to be honest and capable, no matter if others of a contrary kind have their names upon our party ticket. In this way independent voters will force their party leaders to nominate worthy men, and in no other way. Just preceding the election, on the first Sunday in November, we will have opportunity of showing our patriotism, as well as our Christianity, by an offering for the preaching of the gospel in the several states and the inculcation of those truths and principles which are essential to the perpetuity of all free government. There is no truer patriotism, and none so effective, as that which seeks to evangelize and to bring under the influence of the gospel of Christ, the people of these great commonwealths in whose hands are the destiny of these states and of the nation. Give liberally for missions, and vote for honest men, and you may sing Kipling's verse as quoted above. The gospel of a united Church fits in well with our political gospel of the United States. Our freedom in Christ harmonizes beautifully with liberty under our constitution and flag.

Plea of our faith, our hope, our love,
For whose dear sake our fathers strove,
O, blessed Christ, we pledge to thee
Head, heart and hand through years to be!

With apologies to Mr. Kipling we present the foregoing as a pledge worthy of these great Centennial days among the Disciples of Christ. If there is one word that expresses all that is involved in the great plea which our fathers inaugurated and for which they strove, nearly a century ago, that word is Christ. Christ in faith, in doctrine, in His ordinances, in His church, making it one, and uniting it to Himself in holy wedlock, and using it to convert the world—that is the plea of our fathers and it is our plea. May we not pledge to such a holy cause, the service of our "head, heart and hand, through years to be"? We believe there is almost universal readiness among us to pledge loyalty to this great plea. Not a halting or hesitating note did we hear, in all the great addresses at our recent national convention. Heart, conscience, intellect, all seemed to be enlisted in the plea for the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of His disciples, according to His own spirit and method. Let this spirit of devotion to the plea of our faith, our hope, our love be universal, and we shall see greater things in the years to come than our fathers were ever permitted to see. But this requires that we shall be as alert to the opportunities of our times, and as ready to adapt ourselves to them as our fathers were to the opportunities of their day. It is only by continuing to be a growing religious movement, keeping pace with the advancing knowledge and changing needs of the world that we can remain loyal to the spirit of our fathers, and make vital to the people of the present day, the principles which were so potential in their day.

"And When the Year's End Came"

An Address on Higher Ideals in Christian Stewardship, delivered at the Buffalo Convention

By Harry D. Smith

Hopkinsville, Kentucky

In wealth, as increased and endowed through modern invention, is a wonder-working power concerning which let us ask during the next score of minutes two questions:

1. What are we Disciples doing with it? It were easy to answer this question so as to beget and foster self-complacency. For our charity is various and beautiful and achieves mightily for the help of a needy world. Where it goes, and it is by no means provincial in its travels, "the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cared for, if not cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead in trespasses and in sins are raised up, and even the poor have the good tidings preached to them."

But to answer only so were to blink much more than half of the truth, and so to do ourselves vast harm. For what we need most and indispensably in this, as in every other matter, is not to feel good about it, but to know the truth of it. Indeed there is no deadlier foe of the duty yet to be done in any relation than satisfaction, not to say boastfulness, on account of present attainments. "Brethren, I count not myself to have laid hold," is the voice of a living, growing, battling, conquering soul. Whoever says or thinks the opposite is dead or dying. Recently, while in Japan, Mr. Bryan was praising the enlightenment, loyalty and efficiency which were in evidence everywhere about him. A distinguished leader said to him: "You have praised us; we thank you. Now, tell us the worst thing you have seen in Japan that we may correct it." O, my friends, we wish to know, at least we ought to wish to know, the worst things in the kingdom of Christ and especially among ourselves, that by his grace, we may correct them.

Now, just what are we Disciples doing financially for the kingdom of God?

Our year book for 1905 credits us with gifts to all causes during the year just preceding its issuance which aggregated, in round figures, seven and a half millions of dollars. A vast sum, which tempts one to mention it with unction and think of it with pride. But let us defer our exultation while we ask two or three questions. First, who gave this sum? On the face of the matter it is the gift of the brotherhood, numbering a million and a quarter. And how much is that from each of us, supposing we all gave equally? The year book saves us the trouble of performing the division and answers six dollars and a quarter. These millions that tempt us to be proud of ourselves, they dwindle, do they not, when we cut them up this way? But some one says, "The most of the brethren are sisters." Well, what of that? Have not women money? Do they not spend money? Somewhere I have got an idea that women, some few of them, do sometimes, that is, occasionally, spend money—a little, just a little, of it. But one is told, and seriously, that since their husbands are members of other churches, or of no church, many Christian wives are deterred by feelings of delicacy from asking for money for the support of the Church. That is, one may ask one's husband for the price of silken gowns, Parisian hats, trinkets of gold, diamonds, horses, carriages, houses, and suffer no inconvenience from one's feelings of delicacy; but only let one think of asking him for money for the Lord who bought one, and one has a spasm of delicacy that chokes one into dumbness. Does anybody think $6.25 is other than a trifling gift from the average woman of our churches for a whole year?

I say, then, if we were all women, we should be easily able to give all we now give and much more.

But another tells me that we have many children among us. Again I tell you, if we were all children between 10 and 16 years of age, such as are now in the homes of our people, we should be able to give this average out of our pocket change and still have left to spend upon our pleasures.

Still another reminds me of our poor. Yes, some of us are poor—so poor that a gift of $6.25 would be creditable to us. But we are very few, a really negligible quantity in the present matter.

But the truth concerning the elements which go to make up our numbers is of course that we are not all women who are financially dependent, nor children, nor poor, nor any combination of these. Besides these elements, we have a host of women with their own means, many youths and maidens with considerable incomes, an army of artisans with wages ranging from $1.50 to $6 a day, another army of farmers owning millions of acres of our best lands, another army of merchants, brokers and bankers who have incomes ranging from $1,200 to $12,000, another army of physicians, lawyers and civil engineers of like earning capacity. We have also among us railway officials, cattle kings, coal and iron kings. We have not a few who would regard the largest income just mentioned as small. And it is certain that we add tens of millions to our property yearly.

We are, indeed, not such, as tried by the standards of the new and marvelous prosperity of our own America, would be called rich, but we are vastly well to do. Further, I think it likely that in the average of physical satisfactions enjoyed, no equally numerous religious body ever excelled us; for while we have less than some others, what we have is more equally distributed among us.

Let us ask a second question. For what was this average of $6.25 given? If it was given for some trifling or secondary interest, it was perhaps enough, or even too much, for even the rich may be excused for giving trifles to trifling objects. But what is the fact? The year book says it was given to all our causes. It was our total money gift to make the world more like Christ. Our gifts to our local poor were in it. Fortunately for the poor, as noted a moment ago, they are not very numerous and not very poor. It included our gifts to all our home churches, for preaching, for music, for incidentals and repairing and improving property. Our gifts to schools, colleges and universities were in it. And not one of these is adequately endowed. Many have no endowment at all. Teachers in these institutions, and some of them our greatest teachers, such is my information, are working on meager salaries, insufficient to enable them to do their best work, and dying at last in such poverty as is a shame to us all. In this average were our gifts to negro evangelization and education, to city evangelization and to district, state and general home missions. In all of these departments there is the greatest need of more men, while many an one of those already at work suffers for lack of proper shelter, and sometimes of even fire or food. There is room, my friends, for a supplement to "Fox's Book of Martyrs." The new work would be called "Lives of American Home Missionaries."

And of this average we gave about eight cents to build houses of worship for our new churches, twelve hundred of which have no house of their own.

To foreign missions we gave something more than 20 cents. This to evangelize and educate two-thirds of the race! This to give the hope of Christ to those who die, not having known of him, at the rate of an hundred thousand every day!

"Worthy followers of the prophets we who hold our gold so dear,
True descendants of the martyrs, Christ held far and coin held near,
Bold co-workers with the Almighty, with our twenty cents a year.

See the few, our saints, our heroes, battling bravely hand to hand,
Where the myriad-headed horrors of the pit possess the land,
Striving one against a million to obey the Lord's command.

Christians, have you heard the story, how the basest man of men
Flung his foul, accursed silver in abhorrence back again?
Thirty pieces was the purchase of the world's Redeemer then.

Now, its twenty cents in copper, for the Savior has grown cheap
Now to sell our Lord and Master, we need only stay asleep.
Now, the accursed Judas money is the money that we keep."

Let us suspend our pride in our gifts a moment longer, while we ask one more question. To whom did we give this $6.25? We gave it to Jesus Christ. We gathered at the table where he wished us to remember his humiliation, his wounds and his death for us. We did this every week. And whenever we were gathered thus the Master came and held out his right hand and said, "Freely ye have received, freely give," and we covered the nail-print in that gracious hand with our weekly gifts. And when the year's end came this was the total of them.

But we are reminded of the fact that some of us gave liberally, even hundreds and thousands of times this average. For this giving, as it is related to the givers, we rejoice. For it, as it is related to the liberality of the most of us, we must grieve the more, since credit for the few in this case means deeper shame for the many.

2. We have now thought somewhat of our neglect to use our property largely in the maintenance and spread of the Gospel. It is time to think of our duty more positively. How much ought we to give for these mighty purposes? Upon what plan or plans? With what motives?

The beginning of wisdom touching giving is that we have nothing to give—nothing. The Bible resounds with God's claim to all that we have. "The silver and the gold are mine"; "The cattle on a thousand hills are mine," nor is claim laid to all property merely, but to all the world, including those who dwell in it. "Behold, all souls are mine." The tithe, as has been repeatedly pointed out, was simply a part of one's wealth, asked and accepted by God, for specific uses, in token that one's whole wealth was his. In Christ the ancient claim is doubled. In him we are debtors not only for creation and sustenance, but for our redemption also. "Ye are bought with a price."

Why then speak of giving at all? It is a convenient word. It marks a distinction from the use of money or property in trade. The Master used it, and the Biblical writers generally used it. But the Christian, nay, all men, should always read or hear it, remembering that the highest and absolute truth is that they have nothing to give—except in the name of God, whose stewards they are. For property, like

> "Merit lives from man to man,
> And not from man, O Lord, to Thee."

Hence it follows that one is bound to use all one's property, not one-tenth, or one-half, or nine-tenths of it, for him.

How? Shall one pay it all into the Church treasury? No, one must live, even though he recognize his stewardship to God. So must his family. "He who provides not for his own has denied the faith." So must the state "render therefore to Caesar the things that are Caesar's." Nor is there any intimation in Biblical teaching that the demands of taste or culture are to be ignored and neglected. On the contrary, the Bible is the most beautiful of books, not only in respect of the moral ideas which it contains, but also in its literary forms. And this most beautiful of books dwells fondly upon the beauties of earth and sea and sky. It revels here and there in the beauties of great buildings even. It lures us on our earthly way with pictures of a beautiful heaven. The God of the Bible has found beauty very useful, and we shall not do our best for him without it, and without a delicate taste for it.

Now, how shall I distribute my Lord's money, which he has intrusted to me? He has given me no detailed instructions, such as he gave his earlier trustees, the ancient Jews. Instead of all these, he has given me a single commandment, to love him and humanity for his sake. In the light of this, and of this alone, I must discharge my trust, apportioning to each interest of what he has placed in my hands. He trusts me freely, largely, wondrously, that he may in this way bring me to be worthy of his trust. Therefore none must seek to supply the commands that he has not seen fit to give.

However, one may properly be advised as to the application of this one new commandment. And one needs such advice sorely. In what shall it consist?

Mingled with and mastering all particulars such as would be suitable to our many and various specific cases, these principles, you will agree, should appear:

First—Love must consider what is the supreme concern of the beloved, and make that her own supreme concern. What is the supreme concern of God in Christ? Let our Lord himself answer: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost." Saving the world from sin, then, is our supreme affair, if indeed we love God.

Second—Again love must have regard in her distribution of her Lord's bounty, of course, to every need of those for whom he lived and died, but her chief regard should be to their chief need. And what is the world's chief need? Jesus taught that it was salvation from sin.

Third—But love will cause one to spend on oneself what will make one the best possible servant of his Master's interests. As my Lord's servant I owe myself care, not merely to the extent of the bare necessities of physical life, but of preparation and equipment for a larger usefulness.

Fourth—Love will also make one most scrupulous, lest beginning to care for himself, for his Master's sake, he should end with caring for himself for his own sake. "Love seeketh not her own."

Fifth—And when doubt arises, as it must, as to whether one shall spend upon one's self, or upon others, love will give others the benefit of the doubt.

Sixth—Again, he who loves gives cheerfully, gladly, hilariously. He who would learn to love must give as he can.

Seventh—Nor does love ask how much must I give to answer the world's need of Christ, but how much can I give?

Eighth—And it is safe to say that love will scrutinize with a lynx-eyed scrutiny all its expenditures; it will ask itself such blunt, practical questions as these: "How much of Christ's money shall I spend for tobacco?" "How much for the theater?" "How much for social entertainments?" "How much for excursions of mere pleasure?" "How much for diamonds?" "How much for expensive clothing, seldom worn?" "How much for delicate food?" "How much for houses unused the most of the year?" "How much for needless horses and carriages?" She will arouse her conscience to new alertness and fineness of perception, occasionally demanding sternly, "May I feast while my neighbor starves?" and, "Who is my neighbor?" "Is he not any human being anywhere whom I may help? And have I not then many starving neighbors? Some whose bodies die of hunger, and a world full of neighbors whose souls are hungry?"

But is there no word of the New Testament that so much as hints a plan of giving? In the way of definite sums or fixed percentages there is none. What then of the tithe? It is not commanded, and as a tax, to be imposed by the Church upon its members, is not therefore allowable. As a tax upon one's self, imposed by one's self, it is permissible, and in view of our present low ideals of our stewardship, its adoption were a gigantic stride upward. Especially, if it be regarded as a minimum beyond which one will give as much as one can, much can be said for it. First, it had the divine approval for ages. We are nowhere forbidden to use it thus individually and voluntarily. As a minimum below which we are not to permit ourselves to give no one could, of course, imagine that it would displease our Lord. The suggested reflection that a Christian ought to do as a matter of liberality as much as the ancient Jew did from necessity (and the latter paid out not one-tenth, but two or more, for religious purposes), is sound and just, and should stir us as with the trump of God.

But to renew our question. Does the New Testament offer us no word concerning a plan of giving?

The nearest approach to what might properly be called a plan of giving is in these familiar words: "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store as he may prosper." To the reverent and receptive spirit these words are full of guidance. They are resplendent with practical wisdom. Some one has happily called them "the inspired rule of three." "Upon the first day of the week" means give regularly. The most of us give by fits, and the fits, unhappily, are neither violent nor protracted. "Each one of you" means let everybody give. Don't give in spots. We not only give in spots, but often the spots are so microscopic that you can not see them well with the naked eye. "As he may prosper" means give in proportion to what you have and what you make. It means that every gift is justly estimated according to what the giver retains. A fifth of a cent measured against nothing retained is an infinite gift. Any fraction divided by nought gives infinity, while a million divided by a million gives only one.

"The accursed Judas money is the money that we keep."

My friends, every time is a great time, if only there be somewhere a great man or a great people to give practical recognition to the fact. Nevertheless, some times seem more favorable to the accomplishment of desirable ends than others. Such a time is the present to us. It is almost an hundred years since, in the beginnings of our history, liberty in Christ came to a new birth. In view of this, our minds are being renewed in the thoughts and our hearts and wills in the affections and purposes which belonged to our earliest days. As is fitting, we are preparing to give expression to these in a monumental meeting, in the very region where they had their first adequate utterance. With tongue and pen our leaders call upon us to make that meeting worthy of our cause. The period is not long until we shall stand upon that sacred soil. What memories shall throng us there! We shall remember, among other things, that something more than a hundred years before, on the opposite edge of the same state, political liberty was also born again. We shall think of Thomas Jefferson and his Declaration, and of Thomas Campbell and his declaration, in the same moment, and we shall tell one another that in ultimate significance to mankind the latter declaration is not less than the former. We shall add, with conviction: "It is the finger of God that unites thus in their beginnings the freest of churches and the freest of countries." We shall recall and reckon up there what we owe our country, how her liberty has given play and power to our own. It were good to be able to remember there, also, that we had paid this debt in the amplest ministry of the Word possible to us among the people of our own land. We shall also crave there to be able to remember that we made some worthy effort, at least, that the influence of our Lord might be as wide and penetrate to every place as quickly as the influence of our country. In a word, we shall there wish to have done our utmost for Christ.

During the next three years, my friends, we shall look back to the autumn of 1809 and forward to the autumn of 1909. Stirred with the story of the centuries beginning, and expectant of its illustrious ending, we should be capable of high things. There are a million and a quarter of us. Our people are intelligent, and not a few of them have a good degree of sound learning. We have the secret of the most successful evangelism seen in modern times. We are young and full of a mighty hope. The instinct of victory is within us; we have abundant means. We are not ungenerous, merely untaught in respect to money.

Brethren, we shall not have used our opportunity well unless these three years be made to exceed in tangible results any decade of our history thus far. But if we shall achieve thus we must be taught and practice some goodly part of our duty in respect to money; and we who constitute this convention must hold ourselves largely responsible for that teaching.

"Give as the morning flows out of heaven,
Give as the waves when their channel is riven
Give as the free air and sunshine are given
Lavishly, utterly, ceaselessly given.

Not the waste drops of our cup overflowing
Not the faint sparks of our hearts overglowing
Not a pale bud from the June roses blowing
But as He gave to thee, who gave thee to live."

The Two Nations

By William Durban

As years roll on, and my acquaintance with the great world enlarges, I seem to be more and more deeply impressed with the conviction that our Anglo-Saxon race is destined to control the future. At the outset of these present observations I may observe that the term "Anglo-Saxon" is here used in a large sense which includes a reference to the British and American nations taken collectively. For, although little England and the mighty United States contain exceedingly composite nationalities the Anglo-Saxon element is predominant; and, moreover, this element is welding all others into harmony with itself. I recently, while in the United States, went over some immense cement works. I found that nearly all the workmen were Hungarians. But the descendants of these will be undistinguishable from Anglo-Saxons. So it is with us in the United Kingdom, for though, as Tennyson says, "Saxon and Norman and Dane are we," we entirely forget the two latter categories and only the first counts.

International Rivalry.

Last Saturday masses of spectators swarmed along the banks of the River Thames. It is calculated that the crowd was the biggest that has ever assembled on any occasion in the world's history, for it must have numbered at least half a million people. The occasion was the boat race between an American and a British crew, representing Harvard and Cambridge universities, respectively. The contest was one of the most brilliant and exciting ever witnessed in athletic annals, and though the English crew happened to win, the Harvard crew attracted universal admiration. It matters not which side wins or which loses in such competitions. England has been defeated in the great yacht races, year after year, but the benefit of this kind of international rivalry is independent of victory for this or that side. The spirit evoked was well expressed by a London paper, "The Morning Leader," which said: "We are all glad that Cambridge won—even Oxford men were observed to cheer. We shall all be glad, too, if Harvard wins another time." Most likely Harvard will win another time. The British people are proud of being related to a nation which is a match for it, but which it can possibly sometimes excel. Americans and Britishers know that neither nation can in all respects outshine the other. But they can not do better than sustain an amicable rivalry in all directions in which they can show the world that both peoples are indomitably strenuous. The English people are saying to the grand Harvard rowers, "Come again!"

Britannia and the Sea.

As I have so recently landed on English shores after a voyage on the Caronia, I am mindful that I went away on the sister ship, the Carmania, a description of which I wrote some months ago for this paper. These are the two biggest ships on earth, but I can not forbear writing a few words about what appears to me to be a remarkable sign of the stupendous progress of civilization in this age. Before these lines reach America there will be launched two vessels which will be larger than any hitherto built. These will be the Mauretania and the Adriatic. Both will be launched on the same day—one at Newcastle, the other at Belfast. Thus does England still hold primacy on the sea. It is surely not an evil for the world that she should do so. For ours is a maritime empire. Our shipping is of utility to all nations. And wherever the British flag flies it is honestly intended to be the signal of human freedom. I have frequently heard Americans who know both countries say that there is even greater liberty in England than in America; and I have listened with deepest interest to some interesting arguments in which they have tried to prove their statement. I do not presume to decide; nor do I think there is much difference. The Anglo-Saxon race possesses, as no other race does, the instinct for freedom, the genius of liberty and the Anglo-Saxon spirit has decided once and for ever in favor of popular liberty. All our political fights are only struggles for certain preferential phases of that liberty.

The Anglo-American Pulpit Alliance.

I should now like permission to inform my kind American readers why I am so ardently attached to the work of the Disciples of Christ, as represented in the Old Country. Apart from the fundamental principles of the New Testament advocacy and from the movement which is going forward slowly but surely, even in this conservative country, I know of no system which so conspicuously and so continuously plants American preachers before the English public. I wish that a hundred of our American preachers could be sent here for ten years to echo our plea in a hundred different districts of these islands. Scotland has not even one! Ireland has not a single individual of this category! Yet Alexander Campbell was born in Ireland and studied in Scotland. Wales has not one of our own preachers. It is the most spiritual country on earth, but knows nothing whatever of this Reformation, and the great revival only issues in a renewed sectarian activity. I note with much satisfaction that our F. C. M. S. is constantly increasing its staff of missionaries in foreign lands. We shall shortly, according to very promising appearances, have a few fresh stations opened in this country. If to these some of the brightest of our preachers in the United States could be sent, a wonderful forward movement would be the result. The typical American preacher is liked and is heeded in England, but the supply is short. We want what I once heard the late Dr. Norman McLeod pleading for, at a missionary meeting at St. Andrews in Scotland—more men and more money. It is futile to imagine that a great work can be accomplished without the expenditure of a great sum of money. The Lord, I suppose, does not intend that any great work should be achieved without such a sacrifice of means. There is no more magnificent field for evangelization than the United Kingdom, for it is the focus of the earth; the international hub of the world; and the nervous ganglion where all the complex influences of civilization centrally throb and vibrate. Protestantism may indeed have originated in Germany; but England is the real fountain of the great world-current of Protestantism. England is the mother of Puritanism. England is the cradle of liberty. England struck the gong which sounded the signal of emancipation for the slave. England set foreign missions going in their strength, after from other sources only a few feeble initial efforts had been made to evangelize the heathen. Even saved humanity from the thrall of a blasting papacy. England has perpetrated errors, blunders, mistakes, and is often blundering and mistaken still. Therefore she needs the strenuous help of her children, especially of her grandest and richest Daughter Offshoot. The mother of empires is nowhere near being decrepit. The statistics of her commerce just issued are startling and magnificent. But spiritually she is hindered and impeded by the incubus of an aristocratic and conservative Erastianism. To abolish this, to aid the Free Churches in a tremendous struggle approaching after the education bill is out of the way, she needs just that aid which America could give—especially the Disciples!

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The Buffalo convention closed in splendid shape. The people were loyal to the last. There was the same great audience, the same spirit and enthusiasm to the end. The music, the closing words of the secretaries, the great Centennial speech of Warren, the sweet notes of the Netz sisters and the Pittsburg quartette, the introduction of our royal hosts, R. H. Miller and his helpers, the fine management of Presiding Officer Denton, the last prayer—all made it a memorable session.

The Buffalo churches served us most worthily. It was just what we might have expected of them. They have not been behind in any sense of the saints of any city where our convention hosts have been entertained. In decorations and in the finely selected mottoes on every side, as well as in acoustical properties and arrangements for the comfort and convenience of the guests, the hall was far and away beyond any we have ever used for our assemblies. The eloquence of our speakers reached every ear, the sweet songs of Zion were never heard to better advantage. God gave us beautiful days at Buffalo, and the whole city smiled on us. Not a jarring note was heard. Brotherly love seemed to abound. The spirit of peace and good will, and of a fine optimism, pervaded every session from start to finish. R. H. Miller said the convention had put the cause ten years ahead of anything that could have been reached by the state forces alone. We all owe a debt to the faithful men and women who made this convention.

Of course we all saw Niagara. Piloted by Pastors Miller and Wharton a party of sixty of us enjoyed the day there following the convention. It pours itself over the great wall of rock as majestically as ever. Since 1871 I have been visiting the awful cataract, and I have never wearied of it. One-eighth of its waters we are told is diverted to meet the calls of commercialism; and I fancied in thirty-five years I could see a change in its great volume. I saw its power used in the trolley cars that pulled us around the streets of the city, and in the manufacture of Larkin's soaps. I beheld it harnessed even to make shredded wheat biscuits. Niagara is the home of this sawdust fabric known as "shredded wheat biscuit." They show you a $100,000 plant, which uses from 1,200 to 1,800 bushels of wheat a day, and turns out 115,000 boxes of these curious crinkled crackers, twelve in a box, 1,380,000 daily to feed the breakfast food folks; and Niagara does everything but put them in the boxes and chew them and many no doubt would be willing for the Falls to complete the process. Still with all the use of Niagara for purposes of gain there is some water left to tumble over the precipice for the delight and amazement of visitors and the profit of the Niagarenes. Uncle Jerry Peebles had seen frequent references in the papers to the necessity of saving Niagara, and was fearful there would be nothing to see if he did not hurry, and so took advantage of cheap excursion rates and went to the falls. "Gosh!" he said, as he looked at the wonderful spectacle for the first time, "what's the use tryin' to save 'em, when they're runnin' as if the devil was after 'em! You can't stop a thing like that!"

The falls are ever an unsurpassed wonder. Sir Edwin Arnold has described the cataract, and Mrs. Sigourney apostrophized it, but no description can ever do it justice. Ever since Joseph Price and Henry Wilmington, the young missionaries, led by the Indian chief Maiook, penetrated the wilderness and discovered the falls they have rolled on, the same magnificent and bewildering spectacle. Awful in its sublimity one is overwhelmed and speechless in its presence. It is indeed as the redmen named it—Niagara, "the thundering waters." As you watch it rushing, smoking, glittering with green and white rollers and rapids, hurling the waters of a whole continent in splendor and speed over the sharp ledges of rock; the coiling spirals of twisted and furious flood crashing in terrible impulse of descent down, down upon the great boulders and boiling cauldron beneath, and listen to the fearful tumult and view the clouds of water-smoke rising: as you look upon the river winding its way eagerly to its stupendous leap, and see the first breakers forming, and then the leaping billows where they feel the mighty draw of the cataracts, springing forward as so many living creatures under some fatal spell toward their dreadful and irresistible doom; and then at the brink the apparent pause, "all quiet and glassy and rounded and green as the border of a field of rye" while they turn the fearful ledge, and hurl themselves, a wild chaos of seething, tumbling, waters into the awful gulf of mystery and horrible din; and at that very moment of monstrous uproar and grandeur you view the exquisite and reposeful beauty of lovely rainbows spanning the awe-inspiring chasm, and suspended above all the turmoil and clamor of the great abyss, Niagara loses its terror, and all graceful and beautiful, becomes a picture of the loving kindness of God that overshadows all his works, and the tender mercy of the Father from whom no terror or gloom or mystery can ever separate his children.

While we were here in Buffalo a party of six persons were nearly carried over the falls. Out on the river in a gasoline launch they ran into a bar and broke both propellers. The disabled launch drifted down stream. They threw out a small anchor. It caught, but the rope parted and the boat again raced down stream. A large anchor was thrown out, but it dragged the bottom without catching or retarding the speed of the boat, now in the seventeen-mile current. People along shore attracted by the cries and the flash light of the launch, could render no assistance. Police and firemen from Niagara Falls heard of the boat's peril and started up stream, but were powerless to render aid. The launch was rapidly getting to the point where no human help could avail when the anchor caught back of a big stone and held, and the people were saved. Terror-stricken by their danger the women had fainted and the men had given up in despair. A question for every man: Does your anchor hold? Are you drifting helpless, and hurrying toward the fearful precipice, or does your anchor hold?

Just above Goat Island one can readily see where the waters divide—one side passing over the American and the other over the Horse Shoe Fall. A piece of timber will come to the spot and balance itself for a moment. The slightest influence will determine its course. A moment will decide. It swings one way, or the other, and passes over. So with human destiny. We hurry on. The turning point is reached. We drift away from God, or we find him.

The great cataract has its lessons. It speaks in no uncertain voice of its Creator.

"Flow on forever, in thy glorious robe
Of terror and of beauty. God hath set
His rainbow on thy forehead, and the clouds
Mantled around thy feet; and He doth give
Thy voice of thunder power to speak of Him
Eternally; bidding the lips of man
Keep silence, and upon thy rocky alter pour
Incense of awe-struck praise."

Christ is very patient with our imperfect obedience, if we truly love him. If we are sincerely trying to do what he would have us to do, even though we fail and fall far below his standard, he accepts our work, and knowing our intention and seeing the sincerity of our effort, he is pleased.

State Loyalty

By W. R. Warren

In the breast of every worthy man there exists a spirit which for want of a better term we designate self-respect. It is the recognition of the duty which every man owes to himself. It manifests itself in many ways. In some individuals it is lacking to such a degree that the person becomes contemptible. In others it has had such undue development that their arrogance is exasperating. But the happy mean is an indispensable element in every worthy character. In much the same way each individual has his family pride, his civic pride, his state loyalty, his national patriotism, and his humanitarianism. Our religion inevitably expresses itself successively through these concentric circles. Most of us accepted Christ in the first place for our own salvation. We help in the church's maintenance for the sake of family and neighbors. If we have any religious feeling for our state it must express itself through the State Missionary Society just as our religious patriotism is manifested through our support of the American Christian Missionary Society, and our regard for mankind through the Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

State loyalty leads us to contribute of our means through taxation millions of dollars every year for public education and public charities, but the Bible, the foundation of all true education, is excluded from our public schools, and the Gospel, from which all charity springs, can be proclaimed only in places and by persons supported by voluntary gifts. Liberty and love, rather than law, are the fundamental principles of Christianity, but Christians present to the world the anomaly of doing far more under legal taxation than under Gospel impulse. This is most strikingly true in state affairs. If we would worthily celebrate our Centennial, we must redeem our states by generously and universally supporting state missions. The obligation touches every church and every member and they should have fellowship in the annual offering the first Lord's day in November.

The Call of the States

Arkansas.

The most essential condition to be brought about in Arkansas, and I suppose in most parts of the south, is to locate, at central points, efficient men who have the tact to come readily in sympathetic touch with all classes of workers who are willing to help build up the cause. We need men who will stay, men who wish to make a permanent home in this sun-bright clime, and who realize that it will be necessary to work for a time on much less salary than men of the same talent will command where the cause is better established.

There have been not less than twenty churches organized within the last year in this state, in sympathy with co-operative work. One-half of these will not live without help from without. Congregations have been organized during the last two years, in not less than ten county seats and other important towns, of 3,000 population or more, and arrangements are made for building. Four houses have been dedicated in county seats during the year.

The solution of the matter here is sufficient mission funds to enable us to hold efficient preachers for a little while. There are not less than fifteen, among the larger towns of the states where work can be made successful, that must fail without assistance.

Little Rock, Ark. E. C. BROWNING.

Colorado's Advance Steps.

Our recent state convention took several advance steps in the work for the year beginning October 1:

1. Recommending that "special attention be given to the strengthening of missions hitherto under the care of the state board; that effort be concentrated upon the more promising of these with a view to making them self-supporting at least by the end of the present year; that new churches be organized wherever it can be done with reasonable promise of permanency."

2. Instructing the state board to employ an evangelist, whose time shall be given wholly to holding meetings, strengthening weak places, helping mission churches toward self-support, and opening new fields wherever the way may be open. The board has already apointed a committee to secure the man for this work.

3. Placing our financial watchword this year at $3.500. In the year just closed we raised $1,831.34, the largest amount ever raised in one year. The new watchword contemplates a great advance over any previous year.

4. Logically following this recommendation was the resolution to enter now and here upon a serious campaign to induce at least 3,000 members in our Colorado churches to become tithers.

5. It was strongly recommended "that unless local conditions render it altogether impracticable, every church observe the first Lord's day of November as state missions day, taking pledges and offerings on that day." If the pledges are made early the board can more intelligently plan the work of the year, besides more money can be secured than if the offering is deferred. If the offering is delayed, other offerings which have a just claim upon our liberality interfere with a good contribution to state work. Again, the time of the corresponding secretary is taken in raising money late in the year when other work should claim his attention. It is hoped that all the churches will try to observe this day.

The area of Colorado is exactly equal to that of the states of Iowa and New York. We have but forty-eight churches, some of them not active. There are fifty-nine county seat towns, and we have congregations in only twenty of them.

This is the time to push the work in Colorado, for the state is very prosperous. E. E. Hill, commissioner of the Colorado Car Service Bureau, has recently said: "There never were such shipments made out of and into the state before. The traffic is simply appalling. The manufactories have made wonderful strides; the state has grown from the size of a child to the stature of a man in almost a day, and the shipments of a few years ago, which we used to consider abnormal, are now but as pygmies when compared to the shipments of this season."

We appeal to all pastors and churches in Colorado to help make this a record-breaking year, and begin it by enthusiastically observing Colorado day, Lord's day, November 4.

Encouraging Facts from Indiana.

Two years ago I was called by our state convention, through the executive board, to serve the Indiana Christian Missionary Society as corresponding secretary. I began with practically an empty treasury, two large debts and only the incomplete "Year Book" with preachers' names as a correspondence list.

1. Information was necessary. Transient circulars can never do the work. So the "Indiana Christian" was resurrected and is the regular official organ of the state missions, entered at the postoffice at second-class rates and owned and controlled by our state society. A complete reporting system has been put in operation which already has on alphabetical file complete reports of a half dozen counties, and promises as much for all other counties by the new plan. When this is done a complete and authentic "Year Book for Indiana" will give accurate information to every preacher and church.

2. A new organization by counties linked with district and state by co-operation in reports, conventions, offerings and evangelism is being rapidly consummated and looks forward to the complete unification of all state interests soon in co-operative work.

3. This is securing already in several counties complete co-operation by grouping churches by counties, and employing evangelists and preachers where there have been none for months and even years. To do this great work for the great army of 835 churches (last report) there has been incurred a greater expense than the receipts from the churches would meet. This has brought embarrassment and hardship to this magnificent service which threatens to close the door which is now open wide with the glorious promise of future usefulness.

We ask you to note these facts: A gain in cash receipts has been secured this year over last year of $1,047.32, or 41 per cent. In number of contributing churches, a gain of 22, or 16 per cent. Note also 61 meetings were held with 1,404 accessions, 64 weak churches were helped, 12 new churches were organized and seven reorganized, while fully 200 worthy calls could not be answered for want of funds. W. J. Wright says this is by far the best gain of which he has learned. Please note these facts also: There were 976 churches in Indiana this last fiscal year (reported by our state evangelist). One hundred and fifty-five gave about $3,000. Eight hundred and twenty-one gave not one cent. Five hundred of these could give easily an average of $15 each and no other equal investment could so mightily help world-wide missions and so wonderfully bless and strengthen the churches of Indiana. This is practical and possible if the preachers and officers of our churches say so. If we give $17,000 for heathen missions why should we not give as much for Hoosier missions?

We stand hesitating and trembling with the burden of mighty responsibilities at great open doors of opportunity, awaiting the word of assurance and the offering of necessary help to go in and possess the land. The assurance of the November day offerings, or as soon thereafter as possible is absolutely necessary to our future plans and work. If half of our 140,000 members would give on an average of 20 cents each we would have $14,000 and 25 state evangelists the whole year. Or if half of our 835 churches would give on an average $20 each we would have $9,340 and sixteen evangelists the whole year. Each dollar invested brings, with a representative preacher, two or three more from the field. Over 200 worthy churches are calling.

There were thirty-nine churches built and sixteen churches repaired in Indiana last year by the Disciples of Christ. The money invested amounts to $333,650 and the increased seating capacity aggregates 25,000. This includes a large number of splendid brick and Bedford stone buildings, modern in every respect for work and worship.

From the Late Superintendent of Kansas Missions.

Only those who know by experience the wide contrast between the words "home" and "homeless," can fully sympathize and rejoice with the writer in the change that he has made from the superintendency of Kansas missions to the pastorate; from days and nights on the rail to an uninterrupted period at home with the loved ones; from the care of all the churches" to the care of but one, and from numberless duties and obligations to the simple life of the shepherd of one flock, and yet I was never really homeless. I had many homes during those seven busy years. It is no exaggeration to say that I had hundreds of homes. Many of them the best, the cheeriest, the most delightful the Sunflower State affords, where the welcome was hearty and the festal board spread with the richest of earth's bounties. But,

"Home's not merely four square walls
  Hung with pictures, framed and gilded,
Home is where affection calls,
  Filled with shrines the heart hath builded."

The good people of this little city are showing us every consideration. A public reception was given us at the home of Brother and Sister Rossman, which was largely attended. We have a most excellent people with whom to labor. Good men have preceded us here in the pastorate, and Brother and Sister Sherman Hill, our immediate predecessors, were among the best.

Kansas day draws near, and all our Kansas churches should do their part by Kansas missions. We should heed the call of the state board and that of our new superintendent, George E. Lyon.

Paola will do her part cheerfully. Long live and prosper The Christian-Evangelist, with its uniform and constant message of liberty, light and love.

Paola, Kan. W. S. Lowe.

The field secretary served 365 days, visited 109 churches, delivered 235 sermons, held 38 missionary rallies, several short meetings, 6 county rallies, 6 district conventions, dedicated 6 churches. His collections were $1,411.77, and expenses $209.24. The office secretary, W. D. Deweese, served 312 days.

Marion Stevenson, superintendent, served 334 days, visited 199 schools; delivered 303 addresses, attended several conventions, secured pledges from 177 schools amounting to $1,416.39, and collected in the field $291.81. His traveling expenses were $209.81, office expenses $21.33, postage $69.91.

The summary for the year is: Men in the service, 58; churches visited, 183; days' service, 4,183; revival meetings, 51; sermons delivered, 2,291; conversions, 1,044; other additions, 577; total additions, 1,621; churches organized, 6; churches aided, 46; money raised for state and district missions from all sources, $12,088.81.

The summary for eleven years is: Men in the service, 336; days, 23,832; churches visited, 1,603; revival meetings, 616; sermons, 18,037; conversions, 9,117; other additions, 5,802; total additions, 14,919; churches organized, 79; churches aided, 479; houses dedicated, 18; total offerings for state and district missions, $89,731.88.

Iowa's State Campaign.

Our Iowa mission work is state wide in its plan. We have the state divided into five districts, and the secretary of each respective district is a member of the state board, thus linking the state in a co-operative work in which all sections are represented. The growth of interest and offerings for the state work are very encouraging. Last year we had ten evangelists at work all or part of the year, and fourteen missionary pastors. Twenty-three men held volunteer missionary meetings for our board without cost to our treasury. We held meetings or gave assistance in pastoral support to ninety churches, and more than 100 churches were benefited by our force of workers.

Evangelism is our watch cry for Iowa this year, and we are bending every energy to accomplish the greatest possible results for our God. From January 1 to April 1, 1907, we will wage a state-wide, simultaneous evangelistic campaign, in which we hope to enlist every church in the state.

We have our Central Executive Committee, consisting of general chairman, general superintendent and one member from each of the five districts, to act as superintendents of their respective districts. Each of these men have their territory divided into four or five sections, and a committeeman over each. Our churches are divided into three classes. 1. Those who can arrange their own meetings, select their own evangelists, and pay their own bills. 2. Those able to pay their own bills but in need of assistance in arranging the meeting. 3. Churches able to do little or nothing toward making the plans or financing the meeting. Blanks suitable for each church have been printed and mailed to the churches, and they are asked to fill in the blank report that suits their condition. We have planned an evangelistic institute for each of the sub-districts, from which we hope to gather great inspiration for the state mission offering and for the evangelistic campaign.

The program for the institute is as follows, and will continue two nights and one day: Evening—Devotional, "Under Commission"; sermon, "Our Simultaneous Campaign for Souls." Forenoon—Devotional, "Whitened Harvest Fields"; address, "Organization of the Forces"; discussion; address, "Individual Work for Individuals"; discussion. Afternoon—Devotional, "God's Promises to the Reapers"; address, "What to Preach and How to Preach It"; discussion; conference: 1. "Every Church in Line"—(a) Have you arranged your meeting? (b) What help do you need? (c) What help can you give? (d) Reporting to headquarters. 2. A day sacred to all this work, Iowa Day, November 4. Evening—Devotional, "The Soul Winner's Joy"; Evangelistic sermon.

Summary of mission work for the year—Number of men engaged, 47; days service, 6,494; sermons, 3,474; baptisms, 1,447; other additions, 860; places assisted, 90. Our missionaries cost $1.25 each per day; additions by our missionaries cost $4 each.

Kentucky Missions for 1906 and 1907.

The year that closed with our recent state convention at Louisville was in many respects the best year we have had in our state work for a dozen years. We had a larger number of additions, 2,062 being the total reported by the men whose support we shared. We built some excellent houses of worship in most important fields. South Louisville, South Portsmouth, Jackson, Jellico and other places were helped in the struggle to build and establish the cause, Aside from the signal success in many of our special fields, our evangelists gave a good account of themselves.

The greatest difficulty was in reaching the fields where they were urgently needed. Many of the worthy appeals had to be passed because we had neither men nor money to meet the needs of the situation. Already the appeals for the next year are coming in thick and fast. On October 6 the board went carefully over the fields that must be helped and considered one by one the men to be employed. No appropriations were made, for we must hear from the churches before we answer these appeals. We are unable to calculate wisely until the congregations have indicated what they are willing to do for the support of the work. We await the orders of our commander-in-chief—the churches.

Already the appeals for help will require 50 per cent. larger contributions for the evangelistic fund. We made last year an increase in the contributions of the churches of $1,035. This was a good advance, and such an advance another year will enable us to enter more fields and answer more appeals.

The fields already occupied must be held until they can take care of themselves. Other doors are open wide to us and it will be criminal not to enter them. Another strong evangelist ought to be at work in the Big Sandy Valley. We have the man in mind, and only need to have assurance of the funds being furnished to enable us to undertake this larger effort.

Some of our most important special mission work is pleading for increased appropriations. Springfield, for instance, wants the board to give three times as much as we have been paying to that field, urging that such help given them for one year will probably enable them to dispense with the aid of the brethren. South Louisville wants more money to help in support of their preacher. They have a heavy load of debt, and urge that now is the day of their salvation. A dollar spent there now in that rapidly-growing section of our metropolis will accomplish more than $5 a year or two later. Jackson thinks that it is indispensable to have preaching every Sunday, and urges more money for 1907.

From every quarter the demand is made for enlargement. We can meet these demands only as our people enable us to do so. November 4 must be made a high day, and all the month must be consecrated to Kentucky missions by Kentucky churches if we meet worthily the demands that are upon us.

We plead for prompt response to the letters mailed to each congregation, and beg to assure you that nothing is as blighting and withering as cold indifference. Better opposition than that. If you will not help us, say so. If you have good reasons for this, all well and good. If it arises from simple indifference as to whether the Lord's work is done, then the Lord pity you. We are praying that not many may be described by these last words, and that our people in old Kentucky may give fresh proof of an increasing interest in reaching the waste places of our commonwealth that they may be made to blossom as the rose.

Missouri Work and Plans.

One of the most successful years in the history of our Missouri mission work was that which closed June 1, 1906. The fear was expressed by some that the effort to raise $12,000 for our permanent fund would seriously cripple the securing of funds for the regular work. The contrary proved too true, for $10,275 were raised, as against $6,321 in the year before; adding the money secured for the permanent fund of $10,000 and we have over $20,000, three times as much as came to hand the year previous. We take this as a strong indication of a deepening interest in this great work on the part of both ministers and people; people will not give for that in which they are not interested.

But in other ways the forward move was fully as marked as it was in the financial phase. There has been trouble all of the time in some parts of the state; the work and plans of the state board were not heartily endorsed, and there was much friction. This we believe has happily passed away and there is a harmony and unity among our people, a determination to stand heartily by the state board and its plans, that has prophecies of great things for the future. Missouri churches united have a tremendous power; they may dare to do anything, even the seemingly impossible, and accomplish it. There is no power in any other section of our great land comparable to this and our confident belief is that this giant is now arousing himself to the putting forth of his tremendous power.

The policy of the board to assist weak churches at important and strategic points, is to be continued. When we remember that nearly all of the strong churches of St. Louis were planted and came to their strength in this way, that in Kansas City and many of the towns and villages of the state there are churches that have become giants in power through this policy, we are sure this will have hearty endorsement.

The state has been redistricted; there are seven districts now. St. Louis and Kansas City each form one, while two are north of the river and three lie south of it. It is the purpose of the board that each one of these districts shall have an efficient evangelist, not simply a protracted meeting holder, but a man of consecration, of wisdom, of power with God and men, who shall have the care of all the churches on his heart. Such a man we have in Joseph Gaylor in district 3; in G. E. Ireland in St. Louis. Kansas City has one—none better—in F. L. Bowen. C. O. McFarland is serving the two districts north of the river.

We need another man north of the river, one in southeast, or district No. 4, and one in district No. 2. Thus the state will be covered by competent men whose whole duty, business and joy it shall be to see that the cause we love shall be planted and fostered in each and every part of their own territory.

Brethren, this in mere outline is our purpose, these are our plans. The only thing lacking is the means. Do you like the plans? Has our purpose your endorsement? The best answer is the offering. Mere gush or sentiment counts for but little; what we need is the largest offering ever taken for state missions.

Ohio Missionary Plans.

The Ohio Christian Missionary Society is planning this year to pay off every dollar of debt. This debt was incurred by the support of missions, the establishing of churches and the saving of souls. Our state board planned for larger things than the people were willing to pay for, and did a larger mission work than the funds in hand warranted. Hence the debt. At the beginning of the Centennial campaign this debt ought to be paid and that promptly.

In the second place we have in Ohio at the present time twenty-five missions, some of them receiving a meager support. This mission work ought to be continued with a stronger hand and new missions added.

Another plan of far-reaching import is our state-wide evangelistic campaign, November 15, 1907, to February 15, 1908. In this campaign we expect to have 500 churches engaged, one-half of them in a strong evangelistic campaign before the holidays and the balance in a vigorous campaign after the holidays. Already the forces are being gathered, the churches are falling into line and vigorous plans for the campaign will be pushed after the Ohio day offering in November, when the secretary can give a little more time and attention to this work.

Another far-reaching plan for Ohio missions is the establishing of a church in every county seat by 1909. There are now twenty-four county seats in which we have no church as yet. We shall have to plant these county seats rapidly if the work is done. Eight each year of the three years remaining will have to be the schedule.

In order to carry on this work we are asking the churches this year for $20,000 for Ohio missions. It is a liberal increase over last year but not one whit too large for the work demanded of us. As the day for the November offering approaches the prospects for a large increase over the offerings of previous years are bright.

Our campaign this fall has been more energetic and has reached more people than ever before. Instead of depending upon our few district conventions we have held and are holding forty-five missionary rallies, taking with us a touring party of three or four speakers and devoting an afternoon and evening to Ohio missions. It has created much enthusiasm and we believe will increase the offering for Ohio missions materially. The plan of missionary rallies is taking in the state and next year there will be a larger demand for them than ever before. We believe that the day for larger things in Ohio missions is at hand.

S. H. Bartlett.

Oklahoma.

Last year the following work was done by an average of seven and a half men, including our corresponding secretary and the living link missionaries: Number of men employed, 7½; days' service, 2,730; sermons, 1,568; baptisms, 492; other accessions, 864; total accessions, 1,356; churches organized, 29; churches assisted, 97; church buildings erected, 44; meetings held, 56; amount of money raised, $48,400.

To accomplish this work the following amount of money was expended: The A. C. M. S., $1,100; the C. W. B. M. $600; individual pledges and church offerings in Oklahoma, $862.11; living link money raised in Oklahoma, $1,052. Total, $3,612.11.

Oregon Central District.

The central district of the Oregon Christian Missionary Convention has just closed a very successful convention at Albany. The program represented the C. W. B. M. and the regular church work. Every speaker was present except one, and arrangements were made for a year of aggressive work in the central district. This district comprises Lane, Linn, Marion, Benton and Lincoln counties. There are in this district thirty-eight churches and 3,800 Disciples. These churches will support J. N. McConnell as evangelist, and it is hoped that one church or a group of churches of this district will supply $300 for the support of an evangelist in the "unoccupied southeast" section of the state.

Both parts of the program did credit to the causes represented, and will likely be reported by other hands. T. S. Handsaker is superintendent of the church work, and Mrs. Billington, of the C. W. B. M., for the district. We all counted ourselves fortunate to be the guests of J. J. Evans and the Albany church. Our district president, Brother Handsaker, delivered an excellent address, which will be published, by vote of the convention.

The following report of the Committee on Future Work will show the spirit and purpose of the whole convention:

"1. We recommend that the officers and Executive Committee chosen at the Turner convention be continued until the next state convention. 2. We would advise this convention to authorize its delegates to the state convention to nominate a district president while at the convention. 3. We recommend that this convention endorse the action of the Committee on Benevolence appointed by the O. C. M. C. in locating the home for the aged at Eugene, and pledge itself to co-operate in the support of this institution. 4. That we adopt as an evangelistic policy the building up of declining churches and as opportunity offers inaugurating new work. 5. We endorse the action of the Executive Committee in the employment of J. N. McConnell as evangelist for the district, and pledge ourselves to support him in every possible way. 6. That it is the sense of this convention that we are in full accord and sympathy with the work of the O. C. M. C. and regard ourselves as a force auxiliary to it. 7. We recommend that all churches in the district organize dollar leagues in support of the work."

This report was unanimously adopted, and is a sign that the central district intends to do business for Christ and the Church.

The northwest and southwest districts will hold their conventions the latter part of October and the first of November.

South Idaho's Need.

The maintenance of a state evangelist was made possible by gifts of the American Board. This year's state work in Idaho sums up: Four new churches organized—Emmett, with 18 members, has bought a lot, is purchasing a good building to move to lot; will be served by B. W. Rice. Rupert, with 46 members, bought a lot, are now building, have not yet reported securing a pastor.

Meridian, with 63 members, engaged E. A. Child to begin pastorate Nov. 1, bought a lot and plan to build. Nampa, with 48 members, bought a lot, built a plain, cheap house, engage C. A. Child half time. Besides this we assisted Weiser to support G. M. Redd, and gained 22 members.

Will the American Board be able to give us a state evangelist for next year, or for the next five years, to gather and nurture such as these?

Texas Missions.

Our summer campaign has been very successful. We report three months' work. We have had 35 different men in the field; days, 2,162; sermons, 1,413; baptisms, 651; from denominations, 55; by letter and statement, 393. Twelve new churches were planted. The cash amount raised by and for those men was $6,257. With this we paid for the 2,162 days' work and traveling expenses and paid for three issues of our monthly "Texas Missions," and other printing, amounting all told to $250. Our missionaries raised for church houses, lots, etc., $4,448. Total cash raised, therefore, was $10,705. We aided 179 places and took pledges to the amount of $3,890. This gives us the largest results ever reported in Texas mission work for one quarter.

Now, when we consider that in our evangelistic work our aim is to aid only the weak churches and new points and not to leave them until we have put them in condition to go forward with the work, the economy with which this work has been conducted will be more appreciated. It is also true that numbers as such have not been the chief aim but permanency in the work. We give this as a sample of what we have been enabled to do by the liberality of the brethren and would make these facts the basis of an appeal for larger liberality. We would not boast. There is entirely too much land to be possessed for any boasting. Our men have done well, but the Texas Disciples are able to do a much larger work. The population of the state is growing as never before. Appeals are coming to this office that would touch the hearts of all our people if we could find space to give them to you. There has never been a time when the people heard the Word more gladly. Brethren of Texas, let us have grand missionary rallies for Texas missions in November. Give us the means and we will surprise even the sanguine with what God can do through his people when we will.

Dallas, Texas. J. C. Mason.

The Indian Territory Plan.

1. One territorial and two district conventions are held annually. One district convention is held in the northern part of the territory, the other in the southern part, the territorial convention at some central point.

2. The district conventions are an integral part of the work at large in the territory, and are held under the supervision of the corresponding secretary.

3. The annual territorial convention elects a board of directors, seven of whom are chosen to act as an executive committee. This committee employs a corresponding secretary who also acts as superintendent of missions and financial secretary.

4. All moneys are receipted for and classified in the books according to sources; the corresponding secretary passes the money on to the treasurer, who pays it out as authorized to by vouchers, signed by the corresponding secretary and chairman of the executive committee.

5. The books of the corresponding secretary and treasurer are audited annually by an expert, and he reports his findings to the convention.

6. Appropriations are made to weak and important points for three months at a time, to assist in the support of regular preaching. Appropriations for this purpose are $6.25, $12.50 and $25 per month, according to the necessity of the case. In all these cases we require the point assisted to make a monthly offering to our Indian Territory missions equal to a fraction more than one-half our appropriation. The advantages of this system are many and important.

7. We answer all calls for meetings, provided we are given a reasonable amount of time. To do this we employ "living link" evangelists, where it is convenient to do so, otherwise we get some church to lend us its pastor for a few days, allowing him whatever he may receive. But in case he gets less than a stated amount per week we supplement this, allowing never more than $10 per week supplement.

8. We have a tent that we furnish to missions when it is desired.

9. We assist all the churches to find and locate preachers, and to secure evangelists.

10. We aid the churches and the cause in every proper way that comes to hand.

11. The executive committee meets every three months. The committee hears the report of the corresponding secretary and treasurer, and then plans the work for another three months.

12. This system has worked wonders in the Indian Territory since its inauguration, less than three years ago.

Virginia.

The Virginia Christian Missionary Society has just closed another successful year. The total receipts were $7,757.03. Our receipts the previous year were $7,310.31. Not a very large increase, but an increase. Our watchword for the new year will be, $10,000 for Virginia missions. The total number added was 901. Seven churches were organized, and six Sunday-schools were constituted.

We are supporting a number of preachers in mission points. Chief among these are Portsmouth, Blacksburg, Petersburg and Harrisonburg. Portsmouth is a city of 25,000, in which we had not preached in seventy years. We organized a mission last year, and are now supporting it. We hope to have a good church in a short while. This is perhaps our most important point. Blacksburg is the seat of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, where there are 700 students. Our congregation is three years old and owns its own house and a parsonage. We have a large hearing, and our preacher, E. B. Kemm, supported by the V. C. M. S., is called the most popular minister in the town.

For the last six years, the secretary of the Virginia work has been supported by individual subscriptions made for that purpose, so that all the offerings from the churches and Sunday-schools are used for the real work of missions. The plan works well, and has given Virginia her most successful years.

While the work in the east is slow, and the people conservative, we thank God and take courage. H. C. Combs, Wisconsin.

To-day Wisconsin presents a whitened field for the home mission harvest. Priceless forests, untold water power, and productive soil is bringing to her a vast population. Here is a great foreign mission field. But as a problem it must be worked out by the state board. Here in Wisconsin, as in few other states of the Union, is found the frontier community, with its restless, reckless, disregard of the higher needs of life; and touching it is the old, well established thoroughly orthodox community, with a conservatism that spells senility for religion. How to reach and win for Christ these different yet equally needy millions, is the problem to which the Wisconsin Christian Missionary Association bends its every energy.

Splendid cities are springing up like magic. We must enter them before they have grown too large, or find the field an expensive and difficult one later on. To do this our board must have men, and to secure men we must have money. We believe that "the Lord helps those who help themselves." Hence we are planning an offering to state missions, in which each church will give an amount equal to $1 for each member. Our recent state convention voted first, to put a man in the field as evangelist who shall have the care of all the churches, strengthening the weak and building the new. Second, to plant a new church at Janesville, a thriving city, and hold the convention of 1907 there.

The Scandinavian work is full of promise. The recent meeting at Chippewa Falls, a gift from the splendid church at Mackinaw, Ill., is an object lesson. Thousands of these people are now just where Mr. Campbell and his colaborers were a century ago. The free air of the great northwest has emancipated them from earlier religious affiliations. They have broken with the old. But no voice has as yet sounded out a message that will guide them into the new, sweet reasonablenss of Christ—the sublime simplicity of the faith of the apostles as found in the New Testament. I believe that God will raise up men, consecrated men, who will come into Wisconsin fields and come to stay, to preach the primitive Gospel. I believe that God's will in the life of a great brotherhood will pour in money until we can enter a dozen of these new cities and build therein strong missionary churches that will go in the name of Christ to seek and save the lost.

Work in South Kentucky.

At the convention in May we reported that last year about $2,100 was expended for all purposes, and about $2,500 raised for actual missionary purposes, leaving a balance in our treasury with which to begin the new year's work. The corresponding secretary held twelve meetings during the year besides other duties too numerous to name devolving upon him. Other meetings were held in destitute fields by other faithful helpers under the direction of the association, and all resulted in the organizing of seven new congregations. Not less than $5,000 was raised for local purposes, such as funds to build houses and sustain preaching, pay church debts, etc. We are expecting to raise not less than $4,000 for purely mission purposes this year. We are planning to place more evangelists in the field as soon as funds will justify. Our financial resources in South Kentucky are almost without limit if we could only command them. One of the greatest problems I ever undertook to solve is this problem of liberality. Are we using missionary money in an unwise way? Do our brethren of wealth look upon money expended for missionary purposes as an unwise expenditure?

Our Budget

—Next Lord's day, November 4, is state mission day.

—If you have not prepared a special sermon, read to your congregation the address by Harry D. Smith, and add your own peroration or application.

—Ohio has some far-reaching plans.

—Those of Indian Territory have been very successful.

—A city in Virginia where our plea had not been presented during seventy years has been entered.

—Kansas now has a woman as its corresponding secretary. A. Rosalea Pendleton is her name. George E. Lyon is the new superintendent.

—Colorado seeks 3,000 tithers.

—You will find other interesting items in the reports from the states on other pages of this issue.

—We have in preparation another special issue of The Christian-Evangelist to be devoted to some of the co-workers with Alexander Campbell and the pioneers of our movement. We shall be glad to hear from any of our readers who have photographs, daguerreotypes or anything that would be worth while illustrating, or that will throw any light on the character and work of these worthies.

—The Foreign Society missionary rallies begin November 19.

—Fife and Saunders can lead a meeting beginning November 18. Address Huntington, W. Va.

—During the past ten months the membership at Louisburg, Mo., has been doubled, 52 having been added.

—On its recent rally day the Thirty-fourth Street Church, Washington, secured about $600 for a new building.

—The Sunday-school at Delta, O., has trebled during the past ten months. William B. Hendershot is the pastor there.

—Edward O. Sharpe has recently entered upon the pastorate at San Antonio, Texas. He reports six additions and fine prospects.

—James A. Challener reports a good work with the church at Artesia, New Mexico, which has been without a pastor for some time.

—Robert Pegrum has accepted a unanimous call to the church at Milton, Queens county, N. S. He entered upon his pastorate October 7.

—An organization of sixty members has been effected at Davis, Mo., and $1,300 raised for a new building. Brother Taylor is the pastor.

—F. H. Schmitt is now holding a meeting at Le Roy, Kan., where he was born and brought up. His wife has lived in the same community since childhood.

—As a result of a meeting by Clyde Sharp, the church at Fayetteville, Mo., will employ a pastor as soon as possible. Brother Sharp has returned to his home at La Harpe, Kan.

—A new church building has just been dedicated at Carmi, Ill., with Z. T. Sweeney in charge of the exercises. There was a call for $3,500 and $5,300 were raised. Frank Thompson is the pastor.

—At a meeting of the board of directors of the Bethany Assembly W. E. M. Hackleman was elected secretary. New buildings will be erected during the coming year and other important improvements made.

—B. E. Utz, late of Spokane, Wash., is supplying the pulpit of the Ninth Street Church at Washington, which Brother Bagby has vacated and which George Miller, of Covington, Ky., will enter in January.

—As a result of a good meeting just held by J. B. Boen and Leonard Daugherty, the brethren at Winfield, Kan., where Albert Nichols is pastor, are talking of a new church building. More room is needed, there having been liberal gains during the past two years.

—J. M. Bailey will close his ministry at Frankford, Mo., at the end of the year, and will be glad to get into communication with a church in need of a minister. During his two years' pastorate at Frankford some 50 have been added to the church and the brethren are harmonious and ready for a good work.

NEW READERS IN THE SOUTH.

As will be seen from "Georgia Notes," by Bro. E. L. Shelnutt, the "Southern Evangelist," of which he has been the editor and proprietor, has been merged in The Christian-Evangelist, beginning with this number. We welcome the "Southern Evangelist" readers into our great and growing Christian-Evangelist family. The transition ought to be easy from the one Evangelist to the other, and we are sure our new readers from the Sunny Southland will feel quite at home with us. Brother Shelnutt has kindly promised to furnish us the news from the South and in that way he will keep in touch with his old readers and keep our readers in touch with that field. As in union there is strength, we see no reason why this union of forces will not prove helpful to both and, what is more important, helpful to the cause we are seeking to advance. It is the day of union, of joining hands and hearts for the better accomplishment of common ends and aims. We trust the former readers of the "Southern Evangelist" who are now readers of this journal, will feel free to express themselves or report news as freely as in their old paper.

—Uncle Hugh Wilson, who has been a faithful contributor to every missionary movement by the Church of Christ, attended most of the meetings recently held at Russellville, Ind., by the Martin family. He is 92 years of age and his father and mother were baptized by Barton W. Stone during the Cane Ridge revival.

—Herbert J. Corwine, whose resignation of the pastorate at California, Mo., we have announced, writes us that the congregation there is in splendid accord with the truth and is in perfect harmony. Brother Corwine leaves them because of health considerations and is hopeful that they will find a good pastor to work among them.

—George L. Zimmerman, of the congregation of Tillamook, Ore., is in a meeting with Evangelist George C. Ritchey and his singer, A. W. Shaffer. This strong force will be assisted by the circulation of 300 Christian-Evangelists, and the brethren feel that our church there will be one of the strongest powers for righteousness in all the coast region.

—We are glad to know that our Ohio correspondent, C. A. Freer, of Painesville, is succeeding in his evangelistic work upon which he recently entered. Charles Ford, of North Royalton, O., writes us: "Brother Freer is a strong, practical preacher and a good singer. His services were unusually well attended."

—The Central Church at Sherman, Texas, has celebrated the anniversary of the opening of their new house. M. M. Davis preached on this occasion and the first installment of the debt due the Church Extension Board was provided for. Pastor J. H. Fuller reports that during the year there were 204 additions, including the 139 that came during the meeting of R. R. Hamlin.

—J. Frank Green will, on November 14, complete his ministry at Mt. Pleasant, Mich., and will then be ready to accept work elsewhere. Mt. Pleasant is an educational center. During Brother Green's pastorate the finances have been doubled and nearly a hundred added to the membership. There is no discord and the church is in a fine condition for aggressive work.

—R. R. Hamlin, of Fort Worth, Texas, who has held successful meetings in many of the leading churches of that state, is to hold a meeting during November in Nevada, Mo. It may be that he can be secured by other churches who may desire meetings, after he has finished his work in Nevada. A leading minister in Texas speaks of Brother Hamlin in terms of highest praise.

—A good old-fashioned basket meeting has been held by the four churches in Blackford county, Indiana, of which Hartford city is the county seat. D. F. Harris, of Montpelier, delivered a sermon on "A Peculiar People" and Prof. E. P. Wiles gave a helpful lecture on Bible study. Wm. Elmer Payne, minister at Hartford City, spoke in the evening on "The Greatest Thing in the World." Arthur Haley, of Butler, Ind., had charge of the music.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., recently dedicated the building at Fayette, O. A new basement had been installed and the house repaired and beautified. Money to cover all expenses was raised. The brethren have a hard working and successful pastor in the person of H. H. Elwinger. Brother Carpenter has also just dedicated a new church building at Broughton, O., where J. E. Smith is the successful pastor. More money than was needed was also provided here.

—"The Scroll" is the title of the new monthly publication issued by the Campbell Institute, taking the place of the "Quarterly Bulletin," which has been the organ of that organization heretofore. "The Scroll" will appear ten times each year, and its subscription price is 50 cents. The contents of this initial number of "The Scroll" furnish proof that the new publication is intended to be a sort of counter-irritant for the body ecclesiastic. It will resort to the process known as "cupping" and "blood letting," in order to even up the circulation. There is ability and scholarship in the new publication; its orthodoxy and usefulness as a promoter of truth remain to be tested. Address "The Scroll," 5508 Kimbark avenue, Chicago.

—M. S. Johnson, of Litchfield, Ill., has been subjected to some annoyance and some libelous attacks by certain individuals whose opposition was aroused by Brother Johnson's determined efforts to speak the truth about the saloons and other resorts of ill character. By means of trickery one of the newspapers was misled into publishing an attack upon Brother Johnson, but its withdrawal of the charges and prompt apology did something to atone for the injury the first announcement may have caused in the minds of those who do not know Brother Johnson. The brethren of our own church, of course, would not have been deceived by any such anonymous attacks. The new church at Litchfield is to be dedicated about November 18 or 25.

—J. H. Berkey, Monroe, Wis., says he is receiving letters of inquiry from different parts of th country regarding the effect of the Scoville meeting in the Union Church in Christ in that place. He answers: "There were five churches in the union. There were 450 confessions, of which this church has received in round numbers, 100. During the meeting we built a new baptistry in which I personally baptized 80. In the same baptistry the pastor of the Methodist church baptized eight and the pastor of the United Brethren Church 20. Our Sunday-school jumped from about 60 to 125. Our prayer-meeting from a dozen to about fifty. We are building a small addition to our church to meet present needs of Sunday-school and Endeavor societies. Nearly my entire Sunday-school was converted. Is the spirit of Christian union a success?"

—H. E. Wilhite, who is making quite a success as evangelist, was born at Everett, Cass county, Mo., in 1872. He was educated for the ministry at Cotner University, Lincoln, Neb., and his work has been a very successful one. He has held some of the best pulpits and added hundreds to the membership of the churches. Under his preaching at his last pastorate at San Bernardino, Cal., over 300 joined the church in twenty-six months. He is of the evangelistic type and likes this field best. Two weeks ago Brother Wilhite closed a successful meeting in South Dakota and is, at present, at Downs, Kan., whence is reported 24 additions in two weeks. The audiences are as large as can be accommodated and it is expected that there will be many additions. Brother Wilhite goes next to the Forest Avenue Church at Kansas City, Mo. The evangelist's wife conducts a Bible drill every evening for half an hour before the preaching time.

—E. L. Frazier, of Indianapolis, Ind., calls our attention to the fact that there is before the people of that state, and we may say also of others, an opportunity not for party politics but for righteousness. Brother Frazier points out that a number of the candidates in Indiana are members of the Christian church, "rank high in mentality, are capable as the most capable," are true men, pure, clean and strong. A. L. Crim is candidate for secretary of state, W. O. Bailey is candidate for superintendent of public instruction, D. F. Dailey is candidate for congress. Brother Frazier is personally acquainted with these brethren and with Mr. Charles M. Lemon, candidate for treasurer of state, and says that they are in every way reliable and a vote for them is a vote for righteousness. We need not say that The Christian-Evangelist puts the personal character of all candidates for office before any political affiliations. We trust that every Democrat and every Republican in St. Louis and in Missouri will scratch any man on the ticket who is known to be unworthy, and will vote for the candidate of the other party if he is good and fit for the position. It is only by such action that good citizens can overcome the jugglery of the boss and saloon element.

—Some very interesting figures have been compiled by the brethren at Buffalo. We believe that at no other convention has any such attempt been made to ascertain the makeup of a convention crowd. It appears that the total registration was 4,519. Of these persons 2,748 were women and 1,771 men. Of course, it was expected that New York state would furnish the largest attendance and the record shows that 2,417 people from New York were present. Ohio had the next largest delegation with an attendance of 562, and Pennsylvania came third in order with 351 representatives. The far west sent few delegates, Oregon and North Dakota sending only one, though in proportion to membership North Dakota was perhaps well represented with its solitary delegate. In rank with these came South Carolina and Delaware with one representative each. California, where the convention was held last year, registered fourteen delegates. Missouri had 101 representatives in attendance. It is a matter of very considerable interest to notice that from states other than New York no less than fifty-three registered who belonged to other religious bodies. A striking feature is that nearly every religious body had a representative present from among the citizens of Buffalo. The tabulated results show 31 Episcopalians, 67 Methodist Episcopalians, 133 Presbyterians, 66 Methodists, 121 Baptists, 18 Congregationalists, while there were also present 16 Lutherans, 6 Catholics, 4 United Brethren, 3 Unitarians, 3 Universalists, 2 Christian Scientists, 3 of the Reformed Church, 1 of the Salvation Army, 1 of the Millennial Dawn persuasion, and 56 miscellaneous. All of the larger bodies had representatives from other cities in New York state while there was also a representative of the Mennonites. We commend the registration bureau, which was under the charge of Brother Randall, for the carefulness in the tabulation, bringing before us, so clearly, facts which some people have never suspected.

The Scoville-Dux Wedding.

An event of wide interest throughout our brotherhood was that of the marriage of Charles Reign Scoville to Arlene Cornelia Dux in Chicago October 17. The ceremony was read by Dean W. J. Lhamon, of Columbia, Mo. The entire program of the evening was characterized by a simple yet impressive dignity. His colaborer in many a hard struggle and mighty victory, DeLoss Smith, sang in his own sweet charm "For All Eternity." P. M. Kendall and wife, who are now associated with Brother Scoville, were everywhere present to assist their leader in this his hour of hours. A. W. Fortune, formerly pastor of the Metropolitan Church, and A. T. Campbell, the present pastor, assisted in the services. Friends were there from Michigan and Indiana, and Illinois. The delightful home of Mr. and Mrs. Dux was crowded to its utmost when, at 8 o'clock, Dean Lhamon led the way into the parlors. He was followed by the groom, unattended. Then came the bride, walking alone, the type of queenly womanhood. Thomas P. Ullom, of Traverse City, Mich., bore the wedding ring. The service was worthy of Dean Lhamon, and in keeping with the enviable reputation of the man who that hour was plighting his life's interests. They left for the east that night, followed by the congratulations of the hundred guests who were present and the blessings of the countless thousands everywhere who have been gladdened by Brother Scoville's ministry. All rejoice that his strong and virile soul is to be complemented by the gentle and tender ministry of a cultured woman's love.

The Report of the Committee on Union

By R. MOFFETT

The report made by the committee on union with the Free Baptists at the Buffalo convention embraced the report in The Christian-Evangelist of December 28. This gave an account of the joint meeting last November in Brooklyn, at which little was done except to prepare for a subsequent meeting which has not been held. The next week after this meeting the two committees representing the Free Baptists and the regular Baptists, met in Brooklyn, and agreed upon a basis of union which awaits the action of the two bodies in national conferences and conventions. There is a strong probability that the union of these two churches will be effected in the near future.

This action made it quite impracticable for the Disciples' committee to press any further proposition for a joint meeting of the two committees at the present time, and especially since it is well known that the Free Baptists prefer alliance with the regular Baptists. The report of our committee continued as follows:

"The leaven of union is working in this country and in other countries. Not long ago we saw a circular bearing the names of distinguished men of the English and non-conformist churches of England, in which they comment on 'the paralizing effect of division on the moral forces of Christianity,' and say, 'We profoundly feel that our Lord Jesus Christ meant us to be one visible fellowship.' The Wesleyan, Presbyterian and Congregational churches of Canada have been considering the feasibility of uniting in one church, to be called the United Church of Canada, which is 'pronounced by some a movement so extraordinary as to find no parallel for centuries.' The joint committee has published that 'they find, neither in doctrine nor polity, any insuperable obstacles to organic union.' * * In this country the Congregationalists, United Brethren and Protestant Methodists have nearly completed a visible union. The Free Baptists of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have united with the Baptists of those provinces, and in this country these two bodies are likely to complete a visible union, as elsewhere stated in this report. Last November 1,500 representatives of thirty Christian bodies, aggregating 18,000,000 of communicants, met in Carnegie Hall, New York, to hold sessions for one week and talk and pray and plan for closer union of the Lord's people. These delegates were among the most distinguished men of the Christian denominations. This fact itself is deeply significant, however much or little we may approve the plan adopted. This great conference has said to Christendom, 'In the Providence of God, the time has come when it seems fitting more fully to manifest the essential oneness of the Christian churches of America * * and to promote the spirit of fellowship and co-operation among them.' There are many brethren on the floor of this convention who remember the time when no such expressions of mutual confidence and fraternal fellowship would have been heard. The Christian people here present who have preached and prayed for union these many years, can not but rejoice in these evidences of growth toward—if not to—the oneness for which Jesus prayed: and the importance of this oneness as the great factor in the world's conversion, was emphasized by the men who delivered the addresses. * * *

"The spirit of love and fellowship among the Lord's hosts is rapidly growing. Good seed is being sown all over the world, and specially among the missionaries in heathen lands, where they feel the need of united work as we can not in America.

"Let us take care to show the grace of a true Christian courtesy toward all who seek to follow our Lord and Savior. Toward our Baptist brethren we should manifest the fullest possible fellowship. Is it not possible for the two union committees, appointed by these bodies, to arrange for holding a joint congress, composed of leading men of each body, to discuss the practicability of union between the two bodies? Such a joint convocation would be one step toward the union for which our Lord prayed. Evidently the organic union of

THE SIMULTANEOUS CAMPAIGNS

One of the results of the appointment of a Board and Superintendent of Evangelism has been the holding of evangelistic meetings by a number of churches in a district at or near the same time. All Southern California is going into a campaign in the early spring. In January a state-wide campaign will be inaugurated in Iowa. Towards the end of next year Ohio will fall in line. But already other states and cities have begun the good work. We all remember Pittsburg, Kansas City, Cincinnati and other cities. Next week—the First Church, with Herbert Yeuell leading, began last Lord's day—most of the St. Louis churches begin meetings; already the churches of Virginia are in full swing, and many churches of Indianapolis and Indianapolis began last Lord's day or will begin immediately a great simultaneous effort for the conversion of souls and the upbuilding of the church members.

St. Louis.

The churches that will hold the meetings simultaneously are: The First, with Herbert Yeuell; Compton Heights, with Harlow and Harlow; Union Avenue, with C. M. Chilton and C. H. Altheide; Hamilton Avenue, with W. F. Turner and V. E. Ridenour. The Fourth Church will proceed with home forces. Hammett Place will be in line and Maplewood also. J. M. Hoffman will evangelize at Granite City, and Lansdowne and East St. Louis will participate. In our next issue we will give further particulars. There were 14 additions to the First last Sunday and 18 at Compton Heights.

Indianapolis and Indiana.

The simultaneous evangelistic campaign in and about Indianapolis began on Sunday, October 28. The fourteen Christian churches of the city with a membership of above 6,000, are joined in this campaign by about forty churches in the state. Two hundred more churches have pledged to continue the campaign by meetings between this and the state convention in May.

Following is a list of city churches with their leaders:

Central, A. B. Philputt, pastor; R. W. Abberley, evangelist; Percy Parks, chorus leader; Mrs. J. E. Powell, soloist. Second (colored), H. L. Herod, pastor; W. H. Brown, evangelist; E. E. Winston, singer. Third, C. B. Newnan, pastor; Chas. Reign Scoville, evangelist; P. M. Kendall, chorus leader; DeLoss Smith, soloist. Fourth, C. E. Underwood, pastor; E. L. Frazier, evangelist; Harry K. Shields, singer. Downey Avenue, F. W. Norton, pastor; Chas. A. Young, evangelist; A. L. Green, singer. Sixth, A. L. Orcutt, pastor; H. F. MacLane, evangelist; C. E. McVey, singer. Seventh, D. R. Lucas, pastor; J. P. Lucas, evangelist; Mrs. Mary Lucas Ade, singer. Hillside, O. E. Tomes, pastor; H. O. Pritchard, evangelist. Morris Street, C. A. Johnson, pastor; Thos. L. Cooksey, evangelist; Mrs. Nona Earhart, singer. Bismarck Avenue, G. F. Powers, pastor; Clay Trusty, evangelist; Carl Barnett, singer. North Park, Austin Hunter, pastor; M. W. Harkins, evangelist. Englewood, no pastor; J. O. Rose, evangelist; Harry Frank, singer. Olive Branch, F. P. Smith, pastor; T. J. Legg, evangelist; Mrs. Lola Calvert, singer.

The general management of the campaign in the city is under the direction of an executive committee of thirteen, of which the writer is chairman, and O. E. Tomes, secretary, having headquarters at room 34, Union Trust Building. The details of the work are cared for by the following sub-committees:

Public Meetings, A. B. Philputt, chairman; Publicity, A. L. Orcutt, chairman; Evangelists, C. B. Newnan, chairman; Music, O. E. Tomes, chairman; Literature and methods, Austin Hunter, chairman; Canvas, C. B. Coleman, chairman; Finance, Walter Lowe, chairman.

The general expenses of the work will be provided for by the Christian Church Union of the city. Mass meetings are to be held in Tomlinson Hall on three Sunday afternoons beginning November 4. Z. T. Sweeney will speak at the first meeting and John E. Pounds at the second. Arrangements have been perfected for receiving reports from all the meetings every night at headquarters for publication. We are hopeful for a great forward movement in the work.

F. W. NORTON.

West Virginia.

Most of the churches engaged in this state campaign began their meetings on October 21. West Liberty, on account of its pastor, J. W. Underwood being a student at Bethany began earlier and closed October 14, A. R. Davis being the evangelist. Wheeling First Church began early to enable Harlow and son to come to St. Louis. Montgomery, with F. L. Davis as evangelist, also began early and closed with seven additions. Wayne begins November 8; Fairmont, with Z. E. Bates, pastor, and W. F. Shearer, evangelist, begins November 11; Core, with G. H. Ellis as evangelist, starts November 18, and F. A. Bright can not be with Pastor W. E. Pierce at Cameron until December 9. We regret that we have not space in this issue to give a full list of the churches and workers engaged but the early results of the campaign indicate an average attendance at 19 churches of 161 and 123 additions. We have made arrangements to be kept in touch with this campaign and will report it for the benefit of the churches engaged and the inspiration of all our readers.

Ministerial Exchange.

The Christian church at Stuttgart, Ark., wants a preacher, a man of ability; prefer a married man about forty years of age. Salary $1,000 a year.

Robert E. Rosenstein has some time vacant during fall and winter. Any one in the Chickasaw Nation wishing to correspond with him will address him at Norman, Okla.

Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, gospel singer, of Bethany, Mo., is open for engagements.

M. S. Harrison, Neosho, Mo., who has been out of regular work the past year because of sickness in his family, can be secured by some church willing to pay $600 or $700. He is 46 years old, highly commended, and counted both worthy and capable.

H. K. Shields, Rochester, Ind., helper and singer, has February open for engagements.

"After October 15 I will need some one to take charge of the music for my meetings. I want one who has had experience and who can and will take all the work of building up the chorus. One who can sing solos effectively, and can make others sing." Address O. D. Maple, evangelist, Cairo, Ill.

"We have installed electric lights in our church, and our fine acetyline plant, capable of lighting a house of 500, will be sold cheap. It cost $125 and is in good shape. Sale price $30."—R. A. Staley, Dinuba, Cal.

Charles Ford expects to do some evangelistic work this fall and winter. Any one desiring his services can address him at Brecksville, Ohio.

The church at Artesia, N. M., wants a pastor. Can pay the right man $900 to $1,000 per year. Prefer a middle aged man who has no family, and who wants western life and ways. Address D. W. Robertson, Sec. of the Board.

C. F. Rose expects to take up evangelistic work after January 1. Those interested can write him at Canton, Mo.

Esther W. Olive, Greenville, Ill., desires a situation as pastor's assistant.

C. R. L. Vawter, pastor of the First Church of Christ, Shelby, Ohio, can be had for a meeting or two this fall or winter. Brother Vawter has had good success in evangelistic work in several states, some of these meetings being exceedingly difficult pioneer tent work. Write for terms and plans to C. R. L. Vawter, Shelby, Ohio.

"Churches desiring meetings please write me at my permanent address, Bethany, Neb. I raise my own money. Can bring a singer."—Jas. S. Beem, general evangelist.

"I know a strong, fearless, gospel preacher of twelve years' experience in the ministry, whose services can be secured soon by some strong church in eastern Illinois or western Indiana. Any desiring the services of such a minister, write me at once."—G. Halleck Rowe, Sidell, Ill.

Charles W. Mahin and wife, evangelists have an open date for a meeting in January, and will receive correspondence at Angola, Ind.

"As I shall have some vacant Sundays this fall and winter, I desire to fill pulpits for those who wish to be away in meetings. My limit would be about 100 miles from Kansas City. Address J. W. Monser, 1316 Broadway, Kansas City, Mo. References: T. P. Haley and W. F. Richardson.

"I have an open date for December and January meetings. Can furnish good song leader, $30 per week, and expenses for self, or the offerings and expenses. Address me at Wickliffe, Ky."—D. Wesley Campbell.

"I wish to commend the work of Miss Bertha Short, of Seymour, Ind. She is an excellent singer of sacred solos, a fine organist and a consecrated personal worker. Any evangelist or church in need of a singing evangelist should communicate with her."—A. W. Crabb.

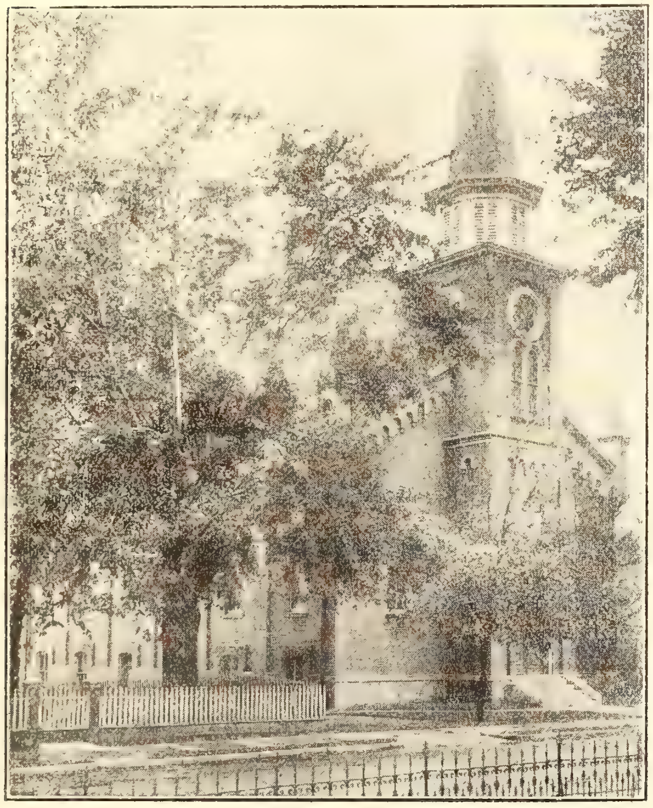
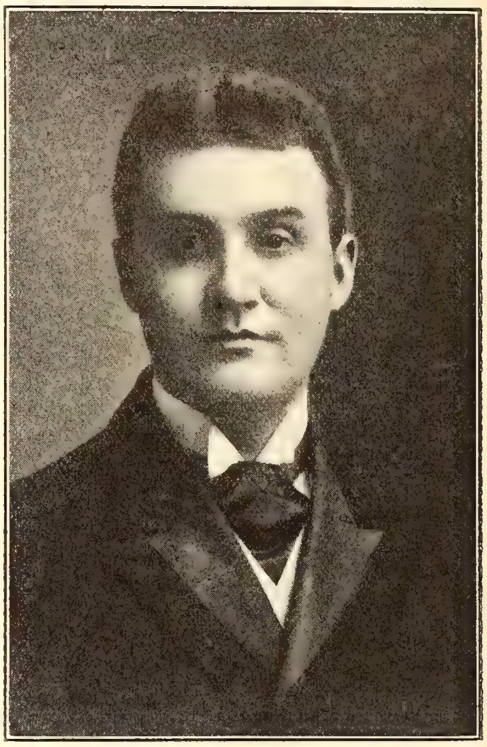
The Christian Church at Lexington, Mo.

The Christian Church at Lexington, Mo., is one of the oldest congregations in the state. The church was organized on April 17, 1836, at the residence of Levi Van Camp, who then lived in the country, two miles south of the city. There were twenty charter members.



The first pastor to serve the young congregation was Duke Young, who preached for the church one Sunday in each month for two years. He was succeeded in the pastorate by Frank Palmer, of Independence, who for eight years continued preaching every third Lord's day. The first house in which the congregation worshiped was erected in 1840, on Main street, under the supervision of Samuel Hudson, an uncle of the oldest living member of the church, Aunt Hannah Waddell, as she is affectionately called by all the members, being in her 89th year. This old building, which in its day and generation was regarded as a marvel of church architecture, and of large dimensions for those primitive times, is still used as a church by a colored congregation of Baptists, they having remodeled it. Time was when its audience room rang with eloquent sermons, convincing logic, and powerful exhortations of such men as Alexander Campbell, "Raccoon" John Smith, Jacob Creath, John T. Johnson, T. M. Allen, Moses E. Lard, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Proctor, Allen Wright, and a host of others whose voices are now hushed in death. It will be of interest to the whole brotherhood to recall the fact that John T. Johnson died here in November, 1856, while in the midst of a very successful meeting. The church, being ministered to by able and consecrated men, continued to grow until the year 1847, when a personal quarrel arose in the congregation which resulted in a division, T. N. Gaines, the pastor, going with the seceders. Another church building was erected near the corner of Eleventh and South streets. This building is still used as a house of worship, being occupied by the German Methodists. Soon after this, however, better judgment and the Spirit of Christ having prevailed, the brethren saw the folly of trying to support two churches, and very nearly all of the seceding members returned to the mother church. In the year 1870, the church having outgrown the old building on Main street, a new edifice was erected on South street, in the very best residence portion of the city. This is a substantial brick building of two stories. Six years ago it was remodeled at a cost of $3,000. The beautiful auditorium has a seating capacity of 400 and the church has a membership of about 400. Since the year 1858 the congregation has enjoyed in its settled ministry the services of such eminent men as T. P. Haley, Henry H. Haley, Frank Allen, George Plattenburg, Jesse H. Huger, Chapman S. Lucas, G. W. Terrell, G. M. Goode, E. J. Fenstermacher, and others, whose splendid works follow them. Many successful meetings have been held, the most notable ones being conducted by Martin and Easton, when there were 252 added, and the one held by Northcutt and St. John, when 80 were added. On the first Lord's day in November, the Martin family, of Chicago, will begin a meeting for this church. Great preparations are being made, and great results are confidently expected. The present pastor, R. B. Briney, has been serving the church for the past four years, and was recently recalled by the congregation to continue that service indefinitely.

Evangelist Richard Martin and Miss Edna and Elbert Martin.



R. B. Briney, Pastor.

He is a son of J. B. Briney and a brother of W. N. Briney, now of Louisville, Ky. He is a graduate of the Bible college and Kentucky University, and served churches in Kirksville, Ky., Amarillo, Texas, and Monroe City, Mo., while he also at one time was state evangelist of Mississippi. He is a young man of promise and we feel sure he will garner and care for the sheaves that may be gathered by the successful evangelistic force he and his fine board of officers have called to their aid.

THE BUFFALO CONVENTION

Flashes of Wit and Wisdom from the Convention.

BY JAMES SMALL.

Fire and facts, fun and fancy, wit and wisdom, story and song, prayer and praise, love, and laughter, song and solo, heart and head, graces and genius, goodness and greatness, gold and goodness, all have a place and a rightful one at our national conventions. Truth comes to us in humor as well as in homily; in fun as well as in fact.

Richard Abberley, of Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, a bright, brainy young Englishman who has never got the credit in the brotherhood that he deserves, said in a short speech at the English tea "that while he loved England, and perhaps if he had the choice of his birthplace he would want to be born there again, yet he preferred being an Englishman 'Yanked' over."

Another speaker this same evening congratulating the English as a sincere and sturdy people, remarked that they did not have the bright, witty element that the Irish did. He told this story to illustrate the point:

"Fred Douglas and an Irishman had been on the train for two hundred miles together. The hour came when they had to separate. The Irishman remarked on parting. 'Well, Mr. Douglas, I am glad that I got acquainted with you. We have talked politics and religion and we have not agreed on "aither." But you are a "gintleman", that's what you are. You are a Christian man and I can say that for you.' Then as Fred Douglas extended the hand to bid the Hibernian good-bye, he remarked, 'Well, Mike, I am sorry to say that I can't say the same about you.' Quick as a flash came the reply: 'Indade and ye could if ye had lied like the "devil" as I did.'"

W. T. Moore told a story to illustrate how plentiful the Englishmen were at this same tea. And if there is anybody in the country who can stop and tell a good story, it is this Moses of the brotherhood. A certain brother was extremely sensitive about his deafness. He never would allow people for a moment to think that he was deaf, and yet he was extremely so. He happened to be hunting one day and a stranger passed by as he was gazing up at a tree, gun in hand and half to his shoulder and in readiness for execution. The stranger called to him: "In what direction is Booneville?" "I believe it is up the tree," said our friend. "I said in what direction is Booneville?" "I believe it is behind the tree," answered our friend. For the third and last time which the deafest might have heard, the stranger remarked, "I want to know in what direction is Booneville?" "I believe," said our friend, once more, "it is in the hole." Walking away in disgust the stranger finally retorted, "You are a blank fool." "The woods are full of them," was the response.

The same speaker told a story on the woman's proverbial "tongue." It happened that a husband and wife got to quarreling before retiring and so far as the husband was concerned he would have settled the matter before going to rest. Not so the wife. She kept her side up until the husband dropped off to sleep. Some time in the night he awakened and the wife was still talking, but this time, to give the wife her proper due, she was talking in her sleep, but the husband not knowing this for a moment, inquired, "Nancy, are ye talking again, or—yet?"

One speaker told a good story on selfishness. Two little boys were swinging when one of them remarked: "If—one—of—us—would—get—out—there—would—be—more—room—for—me."

Richard W. Abberley told these on the train: An American and Englishman were talking in London and as the argument grew rather hot, the Englishman remarked: "If you don't look out, we will come over and lick you Americans!" "What?" replied the American—"again?"

A young lady in Toronto was talking against our flag and happened to remark in the presence of Senator Hoar that "it reminded her of one of these pieces of striped candy." "Yes," said the senator, "the kind that makes everybody sick that tries to lick it."

F. D. Power told a good story on himself that caused quite a ripple in the Convention. When he was a young man he went to preach at a place where the good believed in sending the preacher around instead of putting him up at one place. At this place it was difficult to place him at all. Finally an old lady rose and said: "Well, brethren, I can eat him, but I can't wash him." The ice being broken, another sister arose, and said: "Well, I can sleep him, but I am nothing on 'biled shirts.' Another one of the sisters was soon on her feet, remarking, "that as the other sisters were going to eat him and sleep him she could wash him."

One speaker gave as a definition for a hog: "A body built around an appetite." This speaker was illustrating the point that the brutes do not get as much good out of what they enjoy as we; because they feel their joys only along the rough lines of the material. Man has that and also the fine lines of the reason and the spiritual sensibilities. There are other exercises besides animal exercises. Faith and hope and love, said the speaker, are the loftiest exercises of the loftiest part of human nature. The righteous can make the best of both worlds. The good the Christian gets, the couches we rest on, the horses we drive, the homes we own, the pictures that we admire, the music we hear, the bread we eat, give us greater enjoyment when we are Christians and rest on the invisible things.

I am glad we all had a smile and a laugh at the Convention, for it is generally conceded that there is as much religion in these things as in tears and long faces. And then for most while it is bright and sunny on top, it is usually dark enough deeper down.

Britain at the Convention.

One of the sweetest meetings of the convention, to those privileged to participate in it, was the "tea" and reunion on Tuesday evening at the Touraine Hotel, of preachers and workers at various times connected with the work of the F. C. M. S. in England. Such gatherings have been held before in connection with the National conventions, but probably none so widely representative as this. Of the earlier workers in that field there were absent only M. D. Todd, who was taken to a higher fellowship twenty-one years ago, and H. S. Earl. After a doubtfully English "tea," the party adjourned to one of the drawing rooms to listen to speeches and reports and reminiscences. W. T. Moore, the venerable patriarch of the convention and J. H. Garrison told of the beginnings of the work in England and made our hearts burn as they reminded us of the sacredness and the abiding character of the friendships and attachments formed in such companionship in arms. J. J. Haley and J. M. Van Horn followed with reminiscences. Other speakers included B. H. Hayden, Geo. T. Walden (now of Australia), Jas. Small and Earle M. Todd. There were present also Mrs. J. H. Garrison, Mrs. Van Horn, Mrs. M. D. Todd and Miss Flora, Paul Moore, J. I. Tisdall, R. W. Abberley, Mathew Small, A. W. Taylor, and several from Australia and Canada whose names do not occur. Auld Lang Syne, sung with joined hands and prayer by W. T. Moore, closed the meeting, and all hurried away again to the urgent discussions at the Convention Hall.

E. M. TODD.

National Bible School Association.

The following board of directors was elected at Buffalo, for one year (expiring 1907): G. P. Coler, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Robt. H. Hopkins, Louisville, Ky.; W. H. McClain, St. Louis, Mo.; T. J. Legg, Indianapolis, Ind.; Chas. M. Fillmore, Cincinnati, Ohio.

For two years (expiring 1908): J. H. Bryan, Des Moines, Ia.; Herbert Moninger, Cincinnati, Ohio; I. W. Gill, Wichita, Kan.; Pres. T. E. Cramblet, Bethany, W. Va.; J. H. Hardin, Liberty, Mo.

For three years (expiring 1909): Prof. Clinton Lockhart, Waco, Tex; W. A. Moore, Tacoma, Wash.; P. H. Welshimer, Canton, O.; E. A. Cole, Washington, Pa.; W. A. Baldwin, Lincoln, Neb.

Eureka College Reception.

Mr. Chas. J. Phillips, superintendent of the D. L. & W. R. R., and his generous wife, both old Eureka students, tendered a delightful reception to the students and alumni of Eureka college attending the Buffalo convention. Forty-five responded to the invitation while a considerable number were prevented by previous engagements. Following refreshments, H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines, acted as toastmaster in his most happy way. Responding to his call, Prof R. A. Gilcrest, of Missouri; G. A. Miller, of Kentucky; W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City; S. H. Zendt, of Iowa, A. W. Taylor, Finis Idleman and J. G. Waggoner, of Illinois. J. P. Lichtenberger, of New York City, gave most delightful reminiscenses of college experiences and their influence upon one's life. A. E. Cory, of Po Chow, China, gave a happy talk of his college inspirations and his experiences in the Orient. The company returned to the convention in due time for the evening session, grateful to their host and hostess for their generous offices and to the good Father whose tender providences and loving care grants such rich fellowship and delightful occasions to his children.

J. G. WAGGONER.

Bethany Dinner.

The Bethany College dinner at the Y. M. C. A. cafe was the most largely attended and the most enthusiastic gathering of Bethany students, and friends ever held at one of our national conventions. Provision was made for 140 plates and before the hour arrived every ticket was sold and fifty more were at the banquet hall hoping to get in at the last moment. Many of these went elsewhere for their refreshments and returned to enjoy the toasts. A significant feature of the event was the prevailing spirit of hopefulness manifested by all present concerning the future of Bethany.

Among the speakers were Frank H. Main, A. McLean, Wallace Tharp, Allen Wilson, T. W. Phillips, S. M. Cooper, E. Lee Perry, W. B. Taylor, Will Loose, F. D. Power, T. E. Cramblet.

The most significant feature of the occasion was the enthusiastic passage of the following resolution: "Be it resolved by the Alumni, former students and friends of Bethany College in banquet at Buffalo assembled that we heartily endorse the Centennial aim to raise $100,000 additionl endowment and to increase the student body to 600 by 1909 and we hereby pledge ourselves to aid in making this effort successful.

The American Christian Education Society.

The meeting of the American Christian Education Society was held in Buffalo in convention with the other affiliated interests on October 17. An address was delivered by Pres. J. Hopwood, of Virginia Christian College. Prof. T. C. Howe, of Butler, read a statement in behalf of the directors of the Christian Education Society, and Pres. C. C. Rowlison of Hiram, read a short address emphasizing the need of a much larger interest in the brotherhood in the problem of education. According to the instructions of the directors of the society, those present were requested to become members of the society and to subscribe or give in cash the sum of $2 as their annual membership fee. About $100 in cash and pledges was the result of this appeal.

The society at present has for directors the executive heads of our educational institutions. The directors present at Buffalo held a conference in the Y. M. C. A. building and elected officers for the ensuing year, Pres. C. C. Rowlison, of Hiram, being made president, Prof. T. C. Howe, of Butler, vice-president, and Pres. R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka, secretary-treasurer. Various committees were appointed and an aggressive program to be carried out by the executive committee was suggested.

The executive committee plans to have a day of conference in the near future to devise definite plans for the work of the society, and is determined to carry forward the interests of education among the Disciples in as vigorous a way as possible.

Much more money is needed and those who are interested in Christian education ought at once to indicate their willingness to become members of the society and to pay the small fee of $2 for such membership. It is hoped that many will immediately send to the secretary this membership fee.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Colorado's Convention.

It was the twenty-fourth annual meeting, and was held with the Central Church of Pueblo, October 2-4. The hospitality of the churches of Pueblo was abundant and hearty. D. W. Moore, pastor of the Central, had everything in readiness for the convention.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions occupied the first evening and half day. Their reports were encouraging; they have had the best year in their history. We have not data at hand concerning it, but know that their record during the past year broke all previous ones. Their officers of the past year were re-elected, viz: President, Mrs. L. S. Brown, Denver; vice-president, Mrs. Olive Sanford, Littleton; secretary, Mrs. J. W. Maddux, Golden; treasurer, Mrs. Mary L. Parks, Denver; Superintendent of Junior Work, Mrs. Lizzie L. Sheely, Merino. Dr. Olivia A. Baldwin spoke at the evening session, on India.

The Colorado Christian Missionary Society and affiliated interests, viz, the Christian Endeavor and the Sunday-school, occupied a day and one-half and two evenings. Crayton S. Brooks presided with grace and dignity. The report of the State Board, read by Leonard G. Thompson, the corresponding secretary, recalled the fact that our conventions held with the Central Church at Pueblo have been epoch-making conventions. The first one was held here, in 1883, before the Central had a building; that of 1890 when they had only a chapel, and at that convention the first information was given which led to the coming of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to Colorado; that of 1898 began the movement for larger self-support in our work, which is still growing, and this year has reached the highest point yet attained. The hope was expressed that this convention would take some worthy advance, and this was done later in determining to place an evangelist in the field to raise $3,500 this year for state work, to begin a campaign to enlist at least three thousand of our members as tithers, and to strive to bring several of our present mission churches to self-support during the year. Attention was called to our approaching silver anniversary, which comes in 1908, and plans will soon be inaugurated to suitably celebrate that event.

The Board aided in the support of 16 men in 34 fields a part of all of the year. R. M. Bailey labored most of the year at Rifle, although some time was given to Meeker and Grand Valley; a good house of worship was built and the membership more than doubled. W. E. Jones and J. K. Hester each labored a part of the year at Paonia. Plans are now being laid to build a new house of worship. The church at Delta was organized in March. Walter Carter served as supply pastor, and E. J. Harlow took permanent charge September 1. There are 62 members, and a good lot has been purchased. John Treloar has continued at Monte Vista. His health is very feeble, and he was tenderly remembered in the sessions of the convention. His work and influence at Monte Vista have been remarkable in view of his illness. His wife is now supplying the pulpit, while her husband is still confined to his bed most of the time. Ward Russell and J. W. Babcock each spent a part of the year at Florence, the latter now being in charge. The house has just been enlarged, and excellent congregations attend the services. The present building will serve temporarily. Wesley I. Houston began work at Lamar, December 1, and will close November 1, next. The church is making important improvements on their building, especially seating it with pews. H. M. Hale began at Colorado City with the year, but will have to remove November 1 on account of Mrs. Hale's health. It was hoped Brother Hale could have completed their house of worship. The work has grown in nearly every department. Golden has exchanged its old property for a first-class central location, and has excavated for a new building. More funds had to be secured. At the convention G. W. Muckley told us that the Board of Church Extension had just granted a loan of $1,500 to this church. Work is now going forward on the foundation walls. J. W. Maddux is the capable leader and minister. Golden has the State School of Mines, one of the finest technical schools in this country. E. J. Harlow closed at Windsor with August, after two years' work. The church grew during his ministry. The house was seated with excellent pews. G. C. Johnson and Walter Carter each served a part of the year. The mortgage debt was paid in April. This church is but five years old. J. K. Hester and E. F. Harris have served at Sterling and Atwood, and meetings were held by Brother Hester and W. B. Clemmer, the latter assisted by Arthur Wake as singer. Under Brother Hester's ministry a house of worship was built at Sterling. We had had no organization for ten years, and the old property had been sold.

John T. Stivers held meetings at La Junta, Rocky Ford, Rifle and Delta. At La Junta 96 were added, at Rocky Ford, 28; at Rifle, 88, and at Delta, 37. Ellis B. Harris, of Lind, Wash., held a meeting at Hillsboro, organizing with 26 members. E. F. Harris held a meeting at S. L. W. Ranch, with 7 additions. L. H. Humphreys, pastor at Greeley organized a church at Ault, north of Greeley, with 33 members, and located Virgil Walker as minister there and at Hillsboro. Percy T. Carnes, of Laplata, Mo., held a meeting at Bayfield, Laplata county, in southwestern Colorado, and organized, but did not report the number of members. J. K. Hester and M. P. Givens held a meeting at Cripple Creek.

The report of the treasurer, A. E. Pierce, of Denver, covered thirteen and one-half months, and showed the following: Balance on hand August 11, 1905, $169.16; received from Christian Woman's Board of Missions, $1,512.50; received from Colorado, $2,167.22; total, $3,848.88. The year was closed with all obligations paid, and money in the treasury. The amount raised from October 1, 1905, to September 30, 1906, was $1,831,34, the largest amount in any year in the history of our Colorado work.

The Colorado Christian Herald, the eight-page monthly paper, published under the auspices of the state board, is now in its fourth year, and is filling a very important place in the development of the work.

Those well known in our work, who had passed on to their eternal reward during the year, were tenderly remembered. They are: Mrs. Katie Davis Mohorter, of Pueblo; Thomas A. Gunnell and Mrs. J. P. Lucas, of Colorado Springs; John W. Divers, of Salida; J. L. Miller, of Canon City; Dr. J. L. Edwards, of Florence, and Mrs. Emma Pickrell Craig, of Denver.

The report of the committee on summer assembly, stated that the meeting for the past summer was held at Gato, 37 miles from Denver, where the permanent home of the institution is to be; that the total enrollment was 144; while a little smaller than the previous year, yet better sustained throughout the sessions, and that more ministers were present this year than last. The development company which own the grounds has platted them, placing the most eligible lots on the market; a number of cottages have been built during the year; in platting the grounds the company has dedicated five acres to the use of the assembly, and it is hoped that before the meeting of next summer a beginning may be made on the auditorium, and accommodations provided for larger attendance. The committee confirmed the wisdom and expediency of maintaining the assembly, and is convinced that it may be made a potent factor in the development of our Colorado work.

The addresses were well prepared, and well delivered. D. B. Titus, of Longmont, spoke on "God's Portion," advocating the tithe system, and B. B. Tyler followed with an enthusiastic endorsement and discussion of the address. G. W. Muckley had preceded these addresses with one of his characteristically able addresses on Church Extension. This was Brother Muckley's second visit to a Colorado convention. He was most welcome, and will be at any time. M. M. Nelson, of Rocky Ford, spoke on "Sunday-school Work," and J. B. Hunley, of Canon City, on "The Christian Endeavor Pledge." David C. Peters, of Trinidad, addressed the convention on "Centennial Aims and Methods for Colorado." One thing he advocated brought forth hearty endorsement in the form of a motion which was unanimously passed, viz, that Colorado memoralize the National Benevolent Association to take immediate steps toward establishing in this state a sanitarium for tubercular patients. No state in the Union can more fully appreciate the need for such an institution than Colorado. The closing addresses were delivered by E. F. Harris, of Longmont and J. E. Pickett, of Denver. The former spoke on "The Gospel of the Helping Hand," and the latter on evangelism, his theme being, "And They Went Everywhere."

The music was excellent throughout. Mrs. J. B. Hunley, of Canon City, was the chief soloist. Special numbers also were rendered by the quartet choir of Central Church, and by Mrs. W. T. Green, of the same church. Strong temperance and Christian citizenship resolutions were adopted.

The following are officers and state board for the year: President convention, David C. Peters, Trinidad; vice-president, B. C. Hilliard, Denver; recording secretary, J. E. Pickett, Denver, corresponding secretary, Leonard G. Thompson, Denver; treasurer, A. E. Pierce, Denver; other members of the board, Wm. Bayard Craig, Denver (chairman of the board), B. B. Tyler and Dallas J. Osborne, of Denver; Crayton S. Brooks, of Colorado Springs, and D. W. Moore, of Pueblo. Mrs. Laura B. Thompson was chosen superintendent of Sunday-school work, and Clifford H. White, superintendent of Christian Endeavor; both of Denver. The next convention goes to Colorado Springs.

The New England Convention.

The forty-first annual convention of our churches in New England was held October 4-7 with the church at Manton a suburb of Providence, R. I. The convention opened with an able sermon by M. L. Streator, of Bridgeport, Conn., on "God's Elect. Who are they and am I one of them?"

The sessions of Friday began with a devotional service led by A. T. Remington, of Manton. The local pastor, Loren F. Sanford, welcomed the delegates, to which a happy response was given by G. A. Reinl, of Springfield, Mass. The president, A. L. D. Buxton, of Worchester, Mass., then spoke of the work of the year with suggestions touching the work in the year to come. An address by Harry Minnick, of Worcester, on "The Restoration Movement. What do we aim to restore?" followed by one by T. A. Manley, of West Pawlet, Vt., on "Union Through Restoration," gave us a clear presentation of the position we hold on the question of Christian union.

After a devotional service Friday afternon, A. T. June, of Everett, Mass., spoke on "New England Missionary Needs." After this came the C. W. B. M. session. Encouraging reports of this work were given. Mrs. Newton Knox, of Worcester, was elected president. Mrs. I. W. Harrison, secretary of the Centennial committee, gave an address which was much appreciated.

Devotional service Friday evening was led by W. C. Crerie, of Haverhill, Mass. A. L. Ward, of Boston, gave an address on "Evangelization in New England," in which that feature of church work here was ably discussed. Following this Harry Minnick gave an interesting and helpful address on "The work of the Minister in New England."

Saturday morning after a devotional service led by R. H. Bolton, of Boston, came the Bible school session, in which Mrs. F. S. Fisher, of Worcester, spoke on "The Home Department," Miss Maud Phillips, of Worcester, on "The Primary," W. C. Crerie on "How to interest Young Ladies and Men in the Sunday-school." An open discussion on Sunday-school work was led by R. A. Spellman, of Manton. The superintendent's report, prepared by W. M. Nelson, of Boston, was read by F. H. Bailey, of Danbury, Conn. This session was closed by an able address by G. A. Reinl, on "The Teacher in the Scholar's Conversion." An able address on "The Authenticity of the Bible," prepared by Robert Pegram, now of Milton, N. S., was read by A. L. Ward, and it was voted to have it published.

After a devotional service Saturday afternoon, led by G. Wilton Lewis, the report of the Corresponding Secretary, R. H. Bolton was given. He reported the membership of our churches as 2917, a net gain of 112. Number of churches 20 not counting four anti-churches. Raised for foreign missions, $612.30; for home and New England missions, $740.42; for Church Extension, $111.81; for the C. W. B. M., $369.51; for all purposes, $23,318.52. Value of property, $145,140; indebtedness, $17,860. The debt of the Brockton church paid off, the debt of the Everett church reduced $1,000, and building funds started at Haverhill and Bridgeport.

This was followed by the business session of the New England Christian Missionary Society. R. H. Bolton was elected president, Harry Minnick, corresponding secretary and G. A. Reinl, treasurer. It was voted that the society send a delegate to each of the state councils of Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island of the Federation of Churches, to represent our plea for Christian union by a return to New Testament Christianity. The session closed with an address by G. B. Townsend of Troy, N. Y., representing the A. C. M. S.

The Saturday evening session began with a devotional service led by A. S. Heaney, of Manton, S. T. Willis, of New York, then spoke of the work of the Church Extension Board, and J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis, of the work of the National Benevolent Association.

A meeting at which verbal reports from the churches were given was held early Sunday morning, presided over by S. M. Hunt, of Springfield. The sermon at the regular morning service was by J. H. Mohorter. J. W. Robbins, of Brockton, preached in the afternoon, after which came the communion service led by S. M. Hunt and A. S. Heaney. In the evening the Christian Endeavor service was led by the superintendent, H. A. Ling. The evening sermon was by Austin P. Finley the new pastor of the Highland Street church of Worcester.

The entire convention was harmonious and helpful. The attendance was not as large as usual because of the national convention being at Buffalo. The addresses were of a high order, and the spirit of the convention was inspiring and earnest. We were especially pleased to have with us Brother Mohorter who was identified with our work so long.

Ohio.

After Buffalo what? In general, greater things everywhere! But in Ohio, the greatest thing immediately is the offering for Ohio missions November 4. There has never been as thorough a campaign put up in Ohio in behalf of Ohio missions as Secretary Bartlett has made this year. Sunday November 4 is the harvest time. Let every church be in line. "The biggest offering ever," should be the motto of each church.——A. A. Honeywell will assume the responsibilities of the work at Marietta, recently vacated by W. A. Brundige. Brother Honeywell leaves McConnellsville for Marietta.——E. E. Violett was to begin a meeting at Lorain with Pastor Hostetter October 21.——We are all rejoicing over the recovery of H. N. Allen from a recent operation.——Secretary Bartlett will preach regularly for the church at Painesville after November 4. His family will not move there till later, however. The daily press reports the call of Brother Mansfield at Millersburg. It does not state from whence he comes.——Grant Speer finds it impossible to get away permanently from the church at Hicksville, and will return after having preached at Ashland for six months.——The Ohio letter is written this time from Pawnee, Neb., a thousand miles from the desk on which the letter is usually written. A ride from Ohio to Nebraska this time of year is a great treat. There is evidence of an abundant harvest of grain and fruit all along the way. A day was spent in Chicago with old Columbus friends, Prof. F. V. Irish and wife. A course was taken through Chicago university under Gates and Irish, and a diploma was promised by mail later. Several Ohio boys were met who are studying in the university. A game of croquet with Professor Irish and E. S. Ames clearly showed that they have the Rockefeller spirit—competitors were met and crushed without compunction of conscience. This is a great country out here in Nebraska. A black rich soil three feet deep covers every foot of Pawnee county. It is rolling enough to add beauty. Pawnee City has 2,000 people, and is a saloonless town with seven churches and a U. P. Academy. G. M. Weimer is bishop of "our folks" here and a jolly, scholarly, hard-working bishop he is. He ministers to a congregation of 175 of the best people in the community, men of business and affairs and ladies of culture. There is no lack of a topic for conversation here. Nearly everybody came from Ohio and all want to know all about the old Buckeye state. The meeting is taxing the capacity of the house, and the name of Christ is being confessed. But Pawnee for a western town is conservative. Yet for business thrift and moral and spiritual worth it is hard to find a better than Pawnee, Neb.—C. A. Freer, Painesville, Ohio.

the Christian world must begin with those separate denominations which are nearest to oneness.

"In seeking and praying for union we will not always find ourselves cheered and welcomed; but for the world's sake we must hold patiently and persistently to the desire that all may be simply one in Christ; and for our own sakes we must keep the passion for unity. It will save us from Pharisaism and bigotry, and the deep hunger for oneness in itself will keep us wondrous close to Christ.

Georgia Notes.

The "Southern Evangelist" of Atlanta has been merged into THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and all Southern Evangelist subscribers will now receive THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which is one of the greatest weeklies in our brotherhood. It will be a weekly treat for us to follow the pens of editor J. H. Garrison, G. L. Snively, F. D. Power, B. B. Tyler and others who make THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one of the greatest religious weeklies of this country. We trust that all "Southern-Evangelist" readers will be delighted with the change. I will continue to collect subscriptions due the "Southern-Evangelist" and would be glad if all who are behind with subscriptions would pay up without further delay. My address is 187 Edgewood ave., Atlanta, Ga.

The Central and Northeast Georgia District Conventions, the first at Toomsboro, October 17-19, and the latter at Union Church, Oconee county, October 23-25, were highly enjoyed by all who attended. The entertainment was perfect and the sermons and addresses of Brothers J. H. Hughes, of Macon, B. P. Smith, of Atlanta, Cor. Sec. Georgia Christian Missionary Society; Dr. T. L. Harris, of Wrightsville; W. B. Shaw, of Baldwin, secretary Southeastern Orphanage; S. S. Landrum, of Winder, were enthusiastically received. The preachers present who attended the central district convention were: T. G. Linkous, chairman; J. H. Hughes, Dr. T. L. Harris, G. R. Cleveland, J. M. Boone, E. L. Shelnutt. The preachers at the northeast district convention were: E. L. Shelnutt, chairman; T. M. Foster, J. H. Hughes, R. W. Simpson, Dr. W. B. Doster, S. S. Landrum, W. B. McDonald, W. A. Chastain, D. R. Piper, D. A. Brindle, J. H. Wood, P. H. Mears, B. P. Smith. The C. W. B. M. of the districts held splendid sessions during the conventions. The W. S. G. M. held an interesting session during the northeast convention.

The State Convention will be held in Valdosta November 19-22. A full delegation and a great convention are expected and desired. If the editors of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will attend, they will receive a royal welcome. A full program will appear in this paper.

The Central Georgia Railway will give excursion rates to St. Louis, Mo., November 15, 16, on account "Deep Waterway Convention," to be held in that city. One fare plus $2, round trip.

A. Robert Miller has resigned as pastor of the church in Savannah and may leave Georgia. We can ill afford to give him up. He is a strong man physically, morally and religiously and Georgia needs him and many more just such men.

Georgia has ten men, "boys," attending the Bible College at Lexington, Ky., preparing for the ministry. Some of these "boys" are depending on the "Georgia Christian Education Society" for financial assistance and should not be disappointed. W. A. Chastain, of Athens is treasurer of this society.

Don't neglect to take an offering for state missions between now and state convention. Every church in the state should attend to this most important matter. Write B. P. Smith, 58 Dunn St., Atlanta, about it.

The South Carolina State Convention will be held at Ellenton, just twenty odd miles from Augusta, Ga., and will begin the day the Georgia convention closes. Our national secretaries are expected to take in both conventions as well as all the chicken and beefsteak they can get. Sugar cane and "goobers" and "tater pie" will be added to the bill of fare. E. L. SHELNUTT.

Oregon.

September witnessed the closing of a good meeting at Medford under Brother Kellems, and the opening of a promising meeting at Ashland, under S. M. Martin, and at St. John's (Portland), under City Evangelist J. P. Conder. The latter is a joint mission of the City Joint Board and the O. C. M. C.——I spent a large part of the month with the churches of Southern Oregon. Most of them are in fine working order and doing good work. The mission church at Grant's Pass is still advancing under the leadership of Brother Bower. Roseburg is doing fine work under its new pastor, B. E. Youtz. Brother Youtz is new in Oregon, but not to the work. Brother Corbin, who has been doing good service at Medford, goes to Dallas. Dallas is a growing field and Brother Corbin is a tried worker. We look for great things from Dallas.——Oregon is to have three district conventions this fall—Albany, October 4, 5; McMinnville, October 31, November 1; Roseburg, November 7, 8. Watch for reports. Oregon means business for Christ and the Church.——Let us all begin to rally our forces for the offering for state missions November 4, and for the winter campaign for souls. How many churches are planning to hold missionary meetings this winter?

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

A CHURCH WITH A GREAT OPPORTUNITY.—Rev. 3:7-13.

The Divine Call.

"Awake, my soul, stretch every nerve,
And press with vigor on;
A heavenly race demands your zeal,
And an immortal crown.

"'Tis God's all-animating voice
That calls thee from on high;
'Tis his own hand presents the prize
To thine aspiring eye."

That church that is concerned only with its internal affairs to the exclusion of interest in the progress of the kingdom throughout the earth looks not upon the ocean but over a land locked bay. It needs to sail through the "Golden Gate" of nobler impulses and catch the inspiration of the universal sea.

It is worthy of note that in all these addresses to the seven churches the Holy Spirit in majestic language ascribes delectable qualities and omnipotent powers to Deity. With a reverence often lacking in us God contemplates his own beauty, holiness and glory. It is well for us to read these overtures to the "angels" for the sake of the veneration and adoration they will inspire within us.

To those worthily accepting these great opportunities studding like stars the Christian's horizon is everything the heart should hold dear—"Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name."

Philadelphia stood about twenty miles from Sardis and was the second city in importance in the province of Lydia. It is first mentioned in Revelation and the praises bestowed upon the church show that it was worthy of a city of "Brotherly Love." Though the old name has been laid aside by the Turks, the city still has 3,000 houses and a Christian population. There are five churches in the place, and it is the seat of a Greek bishop. —Vision of the Ages.

Opportunity is a nautical term. Literally it means "before the port." Philadelphia was before the harbor with anchor weighed and sails spread equipped for noble enterprises on every shore laved by the great oceans. Again she was approaching the haven apparently deeply laden with treasures for the king and all the city she had honorably acquired in Christian commerce with a world she had left richer and happier than she had found it. With what happy expectancy would she drift in with the twilight tide!

Such splendid opportunities are the heritage of every church that "hast kept the word of my patience."

No church has or has had a greater opportunity than our own. There is great praiseworthiness in a church's keeping its own garments of righteousness immaculate; in living in that atmosphere where the Spirit may say of it, Thou hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name; in caring for its own poor and sustaining its sorrowing through hours of grief; in impressing the world with its faith in God, its loyalty to his will, and its confidence of an inheritance beyond Jordan. Let churches examine themselves and if self reformation is needed, let it be immediately begun. Then is it entering the channel that opens out into the sea of large opportunity.

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE.—Matt. 26:36-50.

Golden Text.—Not my will, but thine, be done.—Luke 22:42.

Memory verses, 38, 39.

The Garden of Gethsemane, to which Jesus and his eleven faithful disciples repaired after the supper in the upper room and after the betrayer had gone out from them, was an enclosure a short distance outside of the city on the slope of the Mount of Olives. Probably it was a place to which they had before frequently retired for rest and quiet, so that Judas, knowing his Master's love of the spot sought there for him after failing to find him in the house where the supper had been eaten.

Three of the eleven were chosen for a closer intimacy in this hour when all that was human in him needed the support of warm human hearts. These three were doubtless those best fitted to enter into fellowship with his sufferings through sympathy, though even they could not have been expected to understand them.

It is in this hour of his greatest suffering that we see Jesus most clearly exhibiting his divinity. His willing subjection to the Father's will, his agony over the approaching tragedy, whose true import he alone understood, his call for the strengthening sympathy of his friends, his tender thoughtfulness for his weary disciples—all these exhibit the divine qualities which fitted him to be the Savior of the world, more clearly than they could have been shown by any display of power in summoning legions of angels to his deliverance or by any exhibition of contempt or stoical disregard of the death and disgrace which were so soon to be inflicted upon him. Divinity is not spectacular. It is the greatest possible error to think of the agony in the garden as an exhibition of human weakness, a momentary and excusable lapse from his truly divine character. On the contrary, it helps us to see, in some measure, in what his divinity consisted.

What was the cause of that great agony which groaned out its expression in "If it be possible, let this cup pass." Surely we cannot make it depend solely upon the dread of physical death. That would be to credit him, whom all the world acknowledges as its chief of heroes, with less fortitude than has been exhibited by hundreds of martyrs from whom rack and flame have been unable to wring a word of pain or fear. That element of the sufferings must have been the least of all, or at least the best controlled.

But there were two great sources of suffering in the garden. The first was the sense of the ingratitude of his own nation, the knowledge that men loved darkness rather than light and so were about to put to death their best friend. This was akin to those pangs which a man may feel when those of his own house and blood turn against him without cause.

More deeply significant even than this was the suffering which came from the fact that he was dying for sin. Death is the triumph of sin, as well as its punishment. In some real sense—we shall not stop to discuss theories of the atonement—Jesus Christ died for the sins of men. For an innocent being to take upon himself the penalty of the sins of others could not be without the keenest spiritual torture. It was probably this more than all else that wrung from the Savior in Gethsemane that cry of anguish and submission.

Conversion and Pardon, or "Born of Water and the Spirit."

If water baptism be correctly represented as a birth in regeneration (John 3:5), does it not logically follow that life, spiritual life, precedes the birth, baptism? Thus it is in physical generation or birth. Again, if water baptism is correctly represented as a burial (Rom. 6:4), because of death to sin in conversion, does it not logically follow that death, death to sin, should precede burial, baptism? Hence baptism, the culminating act in the new birth or conversion, brings us to the pardoning power of God.

S. J. Vance.

Conversion and pardon, therefore, are not synonomous terms but express separate and distinct acts, the first, human, in the heart and life of man; the second, divine, in the mind of God. Neither are the expressions "spiritual," and "dead to sin, equivalent to pardon, but rather describe a condition of heart wrought under the influence of the Spirit of God through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ (Jno. 6:63, Acts 15:9), which prepares man for baptism and leads on to the pardoning power of God. Hence conversion, which is wrought out in the human heart and life under the influences of teaching, faith, repentance, confession and baptism brings us to the pardoning power of God and the blessings and enjoyments of the new, the Christian life, into which we have been "born of water and the Spirit."

S. J. Vance, Evangelist.

"'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up
Whose golden rounds are our calamities,
Whereon our firm feet planting, nearer God
The spirit climbs and hath its eyes unsealed."
—Lowell.

As persecution and sorrow grew darker and denser, the stars of heaven shone brighter, and through these windows he looked into whence he came, and whither he would soon return. For us also in sorrow the immortal lights are gleaming when we look upward.

Lincoln's sighs did more for the Republic than the Emancipation; McKinley's anguish contributed more for the brotherhood of the nations than his speeches or legislation bearing his name. In sorrow more than in triumphs is our own immortality wrought.

Christ bore his sorrows with resignation. Apparently he did not always understand why he suffered, but "Nevertheless not mine but thy will be done!" When wholly committed to God we beat not bleeding wings against the bars. When he would give us wider range his hand will open the doors.

Jesus suffered vicariously. "He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." The consciousness of this character of his sufferings was in part his deliverance. The strength of all for whom he suffered helped sustain him; the necessary antipodal glory of such suffering multiplied by all the lives to whom blessing would come animated him. If suffering alone is more than you can bear, take on another's sorrow, too, and your burden is divided.

John 11:35 ("Jesus wept") is the shortest verse in the Bible, yet it spans the universe. It threads its way from the throne of God through stars and clouds till it reaches the sad heart, whether throbbing in palace or mine, and becomes to it a bright and living avenue to the great Comforter where one's tears are stanched and the heart that is broken is made whole again. No other Scripture makes the Son of God and the Son of Mary more realistically one. The former may be to us incomprehensible, the latter as too much one with us to deliver us, but as they blend in this verse we see the heavenly One omnipotent in power, divine in love and redeeming us for time and eternity.

"For it became him for whom are all things, and through whom are all things in bringing many sons unto glory to make the author of their salvation perfect through suffering." Jesus might have come to earth in the role of Caesar, Socrates, Croesus, or Lazarus. In either case he would have been in sympathetic touch with but a fraction of the race. But when he came as a sufferer he had immediate comradeship with all men. He suffered not for self-purification, but to draw us to himself in loving trust. Neither should we pass by on the other side of crosses if by suspending to them we can turn the thoughts of fellow-sufferers heavenward and to even one say, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

SKIN PURIFICATION.

Effected by Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills when All Else Fails.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of scalp, as in scald head; the facial disfigurement, as in acne and ringworm; the awful suffering of infants, and anxiety of worn-out parents, as in milk-crust, tetter, eczema or salt rheum—all demand a remedy of almost superhuman virtues to successfully cope with them. That Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills are such stands proven by the testimony of the civilized world.

The Home Department

The Deserted Homestead.

Up on the hill, 'mid the blossoming trees,
  Stands the homestead, bare and tall;
The sunlight gleams on the broken panes,
  And shines through the silent hall;
The garden where the children played
  Is but a tangled maze,
And the cherry blossoms falling fast
  Bring thoughts of other days.

The woodbine climbs to the little porch,
  And taps on the dingy door;
It enters the room through the shattered pane
  And trails o'er the dusty floor;
It lovingly twines o'er the broken chair
  Where a mother used to rock,
And droops its leaves o'er the hanging door,
  And clings to the iron lock.

The roses that bloom in the summer house
  Nod their drooping heads and say:
"How long it is since the mother sang,
  And we watched the children play!
How long since the lovers wandered here
  And sat in the gloaming sweet!
How long since the garden echoed gay
  With the sound of little feet!"

But there's silence through the garden
  And through the orchard sweet;
No sound of happy singing,
  And no rush of little feet.
And the roses clustering gently
  O'er the window and the door
Listen vainly for the children,
  That are coming never more.

Up on the hill, 'mid the blossoming trees,
  Stands the homestead, bare and tall;
The sunlight gleams on the broken panes,
  And shines through the silent hall;
The garden where the children played
  Is but a tangled maze,
And the cherry blossoms falling fast
  Brings thoughts of other days.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART IV.

CHAPTER III.

Raymund was prepared to find Ernest and Franz Geisthauser extremely dull, but they were far duller than he had anticipated. He had the consciousness of feeling that he earned every penny of his salary in trying to start them along their educational career, but he felt that he got a good deal more out of it than the boys did. By endless repetition, the elder could be taught sundry rules of arithmetic and grammar, but he possessed a memory with a marvelous faculty of letting go. "Seems like I can't keep nothing on hands when I get it," he said good naturedly. "I knew that rule yestiddy, but as far as that rule is concerned now, Mr. Revore, my brains is just like a last year's birdnest, they ain't no aigs in it."

In October Jack Bellfield came to Kansas City to attend the University Medical. As it was as important for him as for Raymund, to live economically, he shared the little back room on Mrs. Bannerton's third floor, sharing the expense. "Until I get through," he said, "father will have to foot all the bills, and he's always drained to the last drop by the rest of us." They made a systematic study of the cheap restaurants of the city. Sometimes they found one which "reminded them of home cooking," but it would not be long before the food began to have a curious sameness. Then they ate in their own room, binging tongue, dried beef, bologna, weenerwurst, smoked halibut, sardines, by way of meat. Of course they did not revel in all these luxuries on the same day. For breakfast they enjoyed two heaping teaspoonfuls of cocoa cooked over the gas jet in a pint of something palely white which was sold to them under the general name, "cream." While living on the farm, Raymund had supposed "cream" a specific name, always meaning the same thing; but now he found it meant almost anything rather than the farm product. With the cocoa went a banana apiece, crackers that bent between your fingers and would not snap, and whatever scraps might have been left over from the day before; generally stringy, tenuous strips of dried beef. The round dark stain on the carpet by the washstand was where the cocoa had boiled over, the time Jack tried to read the daily paper while the gas jet was doing good work. Jack studied his medical notes and his anatomy, but he did not study them very hard. "I don't intend to put in all my time at this thing," he said. "I'm going to be a doctor, but not a doctor every minute of the day." As his memory was good, and as he had a knack of getting what had to be gotten, and of skimming what was not absolutely essential, and as he was always high-spirited, genial and kind, he was a general favorite. He was described as one who "could do anything if he would only try." It had been much harder for Raymund to acquire his education, but that was not without its compensation. Jack, in a general way, knew something on a multitude of subjects, but it is doubtful if he could have taught any one of them.

Jack went much in society. He seemed endowed with the genius of making friends among all classes. At night while Raymund sat drooping from intense application to the Geisthauser boys, while Jack should have been studying his lessons, the latter would detail his experiences of the day. This was a source of great enjoyment to Raymund, and to Jack as well. There would be a few words about the classes, and a good many about the football team, and a long account of some social function of the night before. These conversations usually took place on their "front porch." The "front porch" was the iron fire-escape at their back window. Its floor was formed of narrow square bars of iron, set about an inch and a half apart, running parallel to each other. There was thus formed an airy balcony almost on a level with the sill. To be sure there was but one iron rod about four feet from the floor, to serve as a railing, and a perpendicular iron ladder leading down to the second story that suggested possibilities of escape, but gave no pretense of security. Btu when one had again and again cautiously crawled out of the window upon the bars between which a fine glimpse of the basement yard was afforded, one at last ceased to cling convulsively to the window-ledge, or even to imagine that the frail-looking structure might presently fall from its dizzy height. To the bottom of the two front legs of an old stool, and to the bottom of its two hind legs, lathes were tacked, and when this stool was set upon the "front porch," the lathes prevented it from plunging down between the iron bars, to the rounds. Either Jack or Raymund would seat himself upon this stool while the other, having spread newspapers upon the grilled floor, would put a cushion upon the papers and take his ease with his legs dangling between earth and sky. They were thus sitting one warm autumn evening, when Jack informed Raymund that he had met Nelsie Loraine. "And, oh, my!" said Jack, "she is so pretty! I told her about your being here, and she wants me to bring you around some time. They're in a fine house on Troost avenue, not far from the Geisthauser's." A few days later Jack reported having called upon Nelsie Loraine, and a week or so after that, he began abruptly one night with, "Say, Ray! what kind of a girl do you consider Nelsie Loraine?"

"She was very kind to me," said Raymund. It was November, now, and they were both muffled up in their overcoats, but loyal to their "front porch."

"In what way?" asked Jack, quickly. "Do you think she could ever care for a fellow who wasn't rich? That's what I mean. For instance—me."

"She never seemed at all proud of her wealth," said Raymund, slowly, "but I doubt if her father and mother—"

"Oh, never mind them," said Jack, impatiently. "It's just a question of Nelsie Loraine."

"Then you'd better ask her," Raymund laughed.

"Perhaps I shall," returned Jack seriously. "I was in love with her when I was a boy, and it's all coming back again, I'm afraid." It was not long after that when Jack took Raymund to the Omer's; Raymund suspected the visit was mainly to give Jack an excuse to see Nelsie Loraine. He found her more beautiful than when she missed her French and Latin lessons to Mrs. De Fer. She received him kindly, even graciously. She told him she did not think him much changed. She said, "And so you are a tutor! All that learning of yours is doing good after all! But wasn't it tiresome! It must be awfully monotonous, teaching young boys. How you would have enjoyed my course in Europe! It always seemed keeping me from having a good time, but you would have liked it, I know."

"It was Mrs. De Fer who got me my position," Raymund told her. "She and I laughed over our old times—my birthday party, for instance."

"What was that?" asked Nelsie Loraine, kindly. "Oh, yes, I remember—that funny evening in the Hands' house. We were such ridiculous children! I really believe we thought all that was fun, you know!"

"I believe we did," said Raymund, with a sudden sense of disappointment in the beautiful young lady.

"Now, do you know," said Nelsie Loraine, languidly raising her jeweled hand to her deliciously tinted cheek, "sometimes I think people like those Hands—what were their names—Jim something?"

"Tom and Fred," Raymund reminded her.

"Yes," said Nelsie Loraine, with a tolerant smile, "Tom and Fred—do you know, I think that kind of people really get along, you know, and enjoy their sort of life, in a way? They went to so much trouble that night, and were so embarrassed. Yes, I remember all about it now. I hadn't thought of it for years."

"And I went to your party the very next night," said Raymund. It was strange, looking now at the superbly dressed lady, to remember that of her own generous will, she had suggested the playing of "King William Was."

"Did you?" said Nelsie Loraine. "Do you know, all that time is so vague—so remote—I have been among such different scenes. I like Paris better than Berlin. Were you ever in Berlin, Mr. Jack?"

"No," said Jack, "but I've been in Paris, and I thought it great. I didn't hardly think it worth the money, but it was as good of its kind as anything on the Pike."

"Oh, yes, the World's Fair," said Nelsie Loraine. "Wasn't it tiresome! People tell me it was nothing like so good as the one at Chicago!"

Mrs. Omer presently came into the parlor. She was as stately and formal as ever, but kinder to Raymund than she had been in his lonesome boyhood. "It is so gratifying," she remarked, "to find you doing well, Raymund. So many orphans come to nothing. It is a terrible thing to be thrown out upon the world. I am glad you are able to teach and earn a good living. We are proud of you, Raymund. And your sister, too; Mr. Jack tells us she has a school at—at—ah—"

"Frog Bend," said Jack promptly. "Mighty fine place, Mrs. Omer."

"Ah, no doubt," said Mrs. Omer. "I, myself, have never been there. It is a source of great satisfaction to me to reflect that I was the means of getting Rhoda into the orphan home. Humble as was my assistance, it was no doubt of value. And we are glad we could give you asylum on our farm in your helplessness. You have realized our expectations, Raymund, and paid us for all our trouble. As for me, I may frankly say that you have done far, far better than I, myself, could have expected."

"But I always knew he would make his way," cried Nelsie Loraine, a slight flush beautifying her cheeks. And as her eye brightened, and fashionable languidity vanished, she seemed a good deal like the old friend of his lonesome boyhood. "You were always so industrious, Raymund, so dreadfully thorough! But you have your reward. And I am proud of you, and proud to know that we used to be such good friends." And she held out her hand with unwonted impulsiveness.

"For an orphan in destitute circumstances," said Mrs. Omer magnificently, "I, myself, consider the outcome a perfect marvel."

When they left the house Jack said, "What do you think of her, Raymund?"

"Jack," said Raymund, almost with a groan, "if she had been rescued from her mother when a child, she might have made a splendid woman!"

"Perhaps," said Jack slyly, "it is not yet too late to rescue her. At least here is your knight errant ready for a tilt with old I, MYSELF."

"Jack, I'm going to Crawley, Christmas," said Raymund abruptly. "My mind is made up." And his mind was also made up to keep his own opinion of Nelsie Loraine, because he wanted to keep Jack as his friend. Christmas week the Geisthausers rested from their labors, and Raymund went to Crawley. The tears smarted his eyes as he once more walked the familiar streets. Before he visited his mother's old home or looked up any friends, he went directly to the bank, and called for the tin box. On the lid was tacked this card: "To be given to Raymund or Rhoda Revore, when called for." There was a good deal of curiosity in the glances cast at him by the bank officials, but there was no renewing of acquaintanceship, as he had barely known the cashier and teller by sight. Having proved his identity, the box was placed in his hands. As he had no key, he broke it open. It contained nothing but a letter. He retired to a corner of the room to read it, having recognized the address of the envelope as his mother's handwriting.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

In explaining about the Advance Society, two weeks ago, I forgot to say that we have no dues; that if we feel like contributing for our orphan and missionary we do so, but that it is not required. All that is asked is that you make the resolution to do the required reading and to memorize one good quotation each week; you don't even promise to do so; you make no pledge that you are presently going to break. Everybody is a free man or a free woman as the case may be, except of course Felix, who is my cat. I promised some time ago to present the readers of this page with a picture of your friend Felix. The delay is neither my fault nor his, though I must confess he tried his best to get away while the photographer was leisurely engaging him with his camera. The photographer is one of those persons—usually unknown to fame—who is in the chronic state of not being in a hurry. He has the "plate," however, and in due time I hope it may dish you up my cat for the feasting of your eyes. I'm afraid his old-gold tinge won't show in the cut, but I am sure his unwillingness to "sit" will be apparent. Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo.: "I am glad to tell you that I received my Av. S. gold pin this evening. I am well pleased with it. In this work of the Av. S. God bless you, your mother and father"—which, you understand, means everybody who is helping Charlie and Drusie. Here is our old friend, Grace Everest, Oklahoma City: "I am cold and lonesome, too—lonesome because mamma is visiting in Los Angeles. She has been there three weeks." (I sympathize with your lonesome feeling; but why not make up the fire?) "Mamma will return on the 13th, and WON'T we be glad to see her!" (Yes, we WILL!) "You said we must always read 5 pp. history each week. Did you mean paragraphs? I have always read five pages." (Pages it is.) "I am the one that can't find a history to interest me except Bill Nye's, and I've read that twice." (As soon as we learn to read history, not as if it were a story, but because we really want to know how people acted, thought and lived in the past, all histories become endurable and many interesting. The more you read Bill Nye's "history" the more you may fancy Bill, but the less you may care for history.) "What is Drusie's address? I want to write to her." (Drusie R. Malott, South Chihli Mission, Tai Ming-fu, North China.) "The young women and girls of the church have organized a missionary society; we think it a splendid plan to keep in touch with the missionaries by personal correspondence." (Yes, it is.) "Our president, a young woman, prepared herself to be a missionary in Mexico, but her health prevents." (That reminds me that we have a friend of the Av. S. 'way out in El Oro, Mexico. If any of you meet him speak him a kind word, for he gets rather lonesome at times, like Grace Everest; cold, too, like enough; I don't know. His name is George L. Gordon, and he has helped our orphan more than once.) Ferol Lester, Norwood, Mo.: "Ernest Hall and I

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

send our dimes to orphan Charlie's ice cream social, hoping we are not too late to get cream. I think 'Bronze Vase' is fine, but Rhoda and Raymund do have such a hard time!" Mrs. Mollie B. Adams, Weldon, Ia.: "I have been an interested reader of your department ever since its conception, both letters and stories." (I hope none will be discouraged at "inception." Just look as if you knew what it meant and go on, for this letter is very cheering.) "I have long wished to express my appreciation of the grand work with the children. Training them to read to some advantage, and to be interested in missionary work is grand and noble. I am an invalid, and did not get to come to Charlie's social quite on time, but here is a quarter inclosed. When Charlie has his education and is earning his own money I hope he will remember others like himself and always be willing to give a portion of his earnings to help them along. May The Christian-Evangelist long be spared to carry on the good works it is forwarding in his name." Mrs. S. M. Gibbins, Garfield, Wash.: "As you have had some benches brought in from the old church to seat the tardy arrivals at Charlie's ice cream social, I have induced eight others to take a dish each, assuring them it will do Charlie just as much good as if they sat in the front row. My prayer is that Charlie may eventually be fitted to care for himself and to help others. I also send 50 cents for Drusie." (I like that note Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Gibbins strike about Charlie some day helping people; for anybody who thinks only of his own advantage is worse than nobody.) Mrs. Carrie Polk Johnston, Perrin, Mo. (who not long ago collected $3 for the social): "The above named send $1 for Charlie. Mrs. Creamer says her dime is for either Charlie or Drusie, as you think best." (I will take her dime under due consideration and advise you of the result later.) "Oliver has built a hay-frame today and dug dirt." (Oliver is Mrs. Johnston's youngest boy, who contributes a dime of the dollar, bless his heart!) "He is now the team to a little red cart with a lye-box for a bed. A little while ago I asked him to bring me some kindling. He said he would as soon as he had turned out. Mother has been telling me about her recent trip up the Columbia River, and about seeing the flag on the battlefield where General Richard Canby fell. Brother Frank was the first on board to spy it." (You who are familiar with our history may remember that General Canby was assassinated by the Modoc Indians while under a flag of truce. He had been sent by President Grant to negotiate a treaty with them. My aunt married General Canby's brother.) Hazel Power, Jefferson, Ore.: "My brother Bryant and I each send $1, half for Charlie, half for Drusie." (Charlie's social has taken in to date $159.80. I don't want to brag. I am not going to. But, honestly now, just honestly, did you ever hear of as successful a social as this one in all your life? Ashley S. Johnson has rebuilt the School of the Evangelists, at which ministerial students may work their way through college without any means but strength and purpose; but there is a debt on the new building, and it will not be opened till the debt is paid. So the Av. S. has just sent another dollar. President Johnson writes: "We have received you contribution, and we are indeed grateful for your assistance." Matilda B. Nickerson, Ethel, Mo.: "I send $1 for Drusie. I am a widow, and my income is small, but I feel it a duty and a blessed privilege to give of my mite to help send the Gospel to a sinful world. May the Lord bless Drusie in her work; and I do hope and pray she may never lack funds to carry forward her mission." S. A. Seat, Mematite, Mo.: "I suggest a box supper for the benefit of our missionary, Miss Malott, as she is thousands of miles from home and in a strange land, showing her faith by her works. So I suggest Thanksgiving Eve as the time, and send 50 cents for two boxes, and now ask you" (viz., J. B. E.) "to help me enjoy the contents at that time. But this goes to the missionary, box supper or not." (I shall use S. A. Seat's suggestion as the foundation-stone of a new enterprise which I have on foot; but I have thought best not to have the event so soon as Thanksgiving Day. It is too close to Charlie's social; I don't want people who have already surfeited upon ice cream falling to at a lusty dinner of turkey and cranberries. Those who have sent me a dime for the social will have to get out and earn something before they can come again.

But I have a plan, a brand new one.

Let's have a Christmas Tree for our missionary!

A Christmas Tree for Drusie, right here in Bentonville. I'll furnish the tree if you will hang the presents upon it.

Now, Christmas is a good time off. We have nearly eight weeks to get ready for it. You say, How is this thing done? I'll tell you.

Just think of a present you would like to bring Drusie if you were coming to her tree sure enough, and if you knew she would be called in to take down the gift with her own hands. Suppose you wanted to give her a tin whistle—not that I suppose she would want a whistle—or a doll, so she could give it to one of the little children in her mission; or a book, or a game, or a box of candy, or something to wear. Well, what ever it is, you will know what it would cost if you really sent her that thing. Then you will send me how much the whistle, or doll, or book, or game, or candy, or garment comes to, telling me what you are sending. For instance, you will write: "I inclose for Drusie's Christmas tree three boxes of matches; they cost 5 cents." And you will inclose a nickel in your letter instead of the matches, for they might go off on the way and set the post-office department on fire.

But do you say, "I have no nickel"? But look here: It is nearly eight weeks off. Why not lay by your pennies till you have accumulated that nickel? Then along about December 25 here you send your nickel; or your dime, as the case may be. Twenty-five cents buys a beautiful cake of toilet soap. With 50 cents you can get lots of pretty things; and with a dollar you can make a dreadful gap in a 10-cent store. With two dollars—. But there's no use talking about that!

Now, don't you think it will make interesting reading to know what the other people are sending to hang on the Christmas tree? And don't you think Drusie will bless the day as one of the sweetest of all her Christmases? And don't you know how good you will feel to be helping that much in converting the heathen in China, and in spreading the news about Jesus to thousands who have never heard his name? Why, as Brother Pinkerton says, "SURE!" (Brother Pinkerton is my preacher at my home town, Plattsburg, Mo. You ought to know him.) As I was going to say, it will be more fun than having a Christmas tree of our own. I'd lots rather hang that imaginary 10-cent whistle on the tree for Drusie than get that imaginary whistle myself. Wouldn't you?

Now, Drusie doesn't know a thing about this plan. I don't even know if she would approve it—but she's rather too far off to help herself. Drusie has the idea—and it's a very good idea—that God is going to support her in her field, and that somehow the means will come, and she doesn't have to worry about it—just have faith. And I believe that, too. And I believe this Christmas tree is going to help do the business. I promised you two weeks ago that this would be a Drusie page this week. I thought I would print a lot of her letters, so I said our columns would "be packed and crammed with good things," and here I am handing out about all the things you are getting. I didn't know at that time that I should think of this tree plan. Anyway, I think I am turning out fairly interesting material, don't you? (I hope the St. Louis typographers won't run out of capital I's before I get done this piece!) Now, on the very topmost branch of our tree we will hang S. A. Seat's 50-cent present, for maybe I wouldn't have thought of the tree if he hadn't suggested the box supper. What do you say—will you change those two boxes of supper to boxes of candy, and let me hang 'em up on the tree?

And so maybe somebody who wants to give Drusie a good present will make something and sell it to get the means. Why not? And in making plans to give your kinfolks and friends gifts, maybe you will remember Drusie's tree and save out a little for that purpose. Why not?

—Through our book department you can get the best bread the mind of man feeds upon.

—A teachers' quarterly for each Bible school grade is among the charms of our next year's Sunday-school supplies.

—The increased cost of labor and publishers' materials forbids our selling The Christian-Evangelist for less than $1.50. Please do not ask it. Greatly inferior denominational papers sell readily at $2.

—If you send to the publishers of "Review of Reviews," you will pay $3 for it. We have arranged to sell that great "Review" and The Christian-Evangelist for $3. This we do, too, without discounting the latter.

—Our preachers have a golden opportunity to secure either "Helps to Faith," by J. H. Garrison, or "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell. Send us a new subscription and the $1.50 and by return mail we send you your choice of books.

—No other song book in use by our people approaches "Gloria in Excelsis" in learning, dignity, and universal value and charm. We also have a great variety of less expensive books for Sunday-school, Endeavor, and protracted meeting use.

—We are constantly pouring new wine into the Dowling Bible school publications, and not into old skins either. The books and papers are being constantly adapted to the ever-changing conditions of our schools and always anticipate the advancements being made through the consecrated efforts of thousands of faithful teachers and superintendents.

—A good brother writes that he and a neighboring preacher agreed not to give a day's time to introducing one of our representatives to their people. We love these brethren well enough to tell them they stood hurtfully between the best interests of themselves and people and a great opportunity. W. J. Russell helped him place 53 papers at Frankfort, Ind.; E. L. Day, 64, at Brazil, Ind.; L. C. Howe, 106, at New castle, Ind.; T. J. Clark, 107, at Bloomington, Ind. Ask these able ministers if they ever rendered greater aid to their churches in the same length of time. Ministers, write us and we will try to get you some special assistance in placing a Christian paper in every Christian home.

—To help secure that "100,000 by 1909" we have secured some special temporary assistance. Minister James Mailley, of Greensburg, Ind., thus writes:

> "Your representative was with me yesterday. I confess I dreaded the day, but to say I was agreeably disappointed is putting it mildly. I enjoyed every minute. He is a genius in his line. His presentation of The Christian-Evangelist was courteous without being 'oily.' I felt at ease everywhere for I could see he was making a good impression not for himself only, but for the cause of Christ. His coming and our day's campaign for The Christian-Evangelist was a positive blessing to this people. It is a matter of great personal satisfaction to me that he succeeded in getting a list of twenty-one subscribers for the paper; this will be a tremendous reinforcement to the ministry of the pulpit."

Pastors, receive as a brother and helper beloved any man bearing our credentials. He will do you only good and no evil.

—Our growth in circulation is not simply among the publishers' notes, but in the galleys. The old compositor in charge has been familiar with the lists for 24 years. His face shines with delight as the hundreds of new names are given him for the frequent revisions. He bends to his larger tasks delighted with his metallic proofs that the paper he has so faithfully served is coming into its rightful inheritance of universal popularity and support. Here are the new clubs he added last week:

What Friends Are Saying.

I must tell you the Easy Chair has been of great profit, comfort and pleasure to me, and the sweet spirit of The Christian-Evangelist, its message of brotherly love, if carefully read, will make all life holier and sweeter, and bear rich fruit for our Master.—Mrs. Jessie W. Pierce, Belton, Texas.

The Christian-Evangelist has been part of my weekly fare for 14 years. The Easy Chair alone is worth the price of the paper, and especially is this true since I have learned to know the man in the "chair" on the Pacific Coast trip last summer. I should like to put The Christian-Evangelist in every home in our Church.—G. B. Townsend, Troy, N. Y.

I have been a regular subscriber and reader the greater part of the past 36 years. I began with "The Evangelist," published in Oskaloosa, Iowa.

We can't keep house now without the weekly visits of Christian-Evangelist. It is at once conservative and conciliatory.—J. C. McReynolds. Asheville, N. C.

I write you a word of encouragement on the course The Christian-Evangelist has taken on the question of federation and other things. I hear it often remarked by the brethren that "The Christian-Evangelist gets better and better every issue." If you are a "mystic," as some have said, my prayer is that God may give us more of them.—J. A. Deatheridge (minister), Harrison, Ark.

We congratulate you on the fine issue of The Christian-Evangelist for the Buffalo convention. It is all that could be expected and in keeping with the dignity and carefulness of The Christian-Evangelist in every detail. I have already ordered a number of the papers for distribution. We shall fulfill all your expectations and promises for the National Convention.—R. H. Miller, chairman of the executive committee.

You can count on me to help you put The Christian-Evangelist in every home at this place if it is at all possible. There is some prejudice here against The Christian-Evangelist by those who do not know Bro. J. H. Garrison. They have never seen nor heard him nor read the valuable paper which he so ably edits. I believe The Christian-Evangelist, that I have read for many years, is the best paper extant, most ably edited and under the guidance of one whom I have learned to love.—Ferd F. Schultz (minister), Beallsville, Ohio.

CHRISTIAN UNION:
A Historical Study

By J. H. GARRISON.

This latest book of J. H. Garrison deals with the living question of Christian Union from the historical point of view. The author presents Christian Union as it existed in—

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.
II. THE POST-APOSTOLIC AGE.
III. THE GRAECO-ROMAN AGE.
IV. THE PROTESTANT ERA.
V. THE PERIOD OF REUNION, beginning with the Nineteenth Century.

These are the five chapters of the book with numerous subtitles under which the subject is discussed. The closing chapter deals with present day movements toward Christian union, in which the plea of the Disciples of Christ is strongly stated. One of the most interesting features of the book is its treatment of recent interdenominational movements, including that of federation, in their relation to Christian union.

This is one of the timeliest books that has ever been issued from our press, and we predict for it an extraordinary demand as an up-to-date statement of this vital question, both in the light of history and of current movements in the religious world. It contains 207 pages, is bound in the best silk cloth, and sells for $1.00, postpaid.

I WANT TO TELL YOU ABOUT THE

MADISON ABSORPTION METHOD

Which Cures Diseases of the Eye at the Patient's Own Home

Many readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are now in a position to testify personally to the wonderful success of the Madison Absorption Method. Scores of subscribers have found permanent relief from eye troubles for themselves and their friends. Doubtless, however, there are hundreds of others among the readers who have not taken advantage of my offer to send them, ABSOLUTELY FREE OF COST, my eighty-page book, "DISEASES OF THE EYE, THEIR CURE WITHOUT SURGERY." To such I want to repeat my desire to mail you a copy. A new edition of this handsome and valuable eighty-page book has just been received from the printers. An unlooked-for demand depleted the former edition in a few weeks. A postal card will suffice to bring you one. More real information is contained between the covers than any other book of its nature ever printed. It tells you plainly and in detail of the various afflictions of the eyes. It recites at length the cause, the symptoms, and the effects of nearly fifty diseases, and in addition gives several pages of information relative to my knifeless and absolutely painless treatment for

CROSS-EYES

If you are interested in a treatment which cures without the use of the knife, if you are interested in a treatment that is successful without any risk, and with absolutely no pain, if you are interested in a method which is successful without confining the patient to a dark room for a single moment or without burdening him with any bandages whatever, in fact, if you would like to learn how modern methods are taking the place of old-fashioned and dangerous operations and treatments, WRITE TO ME. I will send the book FREE, postage fully prepaid.

THE CAMPAIGN IS NOW ON FOR THAT
Centennial Fund of $250,000 for Land and Buildings on Mission Fields in Personal Gifts by 1909.

Interest is being aroused. Some are acting. Others are carefully considering. The friends of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society can be counted upon to do what is right. Now is the time to act!

IMPORTANCE OF SECURING LAND

Now on the foreign mission fields can hardly be overestimated. Land is rapidly advancing in value in all these countries, as it is wherever the Gospel is preached. Land the Foreign Society bought in Asia ten years ago is now worth many times what was paid for it. If we do not secure land and lots we need now, we will be compelled to pay much more in the near future.

The need in China and Japan and India and the Philippines and Africa—in a word, all our mission fields, is most pressing.

Our motto should be: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." The children of light should be as wise as the children of this world.

NEXT WEEK WE HAVE A WORD TO SAY ABOUT THE IMPORTANCE OF MISSION HOMES.

We ask the hearty, liberal and prompt co-operation of the readers of The Christian-Evangelist. Send cash if you are prepared to do so; if not sign the following pledge or copy on a postal card and return:

If you will move in this matter now, you will help to insure the Centennial Fund and help to move others. What is now needed is a movement!

is just the help desired. It is in seven parts, as follows:

I. The Book, a general view and analysis of the books of the Bible, with numerous helpful diagrams and review questions.

II. The Christ, has general view of Names, Offices, Symbols, Types, with analytical view of the Prophecies concerning him, and a series of lessons covering his ministry.

III. The Church is considered in all its phases: The Church in Prophecy; The Church in Type; The Church's Name, Head, Foundation, Beginning, Membership, Ministry, Mission, Unity, and Future Glory.

IV. The Land treats of Bible Geography under "The Old Testament Land" and "The New Testament Lands." Has numerous maps and diagrams.

V. The Institutions are given close and careful study in clear and simple style, classified as Patriarchal, Jewish and Christian, definitions of each.

VI. The History gives full and succinct views of the "Chosen People" of Bible Times, as also, the Nations coming into contact with them.

VII. The People includes all those brought into prominence in Bible History and the Nations about them and dealing with them.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

—Brother J. E. Davis' article is entitled to consideration amid our Centennial plannings. Building in wood and stone is essential to the best and largest building in spirit, character and Zion. If some of our church financiers will help reduce his suggestions to the practice of the churches they will have accomplished great good.

—State Mission Day gives us one of the best possible viewpoints from which to see the Centennial that ought to be. Let us make it a high day and with eyes that have seen our duty fully done toward state missions behold the banners of all our commonwealth's victory crowned, as they are being borne down the applauding aisles of our great assembly.

November for State Missions.

W. R. WARREN.

One of the blessings for which all true Disciples will be giving thanks this month is the church home. At the same time we should remember those who are just as true and just as earnest but are living in towns within our own state where it is not possible to celebrate the Lord's Supper every week, where an earnest soul seeking the way of salvation can not find a simple and Scriptural answer, where a penitent believer repeating the Ethiopian eunuch's request can not be satisfied, where no voice is lifted in condemnation of divisions and traditionalism among the people of God, and no advocate ever appears for the one union. What consistency is there in our praise of the Christianity of Christ if we are unwilling to make sacrifices to see it established and advanced in every important community of our own commonwealth?

It is a good arrangement that puts the offerings for state missions in all the churches at the beginning of November, and children's day for Home Missions near the end of the same month. This enables us to consecrate all of November to state missions, for half of the latter offering goes directly back to the state from which it comes, and the rest of it is used in American missions. Before November closes every member of every church and every child in every Bible school should have borne a creditable part in helping to give America to Christ only.

The approach of our Centennial must deepen our gratitude for the great blessings we have received under God through the pioneers of this movement. But we fail of the finest fruit and the greatest blessings of their toils if we do not continue and complete what they began in the evangelization of America. Not only so, but it is imperatively incumbent upon us to train up our children to love the same holy cause and to give of their means and strength to its advancement.

Practice celebrating the Centennial in your church and Bible school this November.

Pittsburg.

Church Building and the Centennial.

J. E. DAVIS.

From my experience in church building there has been forced upon me a new idea I believe is worth developing.

In the last four years I have gone through two church building enterprises, and have become acquainted with the price and material of almost every necessity in church building. The average profit on a church building of $25,000 is from $4,000 to $5,000. On buildings costing $1,000 the profit ranges from $250 to $350. Out of the vast number of churches erected annually the same old story of shortage of funds affects ninety-eight per cent. Such shortages often destroy the larger vision of the work, and two-thirds of the churches underbuild in facilities for real church work. These two-thirds usually struggle along and get the auditorium, but the Bible school and its facilities for recruiting the ranks of the church and filling the auditorium are entirely eliminated. Thus the building is done and the work crippled, and in all probability the defect will never be remedied, whereas if the profits of said building could have been saved and put into the additional features needed, the work in that locality would have quadrupled in power.

The others over-build, that is, build beyond their means in their struggle to provide the proper facilities for every department of church work, and either lose their property or a great debt hangs over them, a burden through decades, quenching every rising tide of missionary zeal and enthusiasm, while every society and Bible class in the church is put on a money-earning basis and is counted a success or failure according to the amount of money it can earn.

About two per cent of our churches build and either pay before the dedicator comes, or the cash to satisfy all obligations is handed over on dedication day.

Nearly all profits on these buildings could be saved and put into the building, thus affording not only the necessary facilities for church work, but avoiding the large and wearing debt that so often kills every buoyant ambition born in the zeal of a congregation.

My solution to this problem is to establish a Church Building Material Bureau in connection with our Board of Church Extension, and have it get in touch with manufacturing and producing firms, members of our church who love it, and secure concessions of cost on all materials used in building. The material is not to be bought locally by the church, but direct through the Church Extension bureau, from factories and foundaries.

This bureau could get in touch with architectural construction companies, foundries, lumber mills, nail factories, stone quarries, cement and lime factories, brick and terra cotta companies, and serve as a great wholesale firm to our brotherhood, furnishing at actual cost all material used in building.

The great and unnecessary profits of numerous middlemen the struggling church of God must pay. They should go to enhance the value of church buildings or diminish the cost.

Objections to such a project answered.

1. Will not local companies always furnish materials at cost? No. They seldom furnish them at actual retail cost. Then what some retail merchants consider cost (when selling at cost because it is a church) is the actual cost of goods to them and a per cent to support their business. Besides, what is the use of having the retail cost and profit, and the wholesale cost and profit, and back of that the factory cost of production, when the factory cost and actual cost of laying down the material is all that is necessary?

2. Would not the buying of lumber and other materials out of town antagonize and incur the displeasure of the local dealer? When any sensible or fair-minded man sees that the building material is being bought at the factory cheaper than he can buy it of the wholesale lumber companies he will not only not be offended but will urge the church to take advantage of the bargain. The good will or ill will of a man who loves the church only for what he can get out of it, does not affect very much. Besides, the man who joins or leans toward a church because he has sold that church a bill of hardware, lime or lumber, is actuated by purely commercial sentiments, and is not moved by faith or conviction. Such a man is not saved, is not a Christian, and is rather a hindrance than a help to any church.

Finally, the saving of the vast sums given out of charity's pockets for the original purpose for which the money was given (for building, instead of profits to money-making institutions), will greatly accelerate building enterprises among us and will provide a splendid saving to offer to various missionary enterprises, and will become a worthy twin sister in church building to the church loan, as well as to be a splendid accomplishment by the dawn of our Centennial.

The subscriptions I send you herewith entitle me to the picture of Brother J. H. Garrison which I have been eager to obtain ever since your first announcement. I hope some time to meet him in the flesh. I hope he will live many years and edify his readers with his masterly editorials and the Easy Chair which has carried many a soul out of the shadows of discouragement into the glorious sunlight of peace and consolation. I hope I shall soon be able to persuade more of my brethren to come with us and enjoy these gracious feasts.—A. N. Noell, Asherville, Kansas.

Current Events

Japan's Protest.

Because the Japanese children in San Francisco have been discriminated against in the public schools of that city, the Japanese government, acting through its minister in Washington, has filed a formal protest with the state department. The incident seems a very trivial one but it is being magnified, in some quarters, into a possible, not to say probable, cause of war. The Japanese, to be sure, seem to be taking it rather seriously. They claim that it is in violation of the provisions of the treaty which gives them rights equal to those of any foreign people in this country. What is of even greater consequence, they resent being classed with the Chinese as an inferior race and having their children relegated to the separate schools which are maintained for orientals. Their war with China a dozen years ago convinced the Japanese that they were far superior to the Chinese, and their success in the war with Russia is, to their minds, evidence that they are in the vanguard of modern civilization. They are not in the mood to accept without protest the classification into which the San Francisco board of education has placed them. We have no apprehension of war, or even of serious diplomatic controversy on the subject. But the president is wise in taking the protest seriously. Secretary Metcalf, of the department of commerce and labor, has been dispatched to investigate the facts and find some way of removing the ground for Japan's grievance if any exists.

Japanese Exclusion.

Meanwhile, with Japan protesting against this slight discrimination against her children in the public schools of one city, there is a growing movement in favor of passing a Japanese exclusion act. Such an act is favored by a certain labor element, but at the present time, at least, it would have but a small chance in congress and probably still less at the White House. Whatever may be the practical advantages of excluding the Chinese (and we strongly suspect that these are overestimated), there is a certain inherent absurdity in the theory of it. The principle of exclusion does not commend itself forcibly enough to the average citizen to make him anxious to extend it any further. The congestion of population is one of Japan's great problems. The war with Russia was undertaken chiefly to get in Korea a safety valve for the boiling pot of her population. Even with that, the value of America to Japan as a place for overflow is not small. Even worse than losing that, would be the sting and stigma of exclusion. Perhaps we would get war if we should undertake to keep out the Japanese. It has been hinted by some, who think they see possibilities of war in the present controversy, that Japan's splendid modern navy would be more than a match for ours and that the Philippines could be very quickly and easily wrested from our hands. Perhaps that would be as easy a way as any for us to escape from our obligation to the Philippines—to provoke a small war with Japan and let her take the islands away from us.

New York.

The eyes of the country are on New York. Before this paper reaches its readers one of the most important political contests of recent years will have been decided. It is not in any ordinary sense a party contest. Each of the gubernatorial candidates has cut a wide swath in the ranks of his opponents. The conservative element is with Hughes. The discontented are with Hearst. Whether he is elected or not, Mr. Hearst's campaign has given him a standing and dignity which he did not have before. Before, he was admired by his followers and despised by his opponents. Now he has won the respect of his enemies for some, if not all, of his qualities. He is a good campaigner and he has—unexpectedly to his critics—shown entire good faith in his repudiation of Tammany in spite of Tammany's support of him. His personality has risen above the party. The party is only an incident in the campaign. Hearst himself is the platform, the ticket and the organization. The question to which two very different answers are returned is, "Is Hearst sincere?" The question to which there is now only one answer is, "Is Hearst a large factor to be considered in state and national politics?" The party of discontent is always formidable when it is in earnest; it is very formidable when it has an able leader. Discontent is not a bad thing, and it is not necessarily a disparagement upon any political group to call it a party of adullamites. What we need to do, as one editor remarks, is to "educate discontent." And that is about the truth. To vote down the discontented proves nothing and settles nothing. To help the discontented to direct their protests intelligently toward the removal of the real evils is to secure real progress. Whatever may be the degree of Mr. Hearst's sincerity or insincerity, a great part of his following is moved by the impulse of more or less intelligent discontent.

Silver bullion is now selling at a trifle over 70 cents an ounce. Four years ago it was selling at 47 cents. This is one reason why Mr. Bryan, still believing in free coinage at the ratio of sixteen to one, does not think that the silver question is a live issue. Silver is taking care of itself without any legislative assistance.

Cortelyou.

Mr. George B. Cortelyou has been transferred from the postoffice department to the important post of secretary of the treasury. Mr. Cortelyou has been promoted with amazing rapidity from the position of stenographer and private secretary to the president under McKinley, to his present high station, but he has always made good in every place which he has held up to date. This last appointment will be the most severe test which his powers have yet had. The position at the head of the treasury department requires a high degree of acquaintance with both the theory and the practice of banking. It has usually been held by an experienced financier. Mr. Cortelyou, so far as we know, is not a specialist in financial matters. He is an honest man and may be relied upon to do what he thinks is best for the interests of the country. But naturally the chances are against his ranking among the great secretaries of the treasury.

International Divorces.

The Countess Castellane (nee Anna Gould) is prosecuting a suit for divorce from her husband, and the Duchess of Marlborough (nee Consuelo Vanderbilt) has arranged a peaceable but permanent separation from her husband. The moral is easy. But it is not, as a good many people will be saying, that American girls should not marry foreign dukes and counts. Personally, we do not think that any young man of good habits ought to be discriminated against because, through no fault of his own he happens to be a duke or a count. Nor is it that counts and dukes ought to refuse to marry millionairesses. If a girl behaves herself, she may be none the less desirable as a helpmeet in spite of having a dowry of several millions. But the moral is: that she who marries a count or a duke instead of a man, and is more interested in acquiring a title than in getting a husband of character, is steering for the reefs; and also, that he who marries several million dollars instead of a woman and thinks more of the dowry than of the qualities of the woman who brings it, is already half way down the maelstrom. There is no reason why the marriage of a rich American girl and an English peer should not be as happy as the marriage of a grocery clerk from Wichita, Kansas, and a kindergarten teacher from Sheboygan. It will be if the girl and the peer are the right sort.

Reclaiming the Zuyder Zee.

In her speech from the throne at the recent opening of the Dutch parliament, Queen Wilhelmina stated that the project of draining and reclaiming the Zuyder Zee was under serious consideration by the government. This shallow gulf, nearly nine hundred square miles in extent, forms an inconvenient barrier between northern and southern Holland. Besides, in a country so small and crowded as Holland, it seems a pity to allow so much good land to be wasted merely because it happens to be covered with about fifteen feet of salt water. Moreover, this very region was a densely populated agricultural district with hundreds of villages and thousands of small farms until, during the thirteenth century, the sea broke through a narrow protecting strip of land and flooded that low-lying district. Since then it has been ploughed only by the reels of fishing boats. There have been many projects to reclaim the land by shutting off the sea by a dyke and pumping out the water. Several years ago it was estimated that by building a dyke twenty-five miles long it would be possible to reclaim five hundred thousand acres at a cost of $150 per acre. That is a vast body of land for a country as small as Holland, and the cost does not seem to exceed the value, considering the density of population.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—XI.

His Unique Personality.

In coming now to this fundamental truth after dealing with many of the practical teachings of Christ, it may be thought that we have reversed the natural order, and that we should have dealt with this fundamental question first, and afterwards with the practical duties which Jesus taught. But this was not the method of Jesus. We are following his own order of procedure. It was not until the closing part of his ministry that he began to lay emphasis upon his own personality and to direct the thoughts of his disciples to himself in his unique relation to God and to humanity. It required no little teaching and training, under the personal influence and example of Jesus himself, to bring his disciples up to the point where they could understand his divine character and mission.

The student of the Gospels will recall his conversation with his disciples at Caesarea Philippi, the fullest account of which is given in Matthew's Gospel (16:13-21). In answer to the question, "Who do men say that the Son of Man is?" the disciples gave the different ideas which men entertained on this subject, which identified him either with John the Baptist, Elijah, Jeremiah, or one of the prophets. But making the question more direct Jesus asked, "But who say ye that I am?" Peter, no doubt speaking for the others as well as himself, said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Complimentary as the other ideas of Christ were, which identified him with the greatest characters in Jewish history, this answer of Peter transcends all of them by the distance of infinity. Peter had been so taught of God that he was able to see in Jesus not only the Christ foretold by the prophets—the anointed Prophet, Priest and King—but, also, the Son of God. It was a sublime reach of faith, nurtured under divine tuition, that enabled Peter to grasp this truth—the mightiest truth ever conceived by the mind of mortal man. Compared with it all philosophical systems and axioms pale into insignificance. On it hangs the destiny of a sinning and dying world. This truth accepted, then God's fatherhood and his redemptive purpose toward humanity are assured facts. The weary, groaning ages had been waiting for this revelation of God's love, and his gracious interposition to effect the recovery of the race from its thraldom of sin and sorrow. Now if this confession of Peter be true, the hour has struck, and the world has entered upon a new era. God has entered into humanity in the person of his Son and that for the purpose of restoring man to the divine image and thus bringing him into the inheritance of life everlasting.

Jesus puts the signet of his approval upon the truth confessed, pronounces a blessing upon Peter, and declares his purpose to build his church upon that divine, fundamental truth. It is here that the uniqueness of the method of Jesus comes out into prominence. No other religious teacher had ever proposed to build a church or found a religion upon his own personality. But the uniqueness of the method grows out of the uniqueness of the personality, for no other religious teacher in the world's annals had ever conceived himself to be the Son of the living God and convinced his immediate followers of the truth of his claim. If he be, indeed, God's only begotten Son and if this coming down of God into humanity was essential to the salvation of man, then it follows that the divine and unique sonship of Jesus is the basic truth of his religion, and the enduring foundation of the church which he established. This truth, standing out as it does in Himalayan proportions in the New Testament was obscured during the apostasy by human philosophy and speculation, creedal statements and traditions, and not until during the nineteenth century was it restored to its original supremacy as the central truth in Christianity. In many cases this restoration is even yet more theoretical than practical, as scarcely any of the creeds recognize the central and controlling place of this truth on which Jesus said he would build his church. But the cry "Back to Christ" has not been raised in vain, and steadily the great prophet of Galilee is rising toward the zenith of his power and influence in the church, and in proportion as he rises, his church is coming to greater unity and power.

The high claim which Jesus made for himself on the occasion referred to above, was always and everywhere insisted upon. To the caviling Jews who, in spite of the most convincing proofs, continued to deny his claim, he said, "Except ye believe that I am he ye shall die in your sins." (John 8:24). In his prayer, recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, he prays, "And now, Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Indeed, it was on the confession of this truth before the Jewish Sanhedrin and Pontius Pilate, that he was condemned to death. His resurrection from the dead was the vindication of all his claims, and made it possible to establish the Church on the rock-truth which had been confessed by Peter. The apostles, when they had received their enduement of power, not only testified to both Jews and Gentiles that Jesus was the Son of God, but they insisted that faith in him was the essential, saving faith.

Whatever, therefore, may be the re-adjustments of the future, of one thing we may rest assured: there can be no lowering of the high claims Jesus made for himself, for this would be to remove the very foundation upon which the Church is built. The religious reformation which we are urging has for its supreme note the exaltation of Christ to his true place as the center of the Christian system and the source of all authority in the realm of religion. On that basic truth we may plead successfully for Christian union in him, and for submission to his teaching in all that relates to the life and growth and work of the Church. From this impregnable Rock no criticism, or science, or philosophy, falsely so called, can dislodge us. It is the Rock of Ages, and whosoever builds thereon builds for eternity.

The Formal and the Spiritual.

As man is a compound being made up of body and spirit, so Christianity which is adapted to man has also its body and its spirit—the formal and the spiritual. Just as the spirit is more important than the body which it inhabits, so the spiritual element in Christianity is vastly more important than the forms through which it manifests itself. But form is not without its important place and use to people dwelling in the body. To keep the right equipoise between these two elements of Christianity has been one of the real conflicts within the church through all its history. As a rule, we think it may be said that the tendency has generally been to exalt the external form above the internal or spiritual state. This has been especially true in ritualistic churches where the priest has usurped the function of the preacher and where transformation of character is less insisted upon than conformity to ecclesiastical rites and ceremonies. In such churches with all the devotion to forms, strange to say, the original New Testament forms which have real spiritual significance have been exchanged for others that lack such significance.

But while it is true, as we have stated, that the tendency has been to exalt the form at the expense of the spirit, just as it is natural for men to give vastly more thought proportionately to their bodies than to their spirits, yet there have come periods of reaction within the church when certain parts of it, revolting against the subordination of the spiritual to the formal, have reacted to an opposite extreme, and have entirely overlooked the significance and value of those few forms which in New Testament times were estimated of no little value.

Baptism and the Lord's Supper are the only two ordinances instituted by Christ and taught and practiced by his chosen apostles. The former of these as originally practiced was an impressive symbol of Christ's burial and resurrection, and, therefore, an enacted declaration of faith in his divinity. The Lord's Supper sets forth the relation of his death to the forgiveness of our sins and the life everlasting. It will be seen that the great gospel facts are thus embodied and symbolically set forth in these divine institutions. Indeed, baptism in New Testament times was the formal act of surrender to Christ and initiation into his church. As such it was associated with the remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit. Of course this relation could only exist between an outward act and a spiritual blessing, where the former is an act of faith and of allegiance to Jesus Christ. In other words, baptism is faith seeking the divine blessing through obedience to a divine command. To separate baptism from faith is to rob it of all significance and value whatsoever.

The leading bodies of Protestants, except the state churches, in their revolt against the formalism of the Roman and Anglican churches, have generally tended to underestimate the value of these ordinances, and often to misplace them. It has been the purpose of this Reformation to avoid the extreme of sacramentarianism, which made the ordinances essential channels of saving grace, on the one hand, and the opposite extreme of regarding them as mere church ceremonies, subject to such changes in their manner of observance as might seem good to the church in any age. In other words, its aim has been and is, to restore these ordinances to the place which they hold in the New Testament. This is not to exalt the form above the spirit, but it is simply to maintain that the spirit of Christianity, if not misguided, will manifest itself in the same forms, so far as baptism and the Lord's Supper are concerned, as it did originally, seeing that these forms are designed to set forth the fundamental facts of the Gospel. The abnormal condition of things brought about by a departure from New Testament usage, for which the church of to-day is not responsible, may well cause us to be charitable toward all whose spirit is loyal to Jesus Christ; but it does not justify the approval of such departures by those seeking to restore the New Testament church in its constitutional features.

It is understood, of course, that the "form of godliness without the power," or spirit, is worthless. Infinitely more valuable in the sight of God is the spirit of obedience with a defective form than would be a perfect form of obedience without the spirit. Nevertheless, the true ideal is the spirit of obedience, submitting itself to God through divinely-ordained forms, or ordinances. For this ideal we must constantly strive, seeking, meanwhile, to be charitable to all who do not see as we do, and to be quick to recognize Christian faith and character wherever we see them. Such, it seems to us, should be the spirit and attitude of a religious movement seeking to be loyal to New Testament ideals, and to manifest, at the same time, the spirit of the Master.

Notes and Comments.

The claim which the "Argus" sets up is that the Disciples, so far as they are represented by the two papers indicated, are changing front, abandoning the ground hitherto occupied by them, and are lining up with Baptist teaching on the subject. This is the matter in regard to which we asked The Christian-Evangelist to declare itself, and state plainly and publicly whether it is correctly represented by the "Argus." We neither expressed nor felt any regret that The Christian-Evangelist is "sending forth the truth in connection with baptism." It would give us great pleasure to believe that it is engaged in such a task; but if it is giving currency to Baptist teaching on the subject, as the "Argus" claims, we are firmly convinced that it is sending forth error on the subject.—The Christian Weekly.

We have not seen the statements of the "Argus" referred to above. So far as The Christian-Evangelist is concerned, it has not "changed front" nor has it "abandoned the ground formerly occupied." It is headed exactly the same way, but hopes it is a little further along; it occupies the same ground, but hopes it is producing a little better crop from the soil. We are not alarmed if the "Baptist Argus" thinks we have "changed front," since that appearance of things may be entirely due to the clearer vision with which it now sees things.

Here is the question, Bro. Christian-Evangelist: Do you dissent from the views of the fathers and agree with those of the Baptists, and are you "coming straight," as the "Argus" claims, by forsaking the position of the fathers and heading toward the Baptist position? The "Argus" so declares. Will you please, please, Please answer?—The Christian Weekly.

We are inclined to do almost anything to accommodate our venerable and esteemed Brother Briney. We are not conscious of any material "dissent" from the generally accepted view of the fathers touching baptism, though we dare say the emphasis is somewhat different in our columns from what it was in the "Christian Baptist" and "Millennial Harbinger," since we face a very different situation in our day. As to agreeing with the Baptists, we are glad to believe that both the Baptists and ourselves are learning how to take a more irenic view of baptism than was possible in the days of conflict, and that we are approximating each other's position. Has Brother Briney detected any teaching in The Christian-Evangelist on the subject of baptism which he thinks "dissents" from the teaching of Jesus and his apostles? If so, let him point it out in his own gentle, brotherly way, and we will try to profit by it. The New Testament is the only standard we recognize.

Nothing of recent date has surprised us more than to see in some of our contemporaries, three of the greatest speeches delivered at our national convention at Buffalo, criticised as "attacks upon our plea." We have already printed President Cooper's address, and this week we print that of Brother Daugherty, of Wabash, Ind. The other was that of J. P. Lichtenberger, of New York City. We are free to confess that we did not notice a disloyal sentiment in these strong addresses, as we listened to them, and they were certainly received with great favor by the convention. Now that two of them are in print, our readers can judge for themselves. The incident serves to show that we have different standards of orthodoxy, but we do well to remember that we have a common Master to whom each must give account, and that in him we have the largest liberty of thought and utterance.

The article by Dr. Sanford on "Church Federation," which appears elsewhere, showing the progress of the work since the New York Inter-Church Conference, will be read with interest. The voice of Protestantism, united in respect to the great questions on which it uttered itself at the conference, is awakening echoes around the world. Such a consensus of opinion, touching the great moral and social problems of the times, cannot fail to be a powerful factor in bringing about needed reform. It is gratifying, too, to know that the proposed conference in 1908, on the subject of Christian union, provided for in the basis adopted in New York, is assured. It will be the first great gathering under the auspices of the Federal Council of Protestant churches in America, and is certain to be a notable assembly whose proceedings will attract the attention of all Christendom. It is certain to register further progress toward the consummation of Christ's prayer for the unity of His disciples.

At the meeting of the Maryland Baptist Association, which met in Baltimore a few days ago, Bro. B. A. Abbott, of the Harlem Avenue Christian Church of that city, preached a sermon on "The Union of Baptists and Disciples," which seems to have been well received. Among other things he said:

"Brethren, the truth is that, though we may neglect it or ignore it or deny it or appear indifferent to it, Baptists and Disciples believe in one another and love one another. We could not help this if we would; we would not help it if we could. We are similar; we believe alike in a pure, divine revelation and believe the Bible to contain that revelation. We have accepted the logical results of Protestantism and declare that the Bible is not a priests' book only, nor the book of the councils and synods alone, nor still the book of the professor or student, nor still of the preacher; but we have declared it the people's book. We alike hold to the personal sovereignty of the individual Christian, and believe religious personal liberty is limited only by the law of love and the sovereignty of God.

"Truly, we are similar. We stand together soul and mind in the great facts of the faith. Our differences in doctrine are only divergencies in interpretation. Looking for the great end to be sought, our eyes fall upon the same dazzling peaks of glory. In work we differ only in habits of thought and in method. Association and the communion of the saints will wear away these differences. I have an abiding, a profound and a precious faith that this will come to pass. Just when, just where, just how, I do not know. When we shall have been more completely illumined by the in-dwelling spirit and word, when we shall be more ripened and deepened by experience and the indwelling spirit and word, when we shall have fought the common enemy a little longer, then we shall find, indeed, that our interests for time and for eternity are too certainly merged to allow us to remain apart.

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is something pathetic in the fact that many people live their little life here on earth and pass away without having discovered anything beautiful and wonderful in the world in which they have lived. There is the daily panorama of the rising and setting sun, of floating clouds, of arching sky, of birds, of flowers, of laughing children, and the pageantry of the seasons in their stately procession, but in all this they see nothing to charm the eye or delight the soul. It is like a blind man standing in the midst of a magnificent art gallery, in which are displayed the great masterpieces of the world's best artists, and who sees them not, or a deaf man listening to the sublime oratorios and sweetest symphonies produced by the world's greatest musicians, but feeling no exaltation of soul, because his ear has not been attuned to these great melodies. There are eyes that can not see and ears that can not hear, and minds that can not appreciate, simply because they have not been educated and trained. Herein is the supreme office of education. It is not always received in schools, but in some way and through some experience, the inner eye and the inner ear must be opened if the soul is to receive the greatest messages that God wishes to convey to it. "Blessed are your eyes for they see, and your ears for they hear," said the great Prophet of Nazareth to his disciples who, under his tuition were beginning to catch a new meaning of life and its possibilities.

But sometimes there is a sudden awakening of a soul that has hitherto been dead to its surroundings, to an appreciation of what had before been unnoticed. A recent author who has been making some "Adventures in Contentment" describes his own personal experience in undergoing such a change. Perhaps some of our readers have had such an experience. This is how he describes it:

"I can not well describe it save by the analogy of an opening door somewhere within the house of my consciousness. I had been in the dark; I seemed to emerge. I had been bound down; I seemed to leap up, and with a marvelous sense of freedom and joy, I stopped there in my field and looked up. It was as if I had never looked up before. I discovered another world. It had been there before, but I had never seen nor felt it. I saw a field, familiar, yet strangely new and unfamiliar, lying up to the setting sun, all red with autumn. Above it the incalculable height of sky, blue but not quite clear, owing to the Indian summer haze. I can not convey the sweetness and softness of that landscape, the airiness of it, the mystery of it, as it came to me at that moment. As I stood there I was conscious of the tang of burning leaves and brush heaps, the lazy smoke of which floated down the valley, and I heard, as though the sounds were then made for the first time, the vague murmurs of the country side, a cowbell somewhere in the distance, the creak of a wagon, the blurred evening hum of birds, insects, frogs. And I said aloud to myself, 'I will be as broad as the earth. I will not be limited.'"

Who can tell what causes contributed to bring about a change like that? Here was a new revelation, not in the sense of a new world, but in the sense of a new vision of its beauty and meaning—a new power of appreciation, which brought with it a new joy in living.

Is there not something analogous to this in relation to the spiritual world in the change which we call conversion? What is conversion but the waking up, more or less suddenly, to the sublime realities of the spiritual world? We have gone along in our careless, unseeing fashion, unmindful of any realities in the universe except the material things with which our time and attention have been engrossed. Heavenly voices have been speaking to us, but we heard them not. All life's tender relationships and all its high obligations have been calling us to a recognition of God, but their lesson has gone unheeded. The mystery of birth and of death, the experiences of sin and of sorrow, have sought to woo us to a higher and better life, but, alas, our hearts have resisted these appeals, and we have gone along the broad frequented way, heedless of all the higher and better things which life holds for us. One day we became conscious of new influences working in our heart, and of a change in our feeling and our point of view. At last, under the stress of some illuminating experience, which has brought home to us the vanity of all earthly glory, or under the moving appeal of the Gospel message, which has laid bare our spiritual poverty, and the unsearchable riches of Christ, the soul turned to God, as the flower lifts its face to the sunlight, and, behold! we live in a new world. Life has a new meaning and the world has a new beauty. All the relationships of life take on a new charm and sacredness because they have been lifted up into the light of God's countenance. "Old things have passed away, and behold all things have become new." This is conversion.

Sometimes the process described above is very gradual, like the dawn of the morning, creeping over the eastern hilltops and brightening into the full tide of day. Sometimes the change comes with greater suddenness, as when some soul, beclouded and benumbed by sin, comes to a sudden realization of its guilt, and then of the pardoning love of God. But the genuineness of conversion does not depend upon these psychological differences. Whether it be sudden or whether it be a more gradual process, the change which we call conversion, by which the soul is turned to God and away from sin, is essential to true living, which, after all, is the life everlasting. No scene in nature, however beautiful, can compare with the moral beauty of that change which we call conversion. It is the sunrise of the soul. The darkness and the mists roll away before the shining face of the Sun of Righteousness, as he rises with healing in his beams. As the wheeling of the earth into right relation with the sun brings on spring, with its flowers and birds, so the turning of the soul to the light of God causes it to bring forth the graces of Christian living which make the whole life fragrant and beautiful. This is what Christ can do for the soul when it commits itself to him. Is there anything more pathetic than the fact that there are so many millions of our human race whose hearts are sad and barren, whose lives are marred and maimed by sin, and who only need Christ to heal, strengthen, comfort, and make them whole, and they know it not? What holier task has earth for any one than to introduce the waiting and willing Christ to needy souls, to seek and to save whom he came into the world? This is evangelism. God make us worthy of so holy a work!

What a vast gain it would be to religion and to humanity, if we could get rid of the notion that religion is something artificial and arbitrary, something unnatural and ghostly, something involved in intricate theological and ecclesiastical problems, and to conceive of it as simply the soul turning to God, its Author, the earthly child turning to its heavenly Father, for love and guidance! It is sin that is unnatural and abnormal, an interloper and intruder in God's world. Love and obedience to God are the normal and rightful conditions of the soul in which alone it can realize its destiny. In these days of evangelistic activity, when so many churches and evangelists are seeking to win men to God, let us strive to make it as plain and simple as it really is in the New Testament. Surely men can be made to see that sin has in it the seeds of sorrow and ruin, and that the soul that would be healthy and happy and whole, must get rid of sin and must come to him who can forgive sin, and who can impart to the soul the new life, which is infinitely superior to the old life of sin which ends in death. O, men of God, plead with sinners to turn away from what is destructive of both soul and body, and accept the life which is eternal! Plead with the prodigal sons and daughters to come home to the Father's house, where a warm welcome awaits them! Make it plain to them that they are not asked to solve theological or critical problems, but only to come to Christ, if they are weary and heavy laden, and he will give them rest unto their souls. It is a glorious evangel which God has committed to us, and may his gracious Spirit help us to present it in all its divine loveliness and winsomeness to a sinning and dying world!

God's Purpose and Plan in Home Missions[*]

By E. F. Daugherty

From the beginning, and with whatever home-land he has specially dealt God's purpose has been none other than the purpose of loving, righteous sovereignty. His plan was, in the days of Israel as his chosen, and is, in these days of Americans as his favored, entrusted to human hands and hearts for its consummation.

The thread of that purpose may be traced backward through the noble army of Carey's imitators, past the Great Commission, and yet back through the Abrahamic covenant, to find its source in the word of hope which relieved the gloom of Eden's transgression; for the genesis of missions is in the birth of the Messianic hope. The merest commonplace in religious discussion affirms that the chosen people were guarded, shielded and preserved through all their tribal and national storms, that they might bequeath to civilization its spiritual heritage.

God's purpose had in view for them the preservation of the land of their fathers as the theater for the reclamation of humanity's lost heritage. Its frustration through human perversity is the one tragedy of fadeless interest in the world's past. Amidst the darkness of its apparent defeat, the star of Bethlehem swung out, presaging the rise of the sun of Righteousness—and universality, instead of nationality, became the compass of the plan divine.

No less of the chosen people than of their noblest representative, from whose birth history makes all its dates—"To this end were they born and for this purpose came they into the world, that they might bear witness unto the truth." With equal force will those words apply to whatever movement of reform a rational philosophy of history makes essential to the world's progress. So, supremely, triumphantly, and ceaselessly must it be asserted of the movement which this convention represents, "To this end were we born, and for this cause came we into the world, that we might bear witness unto the truth."

Up from the lowlands of obscurity, on toward the highlands of religious accomplishment we have come and are pressing. The dawn of the century finds us well in the morning of success toward the realization of our destiny as a conquering, unifying force in the world's religious life. Down the ages, the supreme problem with which God's people have dealt was and is—first, the willingness to accept God's sovereignty. Second, the enlistment of their disposition and power in the carrying out of his will. And with that problem we are face to face.

From one who stood in the forefront of faith's thinkers the last century through—from Gladstone— are these words: "I incline to think that the future of America is of more importance to Christendom than that of any other country." There breathes not a man in all this land with soul so dead as to disagree. The struggles of the continent aside, men of keen vision, long vision, and sane, have declared the transference of world issues from the eastern to the western hemisphere, and asserted their focus in the destiny of the American nation. Out of an appeal to God for justice and liberty was the nation born; by loyalty to the spirit of its forefathers has its destiny unfolded, and it is not presumption but wisdom which declares "as goes America so goes the world." Grapple the facts, then, we must in relation to the purpose and plan of God and center them in the religious conditions of our national life.

These are the facts relating to the purpose and plan of God. A new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. A new people whose distinction is righteousness, whose bond is peace, whose work is redemption, whose strength is unity, and whose heritage is glory. The simplicity that is in the old old story, the plan wherewith this purpose is to have its inevitable consummation.

These are the facts relating to the land we call home, and for whose conquest the society works and prays and plans and hopes. Within the land's borders—human nature of every conceivable type and condition. For the land's uplift, from every conceivable school of thought—Utopian plans afloat, and room for any and every new heresy that may arise, with the liberty to spread its bane or blessing. Contrasts here socially, morally, religiously, politically, financially, with all the variety ranging betwixt them which obtains between heaven and hell. Commercialism, the land's great fact—unconsecrated, entrenched, self-sufficient, subtle, omnipresent, and the nation in toto weighing to-day this dictum of God because the voice of the people has spoken it: "Graft must go!" Socialism—past the proportions of the cloud no larger than a man's hand on the horizon of affairs—with rising roar voicing the acclaim of a new earth in its proposed destruction of existing conditions. The strenuous life in every field of action our national and well known characteristic.

And in the nation's midst is set the "rock of ages." Against this rock in every age experimental schools of thought have spent the strength, and wherever that stone has been rejected of the builders, its solid strength has worked the ruin of presumptious forces. 'Twas planted the earth upon for the healing of the nations. 'Twill stand when all perversions of it and assaults upon it have recoiled and fallen in the mire of their own impotence. About its base there tramps the youngest and most puissant giant in all the interminable hosts of deathless reform—this mighty body of to-day, whose boast has been championship of the name and battle for the unity of the followers of the Lamb.

Within this hall, the voice of that giant is speaking again his plans for the nation's conquest in the name of the King of kings. 'Tis here and now that of and for ourselves we face the age-long problem mentioned, the problem of our submission to the loving, righteous sovereignty of God, the problem of enlisting our disposition and power in the carrying out of his will.

Such are the facts we face in relation to the purpose and plan of God in home missions. On our one hand is the vision of his will at work to do his good pleasure amidst the tumultuous forces surging through the nation's breadth. On the other hand is the vision of our heritage from dauntless forefathers whose fight was for the faith once delivered unto the saints, and the dawning conviction that we have become large enough for a seat of power among the mighty.

What mean the facts, in relation to this puissant body called Disciples of Christ, and content to be known as Christians only? Four things. First, they mean this, That we are being weighed in the balance—just as every reform of history has been weighed. Through the pain and stress of struggle against opposing forces this young giant of righteousness, produced by a century's forensic vanquishment of all opponents, is coming into the consciousness of his power. The leonine and bruinine snarls of sectarian contempt have subsided into respectful awaiting by the religious world for this movement's issue. The religious world has taken note of its methods and is experimenting for the secret of its power. It realizes that Christendom's strength has been sapped by her lamentable divisions. It knows to-day no less than we, that her hosts are to be welded and made omnipotent through the triumph of love's mastery. And as with the original Samson, so with our Samson—save for the self-begotten forces of folly—none can work his discomfiture. If this giant, raised up of God for the unity of the religious world is put out of the fight, it will only be by the prevailing of short visions, self-launched by reactionaries within our own ranks.

So the scales of judgment are swung and the hour has struck for us to do God's will or fail in the path of our destiny by the weight of our own supine indifference and unbelief—for those are the clogs that have balked God's plan wherever it has made a tack. Though we have come into the strength of the giant, its method must be the gentleness of the Lamb, for our use of the jaw-bone belongs to the past and the love spirit in sacrifice alone can bring us victory. The call of the time is for love's service as manifested in the mind of the Christ, and in the balance of the world's need our movement is being held for answer to that need. We can say it nay by crystallizing into a self-righteous championship of legalistic forms; we can say it amen by exemplifying the spirit of fellowship with men and movements of worth, however little akin to us in methods they may be in the turmoil of the present.

Second—The facts mean this—that we will not be found wanting; for to the supreme test of these days have we aspired and conquered. Our hosts are of the common people, and the age-long distinction they have had is sanity! Concerning him whose cause we champion in its simplicity the saying has always been signal in its significance that 'the common people heard him gladly.' Of these in our age, no less than of them in his age, the same fact will hold, and the call we voice will be answered in grandly increasing acclaims of support, until the genius of the cause we plead, freed from its misinterpretations, shall leaven the body of the nation's believers and bring about their unity in the bonds of peace. Our vision must ever outrun our attainment, for where no vision is the people perish, and only the lack of vision can work our hurt. Seers we have never lacked and never will, for the purpose of God is inevitable, and from out the wavering ranks of the fickle, there will be, as there always has been, found the dependable. It is not, therefore, for us to quake at the reality of clashing opinions within our ranks, for our heritage and shibboleth is liberty! It is not for us to wail and cynicize at the palpable fact of mistakes which may be charged against us, for our righteous pride is charity. It is not for us to be poisoned by that perverse spirit of our age, which from this party and the other affirms its own monopoly on truth, for the cause unto which we were born and which by God's grace we will see supreme is unity.

But it is for us, midst storm and calm, through progress or reverse, in weakness or in strength, to manifest a dauntless, persistent, unwavering, tireless faith, that God's hand and eye is on us, and we can not, we must not, we will not fail. No other spirit than this ever won a fight and the fight of faith is the fight supreme. If now and then a corporal deserts, take hold on the consolation that no army, however good and great its cause, has ever been without some deserters, whether salvation's forces with their Judas, or the forces of liberty with their Arnold. But the strength of a movement is in its loyal, and we can trust the common people with a trust, second only to the trust we place in God.

Third—The facts mean for us an inevitable centennial triumph. We have fought and won the battle for establishment, and now are wrestling with the problems of organization and education for a resistless advance. Pittsburg is the place and three years hence the time when the chronicle of a century's work of faith and labor of love will be written in figures that will glow and facts that will inspire. It will be, from the standpoint of evangelism, a record unrivalled since the conquering spirit of Pentecost went forth to prevail among the sin-smitten. From the regiments of home and foreign missions the spirit of Paul will have its increasingly honorable exemplification. From the brigade of the church extension wisdom will have her justification. Definite effectiveness will have possessed as a mantle of blessing the plans of ministerial relief. Education will have raised her eyes and taken a forward step in the path of endowment for mighty accomplishment. From every interest of the brotherhood the news will be proclaimed that organization is prevailing over chaos, and the marshalling of our forces for the greatest accomplishments yet will there and then be made the fact of supreme rejoicing.

Therefore, the fourth and final meaning of the facts for us is this—that we must have and will a realized consecration of the brotherhood to the purposes and spirit of the kingdom. We have been preaching unity, while lacking it ourselves in effort. Co-operation we have applauded among others, while failing to demonstrate its power ourselves. We must rise to exemplify the vision, that from the great church to the obscure one, from the man of one talent to him of ten, concert of action in practicing the gospel of sacrifice as we have had it in preaching the gospel of conversion, is the royal path to follow in the fulfillment of our manifest destiny.

A realized consecration of the brotherhood will mean an intelligent and aggressive leadership in our pulpits and a loyal following from our membership in the pews on the pathway of concerted action. It will mean an enlistment of the dilatory in the support of short plans and long, the deepening of the spirit of sacrifice for the cause in all the faithful, and doubled power in the prosecution of conquest aims.

Its burden is on the officers of our national organizations, that their plans be deep-laid and far-reaching. On our conquering evangelists in their mighty harvests that their converts be persuaded to the mastery of second principles of the faith when they have observed the first. Upon our pastors, to conserve and use the strength of their charges to its limit. Upon our membership, to claim the realization that no individual of this mighty army can be in good standing with it and fail to carry his portion of its honorable burdens.

Thus may God's purpose be realized—his plan exemplified and this nation's exhaustless riches in lives and means be consecrated to the work of the King.

"So, let it be in God's own might!
We gird us for the coming fight,
And, strong in Him whose cause is ours
In conflict with unholy powers,
We grasp the weapons he has given—
The Light, and Truth and Love of Heaven."

What the Brethren Are Saying and Doing

By B. B. Tyler

My body is in Denver. My spirit has been in Buffalo. My thoughts are of the tremendous progress of the Disciples of Christ. The victories that have been gained cannot be fully described by any pen. I know of no progress equal to that of the Disciples of Christ. I know of no victories greater than theirs.

I first visited Buffalo in 1868. I went out to Williamsville to worship. There was no body of evangelical believers, at that time in Buffalo, that desired to be known only as "Christians," "Believers," "Brethren," "Saints," "Disciples," "Fellow-Citizens," "Children of God." There are now a number of flourishing congregations of such persons in Buffalo, and in its immediate vicinity. They stand well, too!

If I understand this movement in the Church of Christ, it represents an earnest desire for unity and union among those who believe in the Christ, and this union in order to the speedy and successful evangelization of the world. "The Lord's Prayer" to "the fathers," was the seventeenth chapter of John. The golden text in this chapter were verses 20 and 21. "Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me." Repeat please, slowly and thoughtfully, the last ten words of this quotation.

"Thirty-one years ago we did not have in the wide field destitute of the gospel a single herald of the cross," is the language of the report of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society read in Buffalo. This society was organized in 1875 or '76. The first year only 20 churches sent in contributions. The aggregate offerings of congregations and individuals, the first year, amounted to $1,706.35. During the last year the receipts were $268,726.62. This is wonderful. My nerves tingle as I read this report. I am almost wild with excitement. Victory all along the line. Wholesome, healthy, sane, progress on the part of all societies, and boards, represented in the Buffalo convention. It is coming to be understood that the evangelization of the world is the one great work of the church; this is a divine, not a merely human enterprise. To engage in it is for our good as well as for the benefit of those who are not Christians. There comes to the individual and to the church engaging in this work an enlargement. World-wide work for the bodies, the minds, the souls, of men is incongruous with sectarianism. This is genuine catholicity. Sectarianism and catholicity are antipodes. Missionaries and missionary enterprise is the foe of pessimism.

And the young men who are at the front! As I ran over the names of those who were announced to preach in Buffalo, convention Sunday, not more than two or three were in the work of the ministry when I began to try to tell the story of our Father's love toward his erring children. I am proud of our young men. A finer body can not be found on earth. Here is quality as well as quantity. The men are numerous and they are upon the whole, first-class fellows. There were no such young men in the ministry forty years ago. I am happy to see them increase while we who have been in the service a long time decrease. This is the order of nature. The God of all grace is in this movement of young men to the front. How it would have pleased me to have been in Buffalo to have looked into their faces, to have heard their voices, and to have pressed their hands. But I was there in spirit.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

I am once more on sacred soil. The Christian Missionary Society of Virginia is in session in the city of Richmond. I have the honor to be one of the founders of this society, and this is its thirty-first annual meeting. It succeeded the old state meeting, which was a mass meeting, and resolved and re-resolved and died the same. Some of us felt the need of a more practical working organization and we got together, and here it is after thirty-one years of faithful and efficient service. The old state meeting was a great powwow. We always kept over Sunday, and in those days I preached in every Baptist church in this city at some one of these annual gatherings. My first exaltation to the dignity of introductory speaker was in 1871. I had been appointed alternate to Robert Cave. No one dreamed that the lot to preach that sermon would fall to me, but Cave escaped, and the young preacher was the victim. Peter Ainslie, of blessed memory, was the manager and called me and the congregation to the altar. Later they held a preachers' meeting, and he arose and said, as our young brother had preached the introductory he was the first subject of criticism, and he proceeded to review my maiden effort. When he sat down Dr. Chester Bullard arose and said: "Mr. Chairman, Brother Ainslie in his speech has made all the mistakes our young brother has been guilty of, and more," and he proceeded to review the critic. Of course my heart went out to the good doctor with a very warm feeling. There were sermons and songs, and prayers, and fellowship, and resolutions, and then we adjourned. The organization of the V. C. M. S. brought a new era. It has been more practical, businesslike, aggressive, truer every way to the Gospel ideal.

Richmond in itself makes any convention enjoyable. There is a flavor about this Virginia atmosphere that inspires the visitor. At the restoration of Charles II. Virginia's arms were quartered with those of the realm and the motto added En dat Virginia Quartam—"Behold Virginia gives the fourth," and Virginia was the oldest dominion of England in the new world, and so called "The Old Dominion." Here is a painting of Queen Elizabeth made in 1632 with the inscription in Latin, "The High and Mighty Princess Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queen of England, France, Ireland and Virginia." Jamestown was the first capital and after Bacon burned it in 1676, then for a hundred years Williamsburg was the colonial capital, and then to get out of the way of the British they came up the river to this spot, and since 1779 it has been the seat of government. Here is the Capitol copied by Thomas Jefferson after the Maison Quarree of Nismes, an ancient Roman Temple, a wonderfully impressive Ionic structure which cost only $120,000 in those good days, where so many great assemblies have met, among them the constitutional convention of 1829-30, when Alexander Campbell was the associate of such men as Madison, Monroe, Marshall and John Randolph, of Roanoke. Here came the confederate congress from Montgomery in 1862, and sat till April, 1865. Here is Hondon's statue of Washington, "the most perfect representation of the peerless man in existence." "A facsimile of Washington's person." said Lafayette. "Standing in the southeast corner of the rotunda and looking at this statue on a level with it," said Rembrandt Peale, who had often seen Washington, "you may well think you are beholding Washington himself. That is the man, sir, exactly." The figure seems over erect. Hondon came from Paris to Mt. Vernon in October, 1786, and Washington treated him with great consideration, but he staid, and made no sign of getting to work, and the great man began to weary of his guest. One day a pair of horses were sent to Washington for his inspection, and he and Hondon were looking at them. Expressing themselves much pleased with the horses, Washington asked their price and was told a thousand dollars! The father of his country at once assumed an attitude of indignation and Hondon cried triumphantly: "Ah! I 'ave him. I 'ave him!" and from that pose the statue was made.

This convention has been a good one. The report of the year's work is every way encouraging. The plans for the future mean worthy enlargement. First came a preacher's program, opened with a fine address by the president, J. T. T. Hundley, on the "Gospel Needed by Men." Others on the program were E. R. Kemm, H. W. Sublett, J. D. Hamaker, G. W. Remagen, W. R. Jinnett and Dr. R. H. Pitt, editor of the "Religious Herald." It was a profitable session, but there should be a more carefully prepared program, with timely notice to each speaker, and written addresses.

The woman's period was well filled. They have excellent C. W. B. M. workers here. I need only name Miss Kent, Miss Cary and Miss Orvis, Mrs. Jobson, Miss Shackelford and Miss Chiles, and Mrs. Haley, who were on the program. Miss Ella Maddock, the returned missionary, and Mrs. Ida Harrison made addresses that were received with great interest. The organization has in the state seventy-one auxiliaries and 1,309 members, who contributed the past year $2,581.69.

The State Society made a splendid record for 1906. H. C. Combs, the secretary, reports work done at Petersburg, Portsmouth, Harrisonburg, Blacksburg, Roanoke, Norfolk, Newland, Radford and Manchester. Six churches were organized and eighty-one aided; 891 were added to the churches, and twenty-two men were in the employ of the board. The sum raised for state missions was $7,350. There are many promising fields under cultivation and others are opened each year. Such men as Kemm, Woodward, Johnston, Burleigh, Morton, Culbertson, Coffey, Richards, Poage, Elmore, Henkel, Remagen, Wade, Watson and others are accomplishing much in building up the cause in the state, while the old workers like Hamaker, Hall, Spencer, Hopwood, Hundley, Haley, Atkins and the rest are felt in all the counsels and labors of the brotherhood. The address of J. J. Haley on "New Testament Evangelism," was one of the great things of the convention. Reports of the "Field Workers" and a symposium on "Development," were two fine features of the meeting. Our secretaries, McLean and Muckley, Ranshaw and Mohorter, did splendid service for the general causes of the brotherhood. There were 140 delegates, and a large attendance of brethren from the city churches. One hundred and ninety-three of the 225 churches contributed to the state work. W. F. Fox presided and was re-elected president of the society. The Centennial aims are

"JUST A LITTLE"

Grape-Nuts Worked Wonders For An Unfortunate Woman.

"At last I was obliged to sit all day at a sewing machine in a factory," said an English lady who was once well and happy, but whose circumstances changed so that she was compelled to earn her living.

"I soon suffered dreadfully with indigestion, some days thought I would die from acute pain in front of the waist line. I took about everything for indigestion without any permanent relief; tried starvation but suffered just as much whether I ate anything or not.

"Curiosity caused me to try a package of Grape-Nuts food for a change. Then I got a second package and began to use it regularly. What was my surprise—bowels became regular, no more headaches, piles troubled me less frequently and best of all the stomach trouble was gone entirely. I wanted Grape-Nuts for luncheon as well as breakfast—seemed as if my system craved what was good for it.

"Everyone in the family has taken to eating Grape-Nuts. They said I ate it with so much relish they thought it must be very good—and so it is.

"My little girl has gained five pounds since she started eating Grape-Nuts—in about three months. I think everyone, sick or well, should eat Grape-Nuts at least twice every day." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

30,000 Disciples, $10,000 annually for state work, $20,000 in their trust fund, which has now $8,000, Sunday-schools doubled, all homeless congregations housed, church debts paid, and pastorless churches supplied, and 250 Virginians at Pittsburg in 1909—all of which will be duly realized. The next convention goes to Norfolk, if satisfactory arrangements can be made. B. A. Abbott made the closing address.

Our Richmond churches seem to be in excellent condition. It is just seventy-four years since sixty-eight persons withdrew from the Baptist household and began to keep house for themselves. It was in 1832, and strangely enough the same month that the water was turned on in the city waterworks. Others were organized and soon that holy thing we call the cause was planted from the mountains to the sea. It had great principles and great souls maintained them. It faced great difficulties and antagonisms, but it stood the test. It gave its spirit, its offerings, its sons and its daughters to work in Virginia and throughout the land. It has no reason to be ashamed of its contribution to the brotherhood, or to the larger religious life of humanity. It has had an illustrious past. It will have a more glorious future.

Church Federation

By Rev. E. B. Sanford, D.D.

A year has passed away since the great Inter-Church conference held its session in New York City. From that mount of spiritual vision where 500 delegates, representing the churches of our country holding to historical and evangelical Christianity came together, a mighty impulse has gone forth unifying spiritual forces in their work of advancing the Kingdom of God. Until the first meeting of the first "Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America" in 1908, large responsibility was placed in the hands of the executive committee in which each of the thirty Christian bodies, by whose action the plan of federation was adopted, is represented. For that committee we make brief report.

The published volume containing the proceedings and addresses made at the conference is worthy of this assembly of which a great leader in the ranks of the laity has said, "I regard the result achieved by the Inter-Church conference on federation to be the greatest and most significant accomplished by any religious gathering ever held in North America." This book of nearly 700 pages contains the garnered thought of leaders in all the churches. The edition now on hand is limited but while it lasts a copy will be sent to every one that helps the work of the executive committee by the payment of an annual membership subscription of three dollars. Get this book and aid with your name and subscription sent to the office of the committee, 81 Bible House, New York, Alfred R. Kimball, treasurer.

What has been done since the conference? Correspondence world wide in scope has been cared for. Some of the leading Christian bodies in their national meetings have approved the plan of federation. Among these we note the unanimous and favorable action of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in U. S. A. and the Reformed church in America. Several of the constituent bodies will take action in 1907. The federal council that will act in behalf of a united Protestant Christianity is assured.

The executive committee have not only given careful attention to this matter of organization, but under the resolutions passed by the conference they are securing fruitful practical results. The greetings to missionaries in foreign lands have brought cheering response. The federation in Japan composed of the representatives of twenty-four denominational mission boards in its last annual meeting, referring to the Inter-Church conference, put on record these words, "We are of one mind that the missionary movements in Japan and in other countries will be directly influenced thereby and that there has been furnished by this meeting an impressive demonstration of the essential vital unity of Christianity to the non-Christian world."

Those who were present at the conference will recall the resolutions that were adopted regarding the conditions under which the helpless millions of the Congo River Basin in Africa are the victims of the worst form of slavery. Believing that our Government has a responsibility in this matter, the committee are making special efforts to secure action on the part of congress that will help at least in securing the creation of an impartial tribunal that can investigate and secure a change of the intolerable conditions that exist in that country where so many faithful missionaries are hampered in their work and compelled to witness suffering they are unable to relieve.

As suggested by the conference in its memorial to congress, faith has been kept with the civilized Indian tribes under the agreement by which they surrendered their tribal organization and the statehood bill under which Oklahoma comes into the Union contains a prohibition clause. The formal utterance of the conference regarding the social order and other matters in which all the churches are interested has given opportunity for counsel and action that promises to secure results that are only possible as the churches move together.

It is impossible to estimate the influence both direct and indirect that has already followed the action of the conference. It is no exaggeration to say that this influence has been world wide in its scope and character.

In another message we shall tell the story of activities in connection with state and local federative movements that were covered by the following resolutions unanimously adopted by the conference:

1. That in pushing the frontiers of the kingdom of heaven on earth we earnestly urge all missionary bodies for work both at home and abroad that they establish methods of comity and co-operation, where they are not already begun, and in all cases carry out such methods to the fullest degree practicable.

2. That we urge upon the local churches that the same principles of comity and co-operation should be put in practice through the co-operative parish plan or similar ways of working together.

The executive committee that has in its care these most important matters would recall in all its labors the words of its chairman, Dr. Wm. H. Roberts, uttered at the close of the conference: "We recognize that the chief work of the organization we have approved is to bring salvation from sin to the lost races of man through Jesus Christ, our Divine Savior and Lord. This is our great work as churches of Christ. For this glorious end let us stand shoulder to shoulder, following him who is the object of our supreme faith and love, at once man and God, the only begotten Son of God, the King immortal, eternal, invisible. Let his divine word of command be heard by every ear, be obeyed in every life: 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.'"

HARD TO SEE

Even When the Facts About Coffee Are Plain.

It is curious how people will refuse to believe what one can clearly see.

Tell the average man or woman that the slow but cumulative poisonous effect of caffeine—the alkaloid in tea and coffee—tends to weaken the heart, upset the nervous system and cause indigestion, and they may laugh at you if they don't know the facts.

Prove it by science or by practical demonstration in the recovery of coffee drinkers from the above conditions, and a large per cent of the human family will shrug their shoulders, take some drugs and—keep on drinking coffee or tea.

"Coffee never agreed with me nor with several members of our household," writes a lady. "It enervates, depresses and creates a feeling of languor and heaviness. It was only by leaving off coffee and using Postum that we discovered the cause and cure of these ills.

"The only reason, I am sure, why Postum is not used altogether to the exclusion of ordinary coffee is, many persons do not know and do not seem willing to learn the facts and how to prepare this nutritious beverage. There's only one way—according to directions—boil it fully 15 minutes. Then it is delicious." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

The Christian Church in St. Louis

Back in the '30s of the last century there were but seven people in St. Louis who could claim the honor of belonging to the Christian church. In the year 1837 these seven Disciples organized into a congregation and met every Lord's day. At first they met in their homes, then worshiped for two years with the Baptists, and after a time in a public schoolhouse, then in a public hall and finally in their first house of worship on the corner of Fifth and Franklin streets. The present church edifice on Locust street near Garrison avenue, is the first house of worship that was built by the First Christian Church of St. Louis. This church is the mother of several other congregations both in the city and surrounding states. Its present membership is about 900, its property is worth about $40,000 and its auditorium will seat about 1,000 people. It has been served by twenty-seven ministers during its history. John L. Brandt has been its pastor for more than five years, during which time more than 900 have been added to the membership and about the same number dismissed to serve the Lord elsewhere. Brother Brandt gathers the largest congregations, perhaps, of any downtown minister and probably 80 per cent of his Sunday evening congregations are young people.

In 1862 the Second Church was organized. For some years past it has been under the care of W. D. Pittman. R. E. Alexander has lately entered upon the pastorate, owing to which fact the church will not participate in the simultaneous campaign.

The Fourth Church, on the corner of Penrose and Blair, was organized in 1881, with twenty-two members. It has a present membership of about 450. E. T. McFarland, the minister, will hold his own meeting, and will be assisted by an augmented choir and an orchestra.

The Hammett Place Church was organized in 1893 with thirty members. For a time the brethren met in a small hall over a saloon, but later a good piece of ground was secured and the chapel erected of an excellent church building which, it is hoped, will be built at no distant date. The present membership is about 300. During the pastorate of S. B. Moore, who has served the church for about three and a half years, the debt on the present building has been provided for. Brother Moore has just tendered his resignation but will remain with the church during the evangelistic meeting which will be conducted by C. C. Garrigues, of Albion, Ill., while W. T. W. Byrum, singer, of St. Louis, will contribute his help.

Compton Heights Church, on the corner of St. Vincent and California, was organized in 1894. It was in the spring of 1892 that the Central Christian Church decided to start a mission on the south side and begin a Sunday-school at Anchor Hall. For a time it flourished, being much aided by the faithfulness of such workers as J. H. Allen, Palmer Clarkson, Mr. McBee and Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Dann. On January 1, 1893, a meeting of interested people was held at the home of O. C. Shedd, and it was resolved to start a mission at once on the south side, in a vacant store room in Anchor Hall building, on Jefferson and Park avenues, and J. T. Boone engaged to hold a meeting. The converts were baptized at the First Church. Twenty-four in all were added. Following Brother Boone, W. B. Young took charge until the new chapel on the present site was entered in April, 1894. These first years the work was very hard and fell upon the shoulders of a few people. In the fall and winter of 1893 O. A. Bartholomew drew plans and specifications, borrowed $5,500 from a personal friend and built the first chapel. The lot had already been paid for and the chapel was dedicated in April, 1894, with J. L. Parsons as pastor and a membership of 127. The building was soon

Impressions of the Buffalo Convention

We asked a few of the veterans attending the convention at Buffalo to send us their impressions of the convention with any suggestions for improvement in future conventions. We publish some of the replies this week. Others will follow:

By W. T. Moore.

In reply to your inquiry concerning my impressions of the Buffalo convention, I am free to say that the convention was great, and in some respects greater than any other convention I have ever attended. The fellowship was delightful, the speeches were nearly all good, and some of them rose to a very high level. A gratifying feature was the fact that most of these addresses were made by young men, some of them men who have never before delivered addresses at our conventions. It must be a source of gratification to the older men to find so many truly able young men coming on to take their places. Speaking for myself I can say that this was the most hopeful thing I saw in the Buffalo convention.

I have very few suggestions to make with respect to the future, and even these are more easily made on paper than they are likely to be made practical in our future conventions. Still, I believe that the changes I have to suggest would be helpful in every way, and they are certainly not impracticable, if seriously acted upon.

(1). I would make our conventions for business purposes wholly delegate meetings. While ample freedom should be given to the public generally to attend all the meetings, though, the delegates should occupy a specially appointed place in the hall and this place should be reserved for them.

(2). This would give opportunity for careful consideration and discussion of reports that may be made by the respective committees. The way these reports are at present disposed of is practically a farce, for everything is rushed through the convention without any consideration at all. I am not now even intimating that anything is passed by the convention which ought not to be passed.

It often happens that a report which everybody will agree to is the very one that ought to be emphasized by a friendly discussion. As these reports are now managed very few understand exactly what is contained in them, and nobody seems to care anything about them after they are once made. So far as I can see there is nothing really done in the convention that was not planned beforehand and adopted by the executive committee. I most sincerely believe that a little more "hastening leisurely" with the business features of our conventions would greatly improve their usefulness.

(3). There ought to be fewer set speeches. Each evening service should be set apart for hearing an address by one of the ablest men in our whole brotherhood. Those of us who pay our money to attend these conventions have a right to expect the best that can be given us in return for our sacrifice. These addresses should not be assigned to men simply for prudential reasons. In any case our editors might be allowed to have a rest for a time.

(4). Opportunity should be given to "hear from the counties." Let the people have a chance. Several symposiums might be arranged that would secure this end.

(5). A program committee should be appointed each year by the convention. We have committees on nearly everything else, but the program is left to the executive committee. I say this as much for the benefit of the executive committee as for any other reason. The executive committee is blamed for the program by those who are disappointed in it because they are not on it. But for other reasons this change ought to be made.

(6). The return ticket should not be signed by the one in authority at the convention for a delegate to leave until the convention closes. After Tuesday evening the convention begins to break up and Wednesday is a day of unrest and depletion of attendance. It would be well, furthermore, to devise some plan by which sight seers should not break into the middle of the convention by going on excursions.

(7). Let there be more time given for spiritual culture. There is something in these great convocations, where the spirit has free course, that greatly augments spiritual life. Not the least value of the conventions is to be found in this fact.

Columbia, Mo.

By R. Moffett.

Forty-two years ago I had the pleasure and profit of attendance at the annual convention of the American Christian Missionary Society, held at the Eighth and Walnut Street Church in Cincinnati, and I have been present at most of the annual conventions since that time. It was the fourth year of a cruel civil war, during which nearly every fireside had felt the touch of sorrow and death. All the tender ministries of the Christian heart were in fever camps, and improvised hospitals, on brave battlefields, and in suffering prisons, and then beside the new-made grave in our own home cemetery. The mind of our brethren was not on missions. The corresponding secretary, B. W. Johnson, presented the annual report, which indicated a hard struggle for the year. About a half-dozen men had been employed at home, and about as many in Jamaica. Brother Beardslee, the chief missionary in the Jamaica field, had been called home that year. The cash income was about $7,000, and reports from three or four states swelled the total to about $30,000. Of course this is not a fair year for the campaign, but this embraced all our missionary work that year—state, home and foreign. The reports at Buffalo aggregated fully thirty times as much money, with corresponding missionary service and success. They tell us figures sometimes lie, but these figures tell a great truth, viz., that the "Disciples" have grown to be a great religious denomination—in numbers, in wealth, in character, and these together spell power.

Going back in memory to that meeting in 1864, I can call up the names of great men who were present, but who now are with Christ: A. Campbell, H. T. Anderson, L. L. Pinkerton, J. M. Henry, Love H. Jameson, George Campbell, D. S. Burnett, Aylette Rains, Robert Milligan, O. A. Burgess, Joseph King, A. I. Hobbs, J. M. Allen, A. S. Hayden, D. P. Henderson, Isaac Errett, E. Goodwin, Wm. Baxter, R. M. Bishop, H. W. Everest, W. A. Belding. Thomas Munnell, R. R. Sloan and B. W. Johnson. I do not think there were greater men at the Buffalo convention. In fact the good men and women of each half a century simply "serve their generation," and serving their own generation faithfully, they serve all the succeeding generations. The attendants at the Buffalo convention are not serving their generation better than the good men of fifty years past. They simply have larger opportunities. It does not become one who made the programs and plans for ten years, to criticise his successors. If, however, I was shaping events and programs, I would not make the Church Extension board a separate incorporation. I would remedy the difficulty in a better way. We are a great people for union, but ever and anon we practice disintegration. Our "national conventions" are nothing but great mass meetings. Nobody is asked to enroll as delegate or minister. It is too large for a deliberative body. The deliberating is all done in the head offices. Even the churches, which provide entertainment, think they have a right to dictate policies and discussions. The churches in Buffalo know how to provide for entertainment, and did it well. The presidents and secretaries of our missionary boards know how to set a literary feast, and as the "eating is the proof of the pudding," we can testify there were not "too many cooks to spoil the broth." Table too crowded at times.

May I suggest that, if this great triple convention is to be a sort of Chautauqua and reunion combined, it might be well, at the Pittsburg meeting, to add a sort of "camp fire" some afternoon or evening, admitting by ticket, the veterans. The convention does not expect them to take any active part in speeches or business. Let them have an old-time talk in some side-hall by themselves—and probably a banquet.

I would have greatly enjoyed at least a hand-shake with many personal friends, and others whom I know by reputation, at the convention, but no opportunity was afforded. Perhaps a veterans' reunion would remedy the matter. The only trouble might be to keep the junior part of the convention away from such a meeting, for the wish was very often expressed at Buffalo, to see and hear some of the men whose names have become household words.

It was a great convention. Let us thank God and take courage.

Cleveland, O.

By J. B. Briney.

The convention was strong in the following points:

(1) In the harmony and good fellowship that prevailed from start to finish. It was indeed "good and pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity." This must have been a source of great pleasure to all present.

(2) In the character of addresses delivered. I do not think I ever saw a higher standard reached in this regard.

(3) In the reports made of work done during the year. These reports were certainly encouraging and inspiring.

(4) In the determination that was manifest on all hands to strive to do greater and better things for the Master in the future.

I offer the following suggestions as to improvements that may be made:

(1) By reducing the number of set addresses. Convention people have heard all interests pertaining to our missionary enterprises discussed so often and so fully that they have come to give but a listless attention to such addresses. The themes have been worn threadbare and their discussion in prepared speeches can no longer elicit much interest.

(2) By allowing more time for the discussion of board and committee reports. I believe that there is a very manifest and serious weakness in our convention at this point. Everything is railroaded through in a sort of perfunctory way and those who make up the bulk of the convention have no opportunity to do anything except to vote yes or no.

(3) By having as many as two warm, stirring, spiritual sermons that might be called "convention sermons." This would give opportunity for heart to heart talks that would lift us to the top of the Mount of Transfiguration, and cause us to see the glory of the Lord. Such sermons should be delivered by men of ripe age and experience in the work of the Master.

(4) By omitting from all addresses half-concealed flings at brethren who may hold notions at variance with those entertained by the speakers.

Louisville, Ky.

By L. L. Carpenter.

The Buffalo Convention, in my judgment, was—with the exception of the jubilee convention at Cincinnati—the best one that I have ever attended. The business was well arranged, the addresses were exceedingly good. One or two speakers forgot to quit when they got through, which hurt what otherwise would have been exceedingly good speeches.

In future conventions I suggest that, however much we may be pleased with the singing, we do not take the time of the convention by encoring the singers. It is an injustice to the next speaker, as he has had just so much time allotted him, and he will have to cut his address just that much shorter. And here let me say that we could save a great deal of time, and feel a whole lot more religious, if we would say amen, when a good thing is said, and take much less time clapping our hands. We are over-doing the clapping of hands business. It has come practically to mean nothing at all in our conventions. I suggest a little less time for addresses and more time for the discussion of the important business that should receive the careful consideration of the convention.

too small and was enlarged at a cost of nearly $1,000. During 1896 the foundation for a new building was put in and the effort well under way to raise the money for the building when the great cyclone came and this was one of the many churches almost destroyed. Many of the members being left homeless and some almost penniless, discouragement arose as to whether there should be a building erected on the same site, but on the Lord's day after the cyclone eighty-six members met in the midst of the ruins and with the help of the city mission board, our churches, The Christian-Evangelist and different interested brethren in and outside of St. Louis, the building was repaired and replaced at a cost of a little over $1,000. W. W. Sniff entered upon the pastorate and was followed by Sherman B. Moore and J. N. Crutcher. There was a steady growth. Part of the debt on the building was paid off by the raising of $2,000 cash and $3,500 was borrowed from the Church Extension fund. F. N. Calvin entered upon the pastorate in the fall of 1903, the present beautiful auditorium, which cost $12,454, being built just before his coming. During his pastorate the church has almost doubled its membership and every department has shown substantial growth. The building is too small to accommodate the busy hive of workers. Compton Heights has been very fortunate in its ministers and is blessed with a harmonious, liberal, energetic membership. It has great opportunities in its neighborhood and there are evidences that the congregation is aware of these and determined to make itself a power for good on the south side of the city.

One of the most successful of all our evangelists, W. E. Harlow, with his son as singer, is leading the meeting.

Perhaps the wealthiest congregation is that now known as the Union Avenue Christian Church, which was formed by the combination of the Central and Mt. Cabanne churches. Central church, which met on Finney avenue, was organized in 1872 with thirteen members and had church property worth about $30,000. The Mt. Cabanne church, which had a good building on Kingshighway valued at about $28,000, was organized in 1892 with 37 members. The time came when it was felt that our cause in St. Louis needed a strong representative body, able to undertake greater tasks than any of our churches had ever attempted before, and local conditions seemed to point to a union of the Central with Mt. Cabanne as the combination that should supply this lack. James M. Philputt was called to the pastorate of the united congregation and entered upon his duties May 20, 1904. In September, a year later, Irving S. Chenoweth was called to be assistant pastor. A commodious chapel costing about $85,000 with seating capacity for 800 Sunday-school scholars was completed and entered in November, 1904. From the first there has been perfect unity and harmony and the congregation has made a record in missionary giving for the past two years. It is now a living link with three of the missionary boards and has a named loan fund with the Board of Church Extension. Plans are maturing for the completion of the main auditorium which will be one of the handsomest and most complete buildings in the brotherhood. C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, who is pastor of one of our best churches in Missouri, and successful in evangelistic work, is the preacher in this evangelistic campaign, and Chas. Altheide, of Bloomfield, Ia., has charge of the music.

Our newest church building in use is the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, which is the outcome of a mission organized in 1894 by O. A. Bartholomew. Some account of its history was published in these columns under date of May 10, 1906. The handsome building was made possible by the liberality of Robert H. Stockton. The good result of enlargement and enterprise is seen in the growth of interest and in the large congregations that now attend the ministrations of L. W. McCreary, the present pastor. W. F. Turner, whose success at Joplin, Mo., is so favorably known, is the evangelist for this meeting and V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, Kan., has charge of the music.

The Carondelet church, which was organized in 1897, and has been a mission church, will not be able to take part in this special effort. G. E. Ireland, who has been serving it as pastor, has resigned to become city missionary.

In the suburbs, Maplewood is the only church holding a meeting at present. Here F. A. Mayhall is pastor and E. M. Richmond is the evangelist. The church was organized in 1896 and has good property, all the indebtedness upon which was recently paid off.

Tuxedo, organized in 1895, is served by J. A. Bennett, who gives his week days to business, and Old Orchard, which is now worshiping in the building that was erected by the Christian churches on the World's Fair grounds, is proceeding quietly under the ministrations of R. L. Wilson. These two churches are unable at the present time to join in the campaign. The same is true of the newly established church at Landsdown, East St. Louis, where C. O. Reynard is trying to build up the cause. Our church at East St. Louis, however, under the leadership of Henry E. Jones, will participate, with E. A. Gilliland as the evangelist, and in about a week's time, or as soon as they can get their new building completed the little band at Granite City will fall into line with J. M. Hoffmann as the evangelist. G. A. Hoffmann has been giving his time to the work here for many weeks past. There are four towns contiguous to each other which will soon form one city. The present population is about 75,000. The church at Granite City has passed through sore trials, but during Brother Hoffmann's year of service the membership has grown from 88 to 112. The new church which is of concrete, will, when completed, cost about $8,000.

The Campaign in St. Louis.

The simultaneous campaign in St. Louis has begun auspiciously. The First Church, where Brother Yeuell led off a week in advance of the others, has reported 40 additions up till Sunday night, ten of them by letter and the others by confession and baptism. Most of the other churches began their evangelistic services last Lord's day, and at the ministers' meeting on Monday morning the reports were as follows: Compton Heights, four by confession, six by letter; Hamilton Avenue, eight by confession, two by letter; Fourth, one by confession, one by letter; Maplewood, four by confession, four by letter or statement; Union Avenue, five by confession, three by letter; East St. Louis, two by confession, two by letter; Hammett Place, two by letter. The Second Church, which is not holding special services, reported three by confession and two by letter. Several of the churches were without their special evangelists, these arriving in the city on Monday morning.

At the meeting of the ministers and evangelists engaged, which was held at the Christian Publishing Company's offices on Monday morning, plans for concerted action were discussed and it was agreed that a mass meeting should be called to be held at the First Church on Locust street near Garrison avenue, on Thursday morning of this week at 10:30, when there will be an interesting program rendered by the evangelists and singers in the campaign, and at which reports from several committees appointed to investigate the question of advertising and the holding of a great down-town union meeting will be considered. It is hoped that the members of the churches in the city will assemble in large numbers on Thursday morning of this week at the First Church. The meeting will last but one hour.

The Indiana State-Wide Campaign.

Brethren: The elections will be over November 6, and the state-wide simultaneous campaign will settle down to business. Don't fail to report daily by postal card, progress of meetings, so that the whole state may have benefit of the press reports.—T. T. Legg, state evangelist, 1402 Pleasant street, Indianapolis, Ind.

Foreign Missionary Rallies.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society is planning the most comprehensive campaign of missionary rallies for this fall and winter, yet undertaken. Three months will be spent in this work, and the brotherhood will be covered as far as possible from New York to Texas and from Michigan to Alabama. A. McLean, Secretary Stephen J. Corey, Dr. Elliott I. Osgood, of China, and David Rioch, of India, will conduct the campaign. Several leading pastors will assist. The following is a list of the rallies to be held before the month ends:

November 19—Ashland, Ky., W. D. Ryan, pastor.

November 20—Paris, Ky., Carey E. Morgan, pastor.

November 21, Danville, Ky., H. C. Garrison, pastor.

November 22—Knoxville, Tenn., Robt. Stewart, pastor.

November 23—Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

November 25—Chattanooga, Tenn.—P. M. Rally, pastor.

November 26—Atlanta, Ga., H. K. Pendleton, pastor.

November 26—Birmingham, Ala.—A. R. Moore, pastor.

November 27—Nashville, Tenn., R. L. Cave, pastor.

November 28—Memphis, Tenn., W. H. Sheffer, pastor.

November 30—Hopkinsville, Ky., H. D. Smith, pastor.

Ministerial Exchange.

Churches needing a minister to begin work the first of next year should address James F. King, R. R. 2, box 75, Albion, Ill. Recommendations will be furnished.

Miss Helen C. Shoecraft, singing evangelist, Emporia, Kan., may be secured for a meeting in December.

E. W. Brickert, Sullivan, Ind., would be glad to hold one evangelistic meeting this fall and a couple next spring or early winter. He has held meetings in many states and has been richly blessed.

J. J. Cole, Galt House, Cincinnati, O., is open for engagements to hold meetings or for regular employment.

M. F. Redlien, 500 Hall Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., is ready to hold meetings during fall and winter.

O. J. Young, evangelist and C. M. Hughes, singer, Valley View, Ky., are ready to make engagements for meetings.

Churches or evangelists needing a singer to help in revival meetings can obtain the services of J. Ross Miller for December and January. His address is box 86, Gas City, Ind.

Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, Bethany, Mo., will be open for engagements as gospel singer after November 1.

Any church desiring a pastor of experience, can be put in communication with one by addressing Evangelist Samuel Gregg, Jefferson, Ia.

Harold E. Monser wants a good pastor with a wife who is a good worker among women. Preacher must be a fair speaker and have patience. Salary, $800 to $850. Address, Findley, Ill.

The church at Rushville, Ill., has some good pews for sale. They are finished in walnut and there is a sufficient number of them to seat over 300 people. Address Walter E. Harmon, pastor.

Paul McReynolds, formerly of Illinois, but latterly of California and North Carolina, is now located at Marissa, Ill., as editor of a reform paper entitled "Uncle Sam," and is open for lectures and Sunday preaching.

S. J. Vance can now make engagements for meetings with or without a singer. Address Carthage, Mo.

D. G. Wagoner reports that the church at Chester, Neb., is a fine opening for some young married man. They pay a good salary and it is a healthy climate. Address R. L. Wilson, elder.

The Christian Church at Lake Charles is desirous of securing the services of a preacher. The church is able to pay about $75 per month, with the free use of a parsonage. For particulars address Henry B. Kane, chairman of board, Lake Charles, La.

"We are in need of a competent music teacher here. We desire to communicate with some Christian woman of experience, one who is willing to become a companion to my daughter, and live with us during the winter. I have just lost my wife and desire that my daughter study music at home. We can work up a large class for the right kind of an instructor. We would also expect the one who accepts the position to lead our church music."—R. S. Robertson, pastor Christian Church, Osborne, Kan.

Our Budget

—St. Louis simultaneous evangelistic campaign now on.

—Other campaigns in progress throughout the country. Success to them all!

—We are receiving many commendatory letters about our report of the Buffalo convention. We are glad to know that our efforts to adequately report the most important events in the brotherhood are appreciated.

—Geo. B. Van Arsdall will remain with the church at Cedar Rapids, Ia., notwithstanding the temptation to go to Des Moines to succeed Brother Breeden. They seem to have formed a sort of love-match at Cedar Rapids, that is not easy to break up.

—We regret to learn of the death of Carl Rash, son of Howard C. Rash, Salina, Kan., at Las Vegas, N. M., on October 29. Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved family.

—It was a large and enthusiastic gathering of ministers that, assembled at the assembly room of the Christian Publishing Company on Monday morning last, reported results of the first day of simultaneous meetings, and discussed ways and means of advancing the success of same. At the close, after prayer and the benediction, and while they were greeting one another they were called to order by the chairman to listen to a number of telegrams received by The Christian-Evangelist, reporting success of meetings in Kansas City, Indianapolis, Lexington and other places, which were read by the Assistant Editor. The ministers then sang, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow," with great zest, and separated with thankful hearts.

—A. L. West, late of Carlinsville, has begun work at Mt. Vernon, Ill.

—A speaker recently said the right sort of personal consecration is spelled "purse-and-all" consecration.

—F. M. McCarthy, of Monroe, La., has been called to the church at Leesville, and is now actively at work there.

—Many improvements have just been made in the church building at Dinuba, Cal., where R. A. Staley ministers.

—The future for the Second Christian church at Houston, Texas, where F. B. Scrimshen is minister, seems very bright.

—The church at Girard, Ill., has called P. F. York, of Bloomington, to the pastorate and he has entered upon his duties.

—A new building at Marcus, Ia., where William Baier ministers, is to be dedicated this month. It is an $8,000 building.

—W. E. Bates has just closed his ministry at Hope, Kan., and enters at once upon the pastorate at Thomas, Okla.

—W. P. Murray has closed a three years' pastorate at Southington, O., and is now at work in his new field at Lucas, Ohio.

—The church at Roseville, Ill., has secured the services of J. M. Clemens, of Waverly, who will begin his new pastorate January 1.

—Thomas L. Cooksey made a brief call at The Christian-Evangelist office on his way to take part in the evangelistic campaign at Indianapolis.

—J. P. Furnish ministers successfully to the brethren at Newark, Mo. A meeting just closed there by C. F. Rose, of Canton, will probably lead to a new church building.

—Clifford A. Cole has returned to his native state in going to the strong church at Abilene, Kan., where he has just entered upon the pastorate.

—It is hoped to have a fine building at Hawesville, Ky., by the early spring. Brother Self, the assistant minister of the church at Owensboro, preaches there once a month.

—W. T. Adams has recently closed a three years' pastorate at Waitsburg, Wash., and anticipates good results from his labors at Corona, Cal., upon whose pastorate he has just entered.

"The Man with the Shovel, or Who Cares for the Stoker?" is the striking title of a sermon which we note on the church leaflet of the First Christian church, Pomona, Cal., of which M. A. Hart is pastor.

—Lee Tinsley has removed to Franklin, Ind., where he is dividing his time between the Union, four and one-half miles from there, and his recent church at Nineveh. He is taking this country work in order to benefit his health.

Miss Martha Stout.

The Missouri Superintendent of Juniors who won the C. W. B. M. National Banner at Buffalo.

—Work on the new building at Mayfield, Ky., has begun. The only charter member left, old Brother Thomas, was the first to use the spade. Roger L. Clark, the minister, is earnest in the work and leading it steadily to success.

—H. H. Shick, of Winfield, Kan., is to hold a meeting in Kaw City, Okla. Brother Shick has faith in the mission of good religious literature and will bring to his aid 300 copies weekly of The Christian-Evangelist.

—O. Wilkinson, after three months' vacation, has returned to Ukiah, Cal., and has found all the work in good condition. The brethren, he writes, are very active. They certainly have been treating Brother Wilkinson as he deserves.

—The church at Holliday, Mo., which is under the charge of Rolla G. Sears, is one of the best missionary churches in the state; contributing to all the societies. They also made themselves a life member in the permanent fund of Missouri.

—His own brother and his wife were among the converts in the meeting just held by F. W. Burnham at Chapin, Ill. Brother Burnham, of course, is now pastor of the Central church at Decatur, but Chapin is his native home and boyhood church.

—We are glad to announce to the friends of The Christian-Evangelist that Andrew J. Jones, of Enid, Okla., is representing the Christian Publishing Company in that great southwestern state and we commend him to the brotherhood there.

—Dr. J. B. Herbert, a song and anthem writer of international renown, spent several days with W. E. M. Hackleman at Lincoln, Ill., and assisted in the evangelistic services now being held at the First Christian Church by William J. Lockhart.

—J. Will Waters sends us a note of very cordial commendation of Charles E. McVay, singer and helper. Forty have been added to the church at Niantic, Ill., since Brother Walters began there last March. He can probably conduct one meeting during this or next month.

—C. B. Allison writes enthusiastically of the brethren worshiping at the Frederick Avenue Church, St. Joseph, Mo., where he has concluded a good meeting. He believes that this conservative community must ultimately feel the force of the faithful, fearless band in their midst.

—Harry E. Tucker's meeting at Excelsior Springs, Mo., was cut short on account of a message received by him announcing that his wife had typhoid fever. On account of his work at Platte City, Mo., he has been unable to accept no less than seven invitations to hold revivals this fall.

—We have received the following communication unsigned. "Please send my Christian-Evangelist to Canton, Mo., as I am here now to attend Christian University." Will the Canton student who wrote this under date of October 17 please send his name and he will receive his Christian-Evangelist.

—The Calhoun Street Church of Christ, Charleston, S. C., has pledged $1,700 on the $1,900 due to the Church Extension Board for the church lot. Enough cash was raised to take up the first note and the pastor, Marcellus R. Ely, writes us that it is expected the whole amount will be raised by June, 1907.

—R. R. Hamlin, of Fort Worth, probably holds the record for successful meetings held in Texas the past year. Brother Hamlin, assisted by Leonard Daugherty, of Louisville, Ky., began a meeting on Lord's day for the church at Nevada, Mo. These two evangelists can be had for winter meetings in the north or middle states.

—A note from Claude E. Hill explains that he was unable to write an account of the Christian Endeavor session at the Buffalo convention because the flesh was weak. He contracted a severe cold but is now at home again and hopes to be able soon to take up the active work incidental to the superintendency of our national Christian Endeavor work.

—J. H. O. Smith has been holding a good meeting at Billings, Mont. He has expressed himself as much pleased by the pluck, energy and courage manifested by the church there in its careful, thoroughgoing preparation. This is the church which the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist dedicated on his return last summer from the San Francisco convention.

Two Popular Songs.

Two of the most popular songs sung at Buffalo convention, by the Netz Sisters were "Were You There When They Crucified My Lord?" and "That Beautiful Land," both of which were arranged by W. E. M. Hackleman. The former is published in Concert Quartettes and the latter in Sacred Quartettes, by the Hackleman Music Co., Indianapolis.

—A new church has recently been built by the brethren at Lucerne, Mo. The $1,100 which it cost was all raised by subscription with the exception of $200 which Brother Abbott secured on dedication day. J. P. Noland writes us that Brother McKinley and Brother Blunt have just closed a good meeting there, when there were 39 additions to the membership. This leaves the church with very bright prospects for the coming year.

—Percy G. Cross has been holding a meeting where there has been no preaching for over a year. The population of Prescott, Ark., where he has just been, is over 3,200 and shows what a wide scope there is for establishing our cause, for there are hundreds of cities just as large where there is no Christian church. Brother Cross writes that he expects to secure a preacher for Prescott. The total number of baptisms he had during the past year was 122, not 112 as recently reported.

—H. E. Van Horn, who has taken charge of the East Side Church, Des Moines, Ia., finds it a promising field and reports accessions every Lord's day. "We hope that we will not lose a single number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST." We hope he will not. The supply of our convention report issue was quickly exhausted. So great is the demand that we can not supply a single copy of last week's issue. Brethren, preserve your CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS, or you will have to borrow from your neighbor.

—S. M. Martin has just held an excellent meeting at Ashland, Ore., when many persons listened to our plea for the first time. Members of the "CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special" party who journeyed together from San Francisco to Portland will remember the beautiful situation and the fine fruit grown at Ashland. To W. L. Mellinger, pastor of the church there, should be given no little credit for the success of the meeting.

—Ona Jewyl Green, Ark., likens prayer to a telephonic communication with heaven. The wire should be "double-stranded, made of faith and love, and upheld by everlasting poles of good works. Make the message clear and plain and each and every one will be received." "Sometimes the wires are right but the poles are lacking." See that your connection with heaven is made secure and strong.

—A site for a new building needed for the growing suburb of Lindenwald, Hamilton, O., has been secured and at the second anniversary celebration of W. H. Hedges, the present minister, pledges were taken which clears off the present indebtedness. During the past year there were 109 additions, the membership a year ago being only forty-one. The Sunday-school shows an increase from 58 to 158, and about $2,000 was raised for all purposes during the year, $110 for missions.

—The local paper at Paxton, Ill., prints an account of a meeting recently held at Mt. Olivet church near Paxton by S. Elwood Fisher, who is pastor at Fisher, Ill. It speaks very highly of both the evangelist and Lewis G. Fisher, who is pastor of the church. The latter had been planning and working for the meeting since the beginning of the year and had all things in readiness for the evangelist. There were thirteen additions to the membership, which was strengthened for better work and knit closer together.

—On account of the serious illness of his wife, Leander Lane has closed a two years' pastorate at Santa Ana, Cal. During this time there were 188 additions to the church, 70 of them being by primary obedience. All departments have prospered and a new building has been planned for. Brother Lane and his family have sought a higher altitude and have been staying twelve miles north of Los Angeles at La Canada. His church very generously sent him a free-will offering of about $150. He is now in a position to accept another pastorate or to hold meetings.

—For several years past T. R. Hodkinson has been holding country pastorates in order that he might have time to prepare a book for the press. Brother Hodkinson is now ready to give all his time to some field having a wider outlook. While he is considerably past the period sometimes called the dead line, he is as vigorous in the Lord's work as he ever was and has the great advantage of much added knowledge and experience. He is, by no means, the kind of man whom we could afford to put "on the shelf." We trust some good church will at once get into correspondence with him at Palmyra, Ill.

—W. M. Stuckey, of Lebo, Kan., has just been holding a short meeting at Williamsburg, in the same state, and reports that not a family at that place was reading any of our church papers, which he says is a "deplorable state for any church to be in." He got the promise of some of the brethren to subscribe for a Christian paper and he says he will visit them again soon and note the result. He passed around copies of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to do some preaching in his absence. His home church has been crowded to its utmost capacity. Brother Stuckey would like to hold a meeting in Texas or Louisiana this winter.

—Oscar Riley who is representing THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in West Virginia is one of those men who cannot only attend to business but who, in the course of his efforts to extend the circulation of a good religious journal, does not forget that he is, first of all, a minister of the gospel. Brother Riley has been instrumental in materially helping some of our evangelists engaged in meetings in that state and has, by his house to house visitation, won people to come out and take their stand for Christ. One of our most prominent evangelists says he wishes Brother Riley could follow him in all his meetings, so great a help was he.

—J. W. McGarvey, Jr., of Lexington, Ky., has just concluded a religious meeting in a tobacco barn. The brethren at Camargo had no organization and no church building so they remodeled a tobacco barn with planks laid double overhead, canvas covering the walls, sawdust for a floor, with matting on the pulpit and goldenrod used for decoration. The community was deeply impressed and there were 33 additions, the majority of them by confession of faith and baptism. A congregation numbering about 80 was organized, ground secured and work will begin soon on the new church building. Until a preacher has been engaged the services will be conducted by different brethren, Bruce W. Trimble being the first to take this part.

DISFIGURED FOR LIFE

Is the Despairing Cry of Thousands Afflicted with Unsightly Skin Humors.

Do you realize what this disfiguration means to sensitive people? It means isolation, seclusion. It is a bar to social and business success. Do you wonder that despair seizes upon these sufferers when doctors fail, standard remedies fail, and nostrums prove worse than useless? Blood and skin humors are most obstinate to cure or even relieve. It is an easy matter to claim to cure them, but quite another to do so. The Cuticura Remedies (consisting of Cuticura Soap to cleanse the skin, and Cuticura Ointment to heal the skin, and Cuticura Resolvent Pills to purify the blood) have earned the right to be called Skin Cures, because for years they have met with most remarkable success.

—The First Christian Church at Seattle, Wash., had just met to celebrate its financial independence and to burn the mortgage, but upon the advice of the Board of Church Extension the brethren did not burn the mortgage, but, as a substitute ceremony raised $1,000 as first payment on a new pipe organ which they hope to have installed in the spring. A. L. Chapman is the pastor and since the first of September, a year ago, 190 members have been received into fellowship, $1,000 spent on local debts and improvements, the pastor's salary increased $500, all current expenses met and over $2,700 paid on the building. The church is united, working and happy.

—F. F. Walters has accepted a call to the Central church, Springfield, Mo., opening his work there November 18, thus entering upon a larger and more active field. Brother Walters has nothing but good words and well wishes for the people at Neosho, which will now need a good pastor. This is a beautiful little town with 250 members in our church, over 100 of whom were added during Brother Walters' year of service. The greatest need is a new building, the present one being out of date. If that could be provided and a devoted pastor secured the church at Neosho would come into line with the progressive churches of this great state. O. F. Brockman is chairman of the board.

—We regret to report the death of Isaac H. Shaver, one of the best known pioneers of Cedar Rapids, Ia. He was a man who deserved in the highest sense the term well-beloved. Self-made, he took delight in doing good whenever he had opportunity, working in the Christian church which he loved so much. He always had a tender sympathy for the poor and many of them were the recipients of his benefactions. He was an earnest lover of his fellow men and zealously sought to promote their welfare by reducing intemperance, by promoting Christian education and by assisting in the distribution of the Scriptures. He loved the unity of the Church of Christ and yearned for and did all he could to hasten the coming of the better age. Brother Shaver was born in Sussex county, N. J., in 1825.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

Cured with Five Bottles of Drake's Palmetto Wine, Costing $3.75.

Mrs. B. W. Smith, Maloy, Iowa, says: "Three doses of Drake's Palmetto Wine gave me the first relief from two years of constant Stomach distress. Five 75-cent bottles have cured me. The best doctors and largely advertised medicines utterly failed to give me any relief. I can now eat any wholesome food and have gained 20 pounds weight in three months. Our druggist sold nine bottles of Drake's Palmetto Wine one day to my friends who know what it has done for me. I am recommending it to all who suffer." The Drake Co., 314 Drake Bldg., Wheeling, W. Va., will send a test bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine free and prepaid to any one who suffers with Stomach Trouble or Constipation. One small dose a day gives prompt relief and cures to stay cured. For sale by all druggists.

—C. W. Mahin has had a good meeting at Angola, Ind., where there is a faithful and intelligent band of our brethren. Brother Mahin's record during the past years is a good one. Out of ten meetings held only three were at places where there were pastors or even regular preaching. Some of the churches had only a dozen members, and none of them had more than 150. The record of work accomplished shows three churches organized, pastors settled in seven churches, money pledged for all or a portion of the time, 200 additions—nearly all of them by baptism, and every church left in a healthy, united condition. Brother Mahin and his wife are now in a meeting at North Vernon.

—We are glad to know that J. J. Morgan, of Kansas City, Mo., has sufficiently recovered from a very serious illness, which kept him from his pastorate for some months, to enter upon a meeting with J. H. O. Smith as evangelist and Howard Saxton as singer. The meeting began on Lord's day in the South Prospect Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo. With such a combination as the leadership of Brother Morgan, the strong preaching of Brother Smith, and Howard Saxton's musical ability, we look for another great meeting to follow the one that has just been completed and the other that is still in process in this go ahead city on the big Missouri.

J. J. Morgan.

—M. M. Davis has just celebrated his sixteenth anniversary with the church at Dallas, Texas. During the past year there were 225 additions, over $8,100 raised, about half of which was spent for mission schools and benevolences. Brother Davis' work has been a very useful one, as will be seen from the following statistics: During the sixteen years he preached 2,212 sermons, had 3,143 additions to the church, and the money raised amounted to $193,128.55. During these years five other congregations have been organized in Dallas and the organization of the sixth is under way. In 1890 when Brother Davis entered upon his present field of work there was but one congregation. It was during his pastorate that the present church edifice, costing $65,500, was erected. On his recent anniversary, to which we were invited, a sermon was preached giving a history of the pastorate and an outline of the work for the seventeenth year.

—H. C. Kendrick began his ministry at Georgetown, Ky., on the first Sunday in November. Brother Kendrick has written a pastoral letter to the members of the church which he goes to serve. We wish we had space to quote all of it. "I am coming to be your helper," he says. "I shall endeavor to inspire you with new courage for the daily battle, and seek to make you stronger for the wear of character that modern business necessitates. I hope to make this life of earth for you sublime by bringing to bear upon it the motives and sanctions of eternity. I shall study to so conduct the services in the Lord's house that each of you may return from them with a feeling that in spite of the down dragging influences that are depressing you, there is something worth living for after all. Above all, I shall endeavor to get Christ before your eyes as the great helper and healer of men, the good Samaritan of humanity, who comes at the hour of our extremity with his tender sympathy and his ready assistance." This is a noble aim and we have no doubt that Brother Kendrick will do much to bring it into realization in the lives of the flock at Georgetown. The brethren at Hagerstown have treated him in a most noble way.

Edited by the American Revision Committee

Who Made It ?

The American Revision Committee, composed of the greatest Biblical authorities of the nation, representing the great colleges and theological seminaries, spent nearly thirty years in the preparation of this work.

It was a spiritual task, a reverent undertaking for humanity, for which these scholars gave their time and experience without pay or compensation.

Who sends by mail a free trial package of his Catarrh Cure to applicants.

It will cost you only a postal card (or two cent stamp) to get a liberal free trial package of this wonderful remedy. He will pay for everything, delivery charges and all. No offer could be more liberal than this, but he has such confidence in the remedy that he is willing to submit it to an actual test.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat or lungs, if you are constantly spitting, blowing the nose, have stopped-up feeling, headache, head noises, deafness, asthma, bronchitis or weak lungs, write at once for a trial treatment, then you will soon know its effect for yourself. The full treatment is not expensive. A regular package containing enough to last one whole month is sent by mail for $1.00.

A postal card with your name and address, sent to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will bring you the free treatment and an interesting booklet about catarrh.

—R. O. Rogers, at Fredericktown, Mo., is with the brethren at Marshall, Ark., for a two weeks' meeting. W. T. Mills writes us that there is a great interest manifest, and as Brother Mills never fails to draw large audiences, there is nothing to hinder a religious awakening in Marshall. A great revival is expected.

—F. M. Rains made a big jump in going from Buffalo out to Los Angeles, where he has dedicated the handsome new Sunday-school room of the First Christian Church of that city. Brother Rains says it is the best in the brotherhood, and has nearly forty rooms. Last Lord's day he was to dedicate the new church at Kansas City, where S. W. Nay is pastor. While in California Brother Rains enjoyed a great missionary meeting with the church at Pomona, where M. A. Hart, late of Fulton, Mo., is doing a fine work.

—Herbert H. Saunders writes that a sentence in one of our evangelistic reports may be misleading. In his meeting at Union Star, Mo., he stayed to close the meeting on Monday and to baptize eighteen of the twenty confessions from Sunday night's service and three more who accepted Christ at the service on Monday morning.

—We have received many compliments on the thoroughness and the speed with which we have reported the convention for the benefit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers. Although the other papers which may lay claim to covering the national field have this year given larger space than for several years to the convention, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST leads these by many columns in the space given to what is the most important meeting held by the Christian churches every year. Column for column, we have published as much as all the other papers put together, and we have not yet completed our report.

—We desire to call special attention to the advertisement of our Foreign Christian Missionary Society which appears opposite our Centennial page. This speaks of a special fund known as the Centennial Fund, which it is proposed to raise for the purpose of erecting buildings and thoroughly equipping them for the work in the foreign field. Read the advertisement, and regard it not as such but as a statement of an attempt to meet a condition that ought not to exist in a great brotherhood that has such a good opinion of itself and that is so easily able to supply a quarter of a million dollars for this special purpose, if it will but give serious thought to such an enterprise.

West Virginia Campaign.

Reports of the simultaneous revival issued on Friday last indicate the average attendance of 101 at sixteen different churches. The total additions at that time numbered 188. Below will be found a telegram giving later figures. The church having the largest number of additions is Wheeling First where 77 have been added. Huntington follows with twenty-two added. Wheeling Island has received thirteen to its numbers, Pine Grove twelve, Parkersburg four, New Cumberland four, Follansgee four, Williamson two, Mount Hope three, and Sistersville one. Hallowe'en and the political excitement have interfered this week with the meetings. All the churches, however, report a growing interest and much good done even where there have not been additions to the church. Brother Hanes, of the West Virginia Christian who is acting as our special correspondent, believes that this movement has done a great deal of good towards the organized work of the state.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Good Work at Kirksville, Mo.

An excellent meeting was recently concluded at Kirksville, where Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, Ohio, assisted D. A. Wickizer. In three weeks there were 110 additions. Bruce Brown is known as an earnest gospel preacher without sensational methods, and he left the church strengthened in every way. Brother Wickizer has been with this congregation just fourteen months, and has found many faithful and earnest workers in its fold. The membership is now over 800, over 170 additions having been won in regular services since the present pastor took charge. With this meeting the record stands 280 additions in fourteen months. During this time over $3,200 was raised, $560 being given to missions. The church has just been arranging to have the building heated with hot water from the city heating plant.

New York and New Jersey.

The Disciples' Union of New York City held a mass meeting in the 56th Street church recently, the purpose being to bring the churches of Greater New York into line with our Centennial celebration. Brother Tharp, of Allegheny, came as our speaker and brought a most helpful message calculated to fire our hearts and enthuse us with greater zeal in the Master's service. Despite the terrific rain which continued most of the day, we had, I am told, the largest audience, save one, ever assembled by the Disciples' Union in this city. We think that this rally has done much to bring this extreme eastern district into touch, sympathy and co-operation with this, the greatest concerted effort ever made by our brotherhood.

Brother Rounds, of Crafton, Pa., has just been called to Flatbush, Brooklyn, and took up his new work October 21.

M. E. Harlan, of Sterling Place, Brooklyn, has been forced to resign on account of ill health, and thus another good church needs a pastor.

We are just located in our new field, and are well pleased with the people, place and general outlook. Miner Lee Bates is a good man to follow; the church is in splendid condition. Will any of our brethren knowing of Disciples coming into the territory of Greater New York, kindly send the address to me? I should also be grateful for information regarding any coming into New Jersey. Aside from our church here and a few brethren in Plainfield, there is not another organization of our people in the entire state. This ought not so to be. Such information as I have requested, if sent to the pastors in our great centers, would tend to stop a large leakage from our brotherhood. L. N. D. Wells.

Another Field Man.

It is with much pleasure that I announce that W. S. St. Clair, of Columbia, Mo., has been engaged by the Missouri Christian Bible School Association as field man for North Missouri. He will enter actively upon the work in a short time. It is believed that Brother St. Clair possess qualifications of a very high order for the work to which he has been appointed. Let our ministers and superintendents co-operate with him, in order that he may accomplish worthy things for the Lord's cause. Address him at Columbia.

Notes from Georgia's State Secretary.

Welcome to The Christian-Evangelist into Georgia. We shall miss our little home paper, but we shall soon become attached to the sweet-spirited, vigorous evangelist which will now visit us every week.

Our state convention is at hand. It meets in Valdosta, Nov. 19-22. Let every church send one or more delegates and let every preacher of the state be present. Reduced rates over the railroads have been secured. Buy your ticket at full price going and get a certificate from the agent. Get this certificate signed in Valdosta by the secretary, and you will get your return ticket at one-third rate. Two things remember: 1st. Get your certificate where you start. 2nd. Get it signed in convention at Valdosta.

Our program for the convention is good from start to finish. Monday night and Tuesday morning Brothers A. McLean and Dr. Osgood will have charge and conduct a missionary rally. No one should miss this. Every delegate should go on Monday and stay till Thursday night. Let us all pray for the convention and go to it to see our prayers answered.

If any church has not yet taken the offering for Georgia missions, take it next Sunday and send to me or Dr. C. C. Stockard, 275 Capitol Ave., Atlanta, Ga. Our reports must go to the printer by Nov. 15, and all offerings should be in by that time.

Meet me at Valdosta November 19.

P. S.—Don't fail to send me a report from your church.

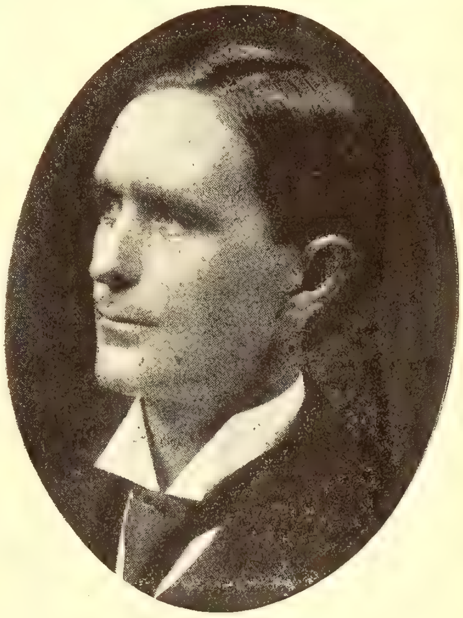
A Meeting at Waynesville, Ill.

J. A. Barnett, who has closed a successful pastorate of nearly three years with the church at Pekin, Ill., has just begun, before entering upon his new pastorate at Freeport in December, a special meeting with the church at Waynesville, Ill., where J. F. Smith is minister. The church considers itself fortunate in securing the services of one who is personally known to a large number of people in the community, and whose ability and successes assure the brethren of a treat of good things in a spiritual way. Brother Barnett is not only a forceful speaker and a fearless teacher of the truth, but he has the saving quality of not abusing people because they differ from him. During his ministry at Pekin there were 150 additions to the church, 70 of these being added in a revival which he himself conducted in February, 1905.



J. A. Barnett.

Although comparatively new in the field, Miss Manie B. Bowles, who is to help in this meeting, has had remarkable success as a singing evangelist. She is a musician of rare ability, having taken a lengthy course in a well known conservatory; but she decided to use her talents in singing the gospel. Her voice is a soprano of remarkable sweetness and power. Her last engagement was in a meeting with Evangelist Shearer at Heyworth, while she has twice assisted Brother Barnett in meetings that resulted in many additions. The church will be assisted in this evangelistic effort with copies of The Christian-Evangelist.

Columbia (Mo.) Bible College.

All the last year ministerial and missionary students have returned except Dr. Jennie Fleming, who has gone to Harda, India, with Dr. and Mrs. Drummond.——The new students are getting into regular places to preach.——On a recent Lord's Day four ministerial students reported fifteen additions.——Dr. Moore will soon begin a series of special lectures to the students.——Any church needing a preacher, within one hundred miles of Columbia, can be put in correspondence with a suitable one by writing me. It is a significent fact that all churches who are using student preachers are succeeding.——We are in correspondence with men of experience and ability, who will come to school if suitable churches can be found.

Louisiana.

Please allow me to congratulate and thank you for the splendid issue of October 11. It is just brim full of valuable information. I feel it is worth many times the subscription price of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.——Our work in the Pelican state is moving on slowly but surely, and permanently. We have lost one valuable worker, G. W. Wise, of Leesville, who has gone to Illinois. George did a good work and our prayers go with him.——Brother Taylor is getting into his work nicely with the Soniat avenue Church in New Orleans. We hear many good things said of his work. We look for great things from Soniat Church, for a live church and a live minister generally make things move.——H. M. Polsgrove closed his first year at Jennings with very gratifying results, and starts on his second year full of hope. Brother Polsgrove is a strong man and full of the spirit. So look for a great work at Jennings.——O. L. Hawkins, of Crowley, has done a wonderful work considering the time he has been with the church. Otis is a live man and has message fresh from the Book.——L. A. Betcher and his estimable wife are the Sunday school powers in Louisiana. They not only go out and hunt up the children and bring them into Sunday-school, but they carry them on into the church and then lead them on in usefulness. In fact, they get them started and never allow them to stop.——F. M. McCarthey is bishop of Monroe and Ruston. He is doing a work as only an Irishman can, dividing time between two of the most important towns of North Louisiana.——Roy Linten-Porter and the Lake Charles Church are up on the firing line. Brother Porter preaches, visits the sick and edits the "Louisiana Christian" and always finds time to meet his friends and never complains.——Claude L. Jones, of Shreveport, is a fixture. Shreveport would never be the same should Brother Jones leave. He is leading in every good work both in and out of the church.——John A. Stevens and wife are preaching in the wilderness, writing letters, baptizing men and women, and building churches.——The work at Hammond is moving on smoothly. We are all working and praying and paying to get our church out of debt on Thanksgiving day, so it will be a real thanksgiving to us all. Then the money can go on to other fields to build houses for struggling bands of brethren who have no house.——Hammond is on a building boom. Men who have retired from active life in the North are building homes in Hammond.

Use This Standard Adder FREE Until Satisfied It Will Save Its Own Cost

WRITE us on your business letter head, saying you are willing to test a Standard Adding Machine at our expense and risk, and we will send you one at once, all charges prepaid.

Use it until satisfied it will save its own cost.

If not satisfied, send the machine back. The trial won't cost you a penny. You won't be obligated.

Your book-keeper's brains are too valuable to be spent doing machine work.

And the time he might save with a "Standard" Adder could be given to more important work.

"The Standard" is the only adding machine that prints the figures in plain sight so you can read them at a glance.

Interruptions don't interfere with its accuracy.

You can work it faster than any other machine, because its construction is simple—its action direct.

And it is neither heavy nor ponderous. You don't have to leave it in one place, nor have a truck to move it about.

Your office boy can carry it with ease, and it can be used on a table, a desk, or in any convenient niche.

Take up our offer today. It won't cost much to deliver you a machine from one of our branches, and we will be glad to have you take us at our word. Let a Standard begin saving for you at once.

The price is only $185.00—less, by about half, than that of any other adding machine made.

If you will not be persuaded to try the Standard at our expense and risk, at least send for our testimonial Book.

Reading what others tell of the many ways they find use for the machine may show you how you can effect big economies in your own business.

Montana.

Our work in Montana has been organized for over twenty-six years. It dates from a meeting held by three of the leading brethren of the state, in the law office of Mossena Bullard in Helena. The progress of the work since that time has been hindered considerably by such causes as the terrible panic of 1893, but considering the many difficulties, Montana is able to make an excellent showing. The state is a mission field of the C. W. B. M., which organization is now supporting F. H. Groom as state evangelist. It is through the loyalty of the C. W. B. M. that the cause has been planted in such important cities as Butte, Helena, Anaconda, Missoula, Great Falls and Billings. The church at Corvallis, in the Bitter Root Valley, is the oldest in the state. Bozeman, Butte and Missoula churches are memorials, built by the various departments of the C. W. B. M., the latter being erected by the Junior builders. Bozeman church is the largest in the state.——The brethren of Montana are quite liberal. The entire membership is only about 1,500 and since last March there has been raised for state work over $1,100. And yet this amount is entirely inadequate for only about six of the twenty-three churches are able to support a minister without aid.——There are a number of strategic points yet to be occupied, Dillon, the seat of the state normal, Livingstone, Big Timber, Glasgow and other county seat towns.——The last state convention was held in Helena September 4-7 and was in many respects the best held since the work was organized. The following officers of the Montana Christian Association were elected for the ensuing year: Pres. S. W. Brown, Helena; vice-president, W. W. Beeman, Billings; corresponding secretary and evangelist, F. H. Groom, Helena; treasurer, E. Scharnikard, Deer Lodge. The next convention will be held in Billings in August, 1907.——Being the third state in the union in size, Montana is one of the most promising mission fields in America. Much of the desert land is being reclaimed, two Indian reservations are being opened with others soon to follow, and that with increased mining activities is bringing hundreds of immigrants to the state.——The C. M. & St. P. Railway, a great trunk line from the east, is building through from east to west on the way to the coast, and new towns are springing up. It is imperative that our great plea be heard constantly in this rapidly developing state, for a neglected opportunity now may require the work of years later on. The climate is as healthful as can be found anywhere and the mountain scenery surpasses description. Yellowstone park is a fair sample of what may be seen in many portions of the state. A strenuous effort to more firmly establish the primitive gospel in this great state now will certainly bring forth an abundant harvest in years to come.

F. H. GROOM.

From the Southwest.

Our work seems to be advancing. Will close a meeting to-night. Eleven additions under adverse circumstances.——We have a good church building and our Ladies' Aid Society will soon have money enough in the treasury to repaint and otherwise improve.——We have a large number of churches in this ("Panhandle") part of Texas and need several additional preachers. Our district and state boards are co-operating and we all look forward to better days. Our college at Hereford is under the efficient leadership of Pres. A. C. Elliott and has a twenty per cent larger attendance than last year. Jewell Howard is pushing ahead at Amarillo. J. N. Wooten, district secretary, is pastor at Hereford; Prof. Jno. V. Thomas is teaching and preaching at Pampa; J. P. Homes is preaching for the churches at Giles, Memphis, Estalline and Childress. J. C. Mullin is doing good work at Dalhart and Stratford. The field at Claude and Canyon City is in care of Brother Stockard, who is a master workman. Brother Nance is at Plainview. Just across in New Mexico we hear of good work being done. L. B. Grogan is at Tucumcari, C. C. Hill at Roswell. Texico and Carlsbad have ministers also.

Bible School Work in Southwest Missouri.

At an institute with the Carthage school a fine interest was manifested and it was voted to form a Teacher-Training Class. It is almost certain that Superintendent Williams and his competent corps of teachers will show us something worthy our attention. With the institute began a month's rally in preparation for a meeting to begin about the first of November by W. H. Pinkerton. Pastor Sims is greatly loved by the Carthage church and the people in general.——Our next point was the Newton county meeting in session the same week at Seneca. At one meeting the children from the public school with their teachers came in a body, filling the church with one of the most delightful audiences it has fallen to our lot to address for many a day. The county meeting was a success.——The Monett church has long been struggling under a debt which it sometimes seemed impossible for them to pay; but something over a year ago they called Robert Simons to be their minister. He went to work with the purpose to clear the debt. He secured the assistance of J. W. Baker who has shown such splendid powers of leadership, and they, with the spirit of self-denial stirred up in the hearts of the members of the congregation, succeeded in securing subscriptions to provide for the payment of the debt. These subscriptions are now falling due and as they are paid in the debt is being paid off. The congregation is already taking on new life as the result of this relief from the incubus of so many years. That church and our entire brotherhood in the state owe Brother Simons a debt of gratitude.——W. E. Marion is superintendent of the Monett school, and is preparing for a campaign for larger things. Mrs. Buxton spoke once during the Monett institute and also at a special gathering at South street, Springfield, under the auspices of the Officers and Teachers' union of that city.—J. H. Hardin, state superintendent, Kansas City, Mo.

Washington.

There are some churchless preachers and some preacherless churches in this state, and it is to be regretted. Every worthy minister ought to be kept busy. And churches practice poor economy and show little Christian spirit when they try to "get along" for months without a preacher.——I recently returned from a two months' visit in Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. A summer spent with friends of other days is a delight that is greatly appreciated. My family are all much benefited by the recreation and rest. Large audiences have greeted us since our return and we have welcomed six good additions to the church. These things and the royal public reception given us review the thought that the best part of a journey is the home coming.——Spokane churches are prospering under the ministry of Brethren Stevens and Allen. Tacoma First Church is busy erecting a new building and the "Central" church is reported as moving to a location nearer the body of the membership.——A beautiful bungalow, costing about $1,000, has been built by the little church at Wapato this summer. L. D. Green, who has preached for them since their organization by myself last January, planned the building and has led in its erection. J. T. Eshelman, of Tacoma, preached morning and afternoon to the delight and edification of all. A number of other ministers were present and took part in the exercises.——J. J. Handsaker and wife, returned missionaries from Jamaica, have taken charge of the church at Hoquiam and A. C. Vail has given up the evangelistic field and is now located at Ballard.——P. R. Burnett, who has served some of our churches in eastern Washington, and who is an able and worthy preacher, will soon be available for work. He ought not to be permitted to leave the state. We need such men here. The development of this state by means of new railroads now building and the rapid extension of the irrigation system under government direction and control, gives wonderful impetus to business, and it behooves the membership and ministry of the Church of Christ to prove true in this time of golden opportunity. The churches seem to be falling in line for 1909. These years should be the greatest in evangelistic and missionary effort of any in this glorious century.

Alabama Convention.

An excellent program has been arranged by the brethren of Alabama for their twenty-first annual meeting which will be held November 15-19, with the Christian church, Mobile, Ala. Claude E. Hill is the minister and the church will be found on the corner of Government and Dearborn streets. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free. Other meals will be served by ladies of the church. E. C. Anderson, president of the Alabama Christian Missionary Co-operation, will call the meeting to order at 7 o'clock on Thursday evening, November 15. The C. W. B. M. session will be held that evening. Friday will be Alabama Day, when the reports of the executive committee, and evangelists, and churches will be presented. There is to be a general discussion on "The State Field." W. R. Warren is to speak on "The Revelation of the State Work to Our Centennial Movement," while there will follow a general discussion on "What Alabama can do in Celebration of Our First Centennial." On this day George W. Muckley will speak on State Missions and Church Extension. There is to follow a general discussion on "How Can Better Results Be Secured With Present Men and Means, and How Can the Efficiency of These Be Increased?" A number of other interesting items are on the program for this day. On Saturday there will be reports of standing committees, nominations, etc. Among the speakers will be J. A. Lord on "Christian Liberty," George B. Ranshaw on "America for Christ." Mary Wisdom Grant of St. Louis, on "How I Teach a Bible Class," W. T. Moore on "The Education of Our Girls and Boys," and J. H. Garrison on "The Holy Spirit As Teacher and Monitor." On Sunday there will be preaching in many of the churches of the city. Among the speakers at special sessions will be W. T. Moore, J. H. Mohorter, A. McLean, and J. H. Garrison. The latter will speak on "The Present Status of Christian Unity." On Monday there is to be a preachers' open parliament, as well as a ladies' conference and business reports. Bro. J. W. Henry has been very busy in working up this convention which will not be interfered with by reason of the great storm through which Mobile recently passed. Claude E. Hill and the church there have sent out a very warm invitation to all the Disciples in Alabama to be present.

A Country Church Meeting.

A good meeting has just been held at Two-Mile Branch Christian church, Montgomery county, Mo. There were ten additions—nine by confession and baptism and one by letter. Brother Lawrence, of Muncie, Ind., labored faithfully for two weeks and the pastor of the church, David Millar of Belleflower, filled his regular appointment on the following Sunday and Monday night, after which O. Waldron Jennnings, of St. Louis, a representative of the Christian Publishing Co., took up the work for ten days, when there were six additions and an organization of a Y. P. S. C. E., with an enrollment of about 25 members, and a generally increased interest was the final result. The meeting was greatly assisted by the singing of N. M. Field and wife, of St. Louis.—O. Waldron Jennings.

A LUKEWARM CHURCH.—Rev. 3:14-22.

"Who at my door is standing,
Patiently drawing near?
Entrance within demanding,
Whose is the voice I hear?

"Sweetly his tones are falling,
'Open the door for me,
If thou wilt heed my calling,
I will abide with thee.' "

The familiar nausea produced by lukewarm food that is rejected with loathing expresses Christ's abhorrence for those lacking zeal in his service.

A minister once remarked to a celebrated atheist, "I do not see how you can have one moment's peace in the desperate state of atheism." The latter replied, "You are a greater surprise to me. If I believed what you profess, no zeal, no work, no sacrifice would seem sufficient to excuse me from responsibility for the eternal weal or woe of my fellowmen."

How happy this hungry-hearted race would be did it realize Jesus stands before every man as at a door seeking admission, and if sanctification has prepared for him a room will enter in and abide with each of us, and make us to be never lonely or afraid again. And how smiles would make rainbows glitter in our tears did we fully grasp the meaning of "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."

We are not to understand that in the fifteenth verse Jesus expresses a desire that any of the Laodiceans should be cold or indifferent towards him; he is rather looking forward to the judgment day regretting that when they appeared before him they could not even plead that they knew not the way of righteousness. He saw them belonging to a worse class, "which, after they had known it, turned from the holy commandment delivered unto them." On that great day how will all lukewarmness be deplored! Then neutrality will appear in its true light of open hostility to the King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

Laodicea, situated twenty miles from Ephesus and near Colosse. It was a wealthy city, its trade consisting chiefly in the preparing of woolen materials whose raven blackness and durable dyes made it famous. It was advantageously situated, too, on the high road leading from Ephesus into the interior. In common with other cities of Asia Minor, it was subject to earthquakes. It was the proud boast of Laodiceans that unlike Ephesus and Sardis they required no extraneous assistance to regain their former prosperity after these destructive shocks. As it is so often the case its material prosperity seems to have contributed rather to sinful pride than to gratitude and grace.

The importance of this church continued many years. In Col. 4:16 we learn the epistle was equally written to the Laodiceans. The celebrated council of Laodicea was held there in A. D. 361, and a century later its bishop held a prominent position among the ecclesiastics of his time, but soon after its influence began to wane and it fell under the oppression of the Turks. In Col. 2:48 and 1:8 we learn false doctrines were lurking in the church and being cherished by the membership. The warnings of John and Paul were unheeded. Under these circumstances its ruin was natural and inevitable. The heresy-hunting spirit is deplorable but complacency in the midst of heresy is disaster.

Intemperance in tennis, novel reading, traveling, entertaining, home keeping, conversation, or artistic pursuits may not be as disgraceful as wine bibbing, but does become a sad reproach to the Christian character of many otherwise exemplary church members.

If wine inspires to social diversion, it is to an indecent dance like Salome's; if to art, it is to pictures or statuary mothers wish their sons to pass by on the other side; if to idealism, it is of the sort whose perfect expression is in the under world; if to either eternity, it is where the fire is not quenched and the worm dieth not.

Much has been said of Christ's turning water into wine. His Father did the same before Jesus' pilgrimage through Palestine. He does it to-day and hangs the wine in purple buckets on thousands of hillsides and mountain terraces. And if men would drink only the kind of wine Jesus made at Cana and that God makes to-day, temperance reformers could take up a new propaganda.

When the churches devote the time and vitality now spent on maintaining denominational prerogatives and party organization to the overthrow of the great iniquities and the redemption of men from the despotism of Satan men will cease buying rum, others will cease making it, and the curse will exist only in history and there as a horrid illustration of the depravity of sin.

He that transgresseth by wine is one "who enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death and cannot be satisfied." He that thirsteth after righteousness shall never be satiated and yet he shall be satisfied, while he that thirsteth for wine or other distillations tinctured with the spirit of Satan finds himself the victim of desires growing ever more intense, never more satisfied by indulgence than flames are by fuel, that can not be quenched by tears or blood, and that constitute the horrors of living death.

Apologists for drunkenness have succeeded in arousing a maudlin sentiment of sympathy for some drunkards on the ground that they inherited an irresistible disposition to intemperance. Yet the sisters of these degenerates with the same blood flowing through their veins are shining lights in the church. The power of heredity for evil has been vastly exaggerated. It can always be resisted by those who will struggle unto blood. Upon the father was visited the iniquity of his own sins and the sons will be held strictly accountable for their own.

A panther is loose in the haunts of men,
Strong, crafty, and cruel, and none may know
What wooded valley shall hold his den,
Or by what paths he will come and go.
In the shade tree boughs he may lie concealed,
In wayside brambles, in flowery dell;
The father has taken his gun afield,
And the mother watches the children well.
Birth, beauty and talent before him fall.
He conquers the mighty again and again;
Will you guard by law King Alcohol?
Will you set a price on the souls of men?
You would save the child from the panther's jaws,
Will you leave him now to a fate far worse?
The strength of God for a righteous cause,
Arise! and conquer the liquor curse!

JESUS BEFORE CAIPHAS.—Matt. 26:57-68.

Memory verses, 67, 68.

Golden Text.—He was despised and rejected of men.—Isa. 53:3.

The trial of Jesus, as recorded by the four evangelists, may be considered under the following simple analysis:

I. The Jewish Trial.
  1. Before Annas (at night).
  2. Before Caiaphas (at night).
     Buffetting and mockery.
     Peter's denial.
  3. Before the council (early morning).

II. The Roman Trial.
  1. Before Pilate (morning).
  2. Before Herod.
     Mockery.
  3. Before Pilate again.
     Scourging.
     Delivery to mob.
     Mockery.

No one can read the Gospel narrative, or glance at such an outline as the above without feeling at once that the trial was no trial at all, in any legal sense. It was an effort of cruel and vindictive men to murder an innocent enemy without rendering themselves liable for an act of violence.

The trial began with an illegal and unauthorized arrest in the garden. It continued with a session before Annas, who held no office which gave them jurisdiction in such a case, an illegal midnight session before the high priest and the council, a meeting of the council in the morning to give some color of legality to the transactions of the night. Before Pilate there were no witnesses except a murderous mob, no charges except such as were palpably false, no condemnation except the sentence: "I am innocent of the blood of this righteous man. See ye to it." From beginning to end there was a series of physical outrages and mockeries which wholly ignored the rights of the prisoner.

The examination of Jesus before Caiaphas, the high priest, was not a trial. It was an eager effort to secure evidence which would prove the prisoner guilty under the Jewish law. No one here is thinking of loyalty to Caesar or the apparently dangerous claim to kingship. Blasphemy is the charge. This, if honestly made, was not necessarily an unreasonable charge. The words and deeds of Jesus were either blasphemous or true. If he did not actually have that close relationship to God which he claimed, then he was guilty of blasphemy in claiming it.

The accusation based on Jesus' statement that he would destroy the temple and build it in three days, was of a piece with the other wilful misunderstandings of his utterances. It was not altogether strange that they did not understand such a saying. Their fault was in making no real effort to understand it.

When the high priest asked Jesus if he were the Christ, the Son of God, he admitted it, and spoke of his future coming in glory. This was the climax of his blasphemy, in the eyes of his enemies, because it was the climax of the truth about himself. The world must ultimately range itself under one or two banners, either the banner of the one who said that he was "the Christ the Son of God," or that of his accuser who declared that such a statement was blasphemy.

CHEAP TRIP TO EGYPT

A select party will sail in February for a three months' tour of the Bible Lands and Europe. Very special low rates are being offered to a few desirable persons who should write at once if at all interested in such a trip at little cost. The itinerary is now ready and a copy will be sent on request. The party will be personally conducted by Rev. James Vernon, of Winchester, Indiana. Mr. Vernon is quite familiar with the countries to be visited, having been there often. Every responsibility and expense will be cared for by the

"A New Idea."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

A preacher whose name is quite familiar to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST under the above caption, says: "A preacher in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of recent date has given to the world a new idea, that a man may have a Christian character and not be a Christian."

Now, if I were that preacher, I would like to reply to this preacher that he has given to the world an old idea. That Christian character "is that very thing that makes him a Christian." It is at least as old as the forming of that body of religious people wearing the name "CHRISTIAN CHURCH," and making "Christian character" the one condition of membership. They are consistent. They say Christian character is "that very thing that makes them Christians," and they open their doors to all recognized by them as being Christians.

Brother Editor, is your contributor as consistent? Will he take an unbaptized person with a Christian character into the local church for which he preaches? If he should do such a thing he would soon learn that he had introduced a "new idea" that would deprive him of a pulpit among our people.

The Apostle Peter at the home of Cornelius thought evidently it took something beside Christian character to make one a Christian.

May I ask that good man and preacher a question or two, that he may answer in your columns?

Is a man a Christian who is not "in Christ?" In order to get in Christ, is it yet necessary to be "baptized into Christ?" To the Galatian Christians, Paul said, "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Since Paul's day have we a "new idea," or revelation that the man who has a Christian character has already "put on Christ" and that it is "that very thing by which he has put on Christ?"

Is a man a Christian who is not in the Kingdom of God?

Can a man enter into the kingdom of God except he be born of water and the Spirit?

The preacher says: "I frequently meet an old soldier minus an arm or a leg. Does this defect outlaw him as a man or as a citizen or a patriot?"

No, sir. It emphasizes his manliness and patriotism. But the loss of that arm or leg did not make him a soldier. Do you think it did? That is your line of argument on what makes a man a Christian.

[Brother Jones' argument was that as these maimed soldiers were men in spite of their physical defects so a true believer may be a Christian in spite of some defect in the forms of his obedience.—EDITOR.]

The United States had a plan by which men were made soldiers. A citizen enlisted and was sworn in. Then the citizen became a soldier.

"The Pope of Rome with his claims to infallibility in his interpretations of Scripture, is not without his rivals even among Protestants." Agreed.

But who is this rival of the Pope? The man who brings out a "new idea" that the Scriptures do not teach.

Tricked by Dyspepsia

The Doctor Couldn't Tell Where The Trouble Lay.

"For the past seven years I have been a victim of dyspepsia and chronic constipation and have consulted the most noted specialists to be found on diseases of this character. None, however, seemed to locate the difficulty or give relief. In addition to this medical treatment, I have resorted to the use of many remedies and have given them faithful trial, but all to no purpose.

Upon the recommendation of a close friend, I purchased a 50c package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and in less than five days' notice that I was receiving more benefit than from any remedy I had used before. I continued to use the tablets after each meal for one month and by that time my stomach was in a healthy condition, capable of digesting anything which my increasing appetite demanded.

I have not experienced any return of my former trouble though three months have elapsed since taking your remedy."

We wish that you could see with your own eyes the countless other bona-fide signed letters from grateful men and women all over the land who had suffered years of agony with dyspepsia, tried every known remedy and consulted eminent specialists without result, until they gave Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial. Like the doctor above, they couldn't locate the seat of the trouble.

Dyspepsia is a disease which has long baffled physicians. So difficult of location is the disease that cure seems next to miraculous. There is only one way to treat dyspepsia—to supply the elements which nature has ordained to perform this function and to cause them to enter the digestive organs, supplying the fluids which they lack. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets alone fill these requirements, as is shown by the fact that 40,000 physicians in the United States and Canada unite in recommending them to their patients for stomach disorders.

We do not claim or expect Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to cure anything but disordered conditions of the stomach and other digestive organs, but this they never fail to do. They work upon the inner lining of the stomach and intestines, stimulate the gastric glands and aid in the secretion of juices necessary to digestion.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box. One box will frequently effect a perfect cure. If in doubt and wish more adequate proof send us your name and address and we will gladly mail you a sample package free. F. A. Stuart Co., 61 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

As I read my Bible it takes Christian character plus putting on Christ to make a Christian. My Bible says: (and I do not have to interpret it, just read it), we put on Christ in baptism. These I recognize as Christians, and prove it by receiving them into the local church.

Whom do you receive? E. L. FRAZIER.
Morristown, Ind.

The Home Department

Lord, give the mothers of the world
  More love to do their part;
That love which reaches not alone
The children made by birth their own,
  But every childish heart.
Wake in their souls true motherhood,
Which aims at universal good.

Lord, give the teachers of the world
  More love, and let them see
How baser metals in their store
May be transformed to precious ore
  By love's strange alchemy.
And let them daily seek to find
The childish heart beneath the mind.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART IV.

CHAPTER IV.

On the back of the envelope was written, "For Raymund, or Rhoda." Raymund tore it open with trembling hands, and having turned that his face might be hidden from the bank officials, he read his mother's letter.

"My darling: You see I call you so, though I do not know whether this is Rhoda or Raymund. Whichever it is, God bless, you! As I write this, I think it may never be read. It is only to be read now, if something which you cannot explain has come between my darlings. If such a difference has arisen, something maybe that you cannot understand, then read on to the end. I need not tell you how much I love you as I write. And I think as you read, I will be looking down with love from my last dear home. I told you there is a secret in our little family. It is this:" Raymund had reached the bottom of the first page. He turned it over and continued, "Only one of you is my very own child. The other one is adopted. When your father and I moved to St. Louis, we were very poor, but if your father's health had not failed, all would have gone well. We boarded on Washington avenue in a simple and cheap place. While there, a young couple came to lodge, a Mr. and Mrs. White. They had run away from home to marry, because Mr. White's father was opposed to the match. Mr. White's father was a very rich man; he lives in New York. They had come all the way, and young Mr. White, who was a lawyer, soon spent his little fortune. Your father and I loved them and did what we could to get Mr. White practice, but that was little, indeed. We were all attending the same church. My dear, have you come into the church? If you have not, take this as the warning and admonition of your dead mother who hopes to meet you with your father in heaven—that if you do not confess the name of Jesus before the people, God will not acknowledge you before the angels."

Amazed as Raymund was by the intelligence conveyed in the letter, he could not but murmur below his breath grateful thanks that both he and Rhoda were Christians. He continued the letter: "One thing helped to bind us and the Whites very closely together, our child and their child were born on the very same day. They wrote to the hard-hearted parents in New York—the father, their only near relative. The elder Mr. White sent back the letter unopened. A year later they wrote to him again and this time the letter was not returned. We did not know if it was ever read. The letter informed Mr. White that his grandchild was a year old, but Mrs. White who wrote the letter, did not think to tell him whether it was a boy or a girl. We were very intimate. The Whites—we called each other by our first names—were the same kind of people we were. When you were three years old, one of the little darlings took the diphtheria. We hung over it day and night. Your father took it; so did Mr. and Mrs. White. All three died within fifteen days. I was left with my own child and with the other. They looked so much alike—the same color of eyes and hair—and they were both so sweet and dear and helpless—and born on the same day, I determined to raise you both as if you were my own children. I made no difference between you. I feel sure you could never have suspected the truth. There was one difficulty. Those at the boarding-house knew the truth. It is possible that one or more of them may some day meet you and tell you how it was. That is why I am writing this letter. There is another consideration: Old Mr. White is very rich. Our Mr. White was his only near relative. Of course his grandchild would inherit his money unless there is another marriage or a will. It may be necessary at some day to declare which one of you is his grandchild. There is still another possibility, though this I do not anticipate; should a cloud ever fall upon either of you, the one might wish to prove himself or herself of no kin to the other. This letter proves it. You are in no way related to each other, save by love.

"And now, my darling, should you still want to know which one of you is my very own child, go to that St. Louis boarding-house, whose number is at the bottom of this page, and ask permission to enter the second chamber of the cellar—where the coal was kept in our day. In the northeast corner of that cellar, directly beneath the second beam from the north end, there is buried a bronze vase. When you, my very own child, were two years old, Mr. and Mrs. White presented it to you as a birthgift. Around the upper surface of the pedestal is carved your name. I do not tell you here, whether that name is Raymund or Rhoda. If you must know, go and see for yourself. Whichever it is, is the name of very own child, and the one whose name is not upon that vase, is the heir or heiress of Mr. White of New York." The letter concluded with words of tender affection too sacred for any one save the one for whom the letter was intended.

Raymund left the bank, and although the day was cold and the fields white with snow, he set forth upon a long country walk. He desired to reflect upon what he had read, and he felt it necessary to be entirely alone. He read his mother's letter again and again. He grew to know parts of it by heart. The two important facts it contained were stamped vividly upon his mind: Rhoda was not really his sister; and on the bronze vase was the name of Mrs. Revore's only child! Was it his name? Was it Rhoda's name? He brought back his mother's voice—her tone and words—the look on her face—he remembered her tenderness and self-sacrifice. Surely she was his mother. Oh, it must be that he, not Rhoda, was the only child! He now thought he understood why Rhoda had changed toward him. She had learned they were not related. But how had she learned this? The bank president had assured him that the tin box had remained untouched since its deposit. How could Rhoda know? If she did not know, her change was inexplicable. But if she had in some way discovered the truth, the change was natural. She had shrunk from his embraces and kisses because he was not her brother. All alone in the wintry scene he wept because Rhoda was not really his sister. "But my mother!" he exclaimed aloud, "I am sure of her! I know she was my mother. I will never give up that belief, never!"

Although he had intended, when coming to Crawley, to visit the various men who were his mother's creditors, he felt in his highly-wrought condition that he did not want to meet any one. He returned to Kansas City the same day, and sent drafts to Mr. Walker, Mr. Jennings and the others. Every cent of the old debts were now paid, he wrote Rhoda; but he did not tell of his trip to Crawley nor of the tin box. He must be with her face to face while relating that news. After Christmas week, the Geisthausers were resumed. Raymund worked so hard upon the improvement of their minds that at night as he and Jack sat about the coaloil stove in the little back room, clad in their overcoats, and pretending it yas "warm enough" in order to save the coaloil, there was little time to brood over his discovery. Besides, Raymund was not the sort of a man who broods over truths no matter how unwelcome. Already he accepted the facts of his mother's letter as final. Rhoda was not his sister! The bronze vase held the secret upon its pedestal! Jack was doing fairly well with his studies, and even better with Nelsie Loraine. His open and joyous disposition, his frank acceptance of life's hardships, and his ability to skim along the heights of life and jump its hollows, were attractive to the daughter of the millionaire. They were so different that she found him interesting. He was not, of course, a young man whom Mrs. Omer could have considered for a moment as a possible son-in-law. But Jack felt that if, in a few years, he could rise in his profession, and if Nelsie Loraine cared for him and would wait, everything might come out all right. "Anyhow," said Jack, as he humped himself over the coaloil stove and gnawed hungrily at a sapless herring, "I'm going to enjoy the days I have now, and if is isn't as pleasant later on, it'll be time enough to kick, then." I am sorry Jack used this slang, but you couldn't have been with him very long without hearing a little of that sort of thing; and he had to be in this story—he was needed.

When summer came, the Geisthausers claimed a much needed rest, and Raymund and Jack went home together. They had scarcely taken their seats in the car when a well-dressed man in a tall silk hat touched Raymund on the shoulder, "Mr. Revore," he said, "pardon me; I am Horace Bridgewaite. Will you be seated with me a moment? I have a little business to discuss with you." Raymund followed him, wondering.

"You do not know me," said the soothing voice, "but you are an old acquaintance of mine. In fact, I boarded with you and your—hum! But I go too fast. Perhaps it may be news to you to know that Rhoda is not—"

"I do not know you," Raymund interrupted with displeasure, "or why you should be interested in my affairs."

"You do not know me?" cried Mr. Bridgewaite. "You do not know Horace Bridgewaite? My dear young sir! it is my business to be interested in other people's affairs. That is how I make my living. No detail is too slight for me. Since a young man, I have made it my habit to learn everything I could about whomever I met. Sir, there is money in knowing things, there is much money!"

"There is no money in knowing anything about me," returned Raymund, half-rising, "and I do not care to discuss Rhoda with a promoter. And I do not think you can promote me!"

"Do not be sure, do not be too sure," said the soothing voice, as the man of the tall hat, laid a well-kept hand upon his coatsleeve. "You know Rhoda is not your sister?"

"I do," said Raymund coldly. The other was so astonished by this admission that Raymund felt rather sorry for him and sank back into the seat. The promoter said when he had recovered, "And-do-do you know which of you inherits Mr. White's money."

"I am sure I do not," said Raymund, "for I feel certain that I am Raymund Revore."

"Ah, then you do not know!" cried the promoter triumphantly. "But I can prove that you are not her own son, and Rhoda is her own child; you are the heir to Mr. White's millions! What do you think of that? I can prove it. My young sir, there is money in knowing things! Mr. White has left his fortune to a hospital and a school in case his grandchild is not found—the will is in all the papers—but it is not known if his grandchild is a boy or girl, and it is not even suspected that you are in Missouri. My dear sir, you are that heir, and I can prove it! And if you will place a thousand dollars in my hands, I will turn you over a fortune of two millions!"

"Since it is in your power to hand me over this fortune," remarked Raymund, "why not keep out a thousand, or ten thousand, and hand over the balance."

"I do not do business that way," said the promoter. "My system demands that the customer shall pay down."

"Well, as I'm not a customer, you must excuse me," said Raymund. "I suppose your proof rests upon the bronze vase, does it not?"

For a second time the promoter was staggered. Seeking to hide his chagrin, he said, "Of course the bronze vase is a valuable clew. But reflect that I was boarding at that house on Washington Avenue at the time. I was at the breakfast table when Mr. White gave Rhoda the vase. It has your name on it. The following inscription was intended: 'From Raymund to Rhoda.' But through a mistake the rest of the engraving was not done. Your father, Mr. White, always meant to finish it; but he died when you were only three, and when Mrs. Revore adopted you, of course she didn't want the inscription changed. I was quite a friend of the Revores, and Mrs. Revore and I, after the sad epidemic, decided it would be a good thing to bury that vase as a clew in future years, should a proof ever be needed. It has never been disturbed. If you will go with me there, taking witnesses, that bronze vase will prove you a millionaire. Only a thousand down, young sir, only a thousand down to encourage me in the enterprise. Ah, my dear young sir, you will find out that I am well aware of that which I do speak, when I say that there is money in knowing things!"

Why Are You Deaf?

Don't You Know It IS NOW Possible to Help at Least 90 Per Cent of Those Whose Hearing Is Defective?

And In Some Cases to Restore Completely Lost Hearing.

George P. Way is the man who has made this possiible. For 25 years Mr. Way suffered from deafness. Finally, after much study and experimenting, he perfected a small artificial ear drum. Mr. Way wears these drums all the time. Without them he is deaf. With them he hears perfectly.

The "Way Ear Drums" are made from a peculiarly sensitized material moulded to fit in the auditory canal and are entirely invisible. Note the peculiiar shape—the end farthest from the drum is open and as the sound waves are caught they are carried to the taperinig point which touches the natural drum. In this way all the force of the sound wave is concentrated at one point of the drum and if the auditory nerve is not completely destroyed (and this is very seldom the case) you cannot help but hear.

SHOWING POSITION OF DRUM IN THE EAR

Another feature of the Way Ear Drum is a resilient ring formed by the curve, just before the drum tapers to a point. This absolutely prevents the drum collapsing in the ear. Yet these drums are so soft and pliable that they cannot injure the most delicate ear passage. U. S. and foreign patents have been granted the Way Ear Drums.

If you have any trouble with your hearing, write Mr. Way—tell him the cause of your deafness and how long you have been deaf.

Remember, you are not asked to take any "treatment," you run no risk of using something which might leave you worse than before its use. You are simply asked to investigate a mechanical device perfected after years of study, by a deaf man who by his own skill and research now hears perfectly. Address your letters to GEO. P. WAY, 1126 Majestic Building, Detroit, Michigan.

Madeline's Message.

It would not have seemed so terrible, Madeline's friends told each other, if only Madeline had not from a child so exulted in the mere joy of motion. But to think of Madeline—Madeline—robbed in one cruel moment of all that eager, abounding life, and condemned for whatever years were left to her to an invalid's couch and constant suffering!

If, they said to each other, she had died and never known! But she had to know, and very soon. When, broken-hearted, her mother answered her questions, the girl asked to be left alone a while "to think it out." And the mother, knowing that it must be, closed the door and left her alone—in her wilderness.

The struggle lasted three days, while the mother waited and suffered with her. In those days Madeline went over and over it all—her happy past, the merry walk from school that windy afternoon, the sudden blow from a falling branch—and then the strange, dark world of imprisonment and pain. She would see no one in those days, not even the old minister who had loved her all her life.

"Tell him I've got to fight it out alone" she said. "He'll understand."

He did understand—they all did. And at last one morning Madeline drew her mother's face down to her's.

"It's all right, dear," she said. "Tell the girls I want them to come—everybody. Tell them they needn't think they can leave me out—I won't be left."

Everybody came eagerly, for Madeline's sake first; and very soon they were coming for their own. Madeline's room to all the "old crowd," and to others, who one by one found their way in, became the place where one turned instinctively with joy or hope or sorrow. And true to her word, Madeline did not let herself be "left out." She learned every kind of light and pretty work that weak hands could do; she kept up with all the new books, the latest interests, even the fashions. More than one pretty party gown was planned in Madeline's room.

"You may go to parties," she would laugh, "but parties come to me all the time."

In those twelve years that Madeline waited in her prison, she seldom, as the girls said, "talked religion," but soon after she knew what life would be to her she had a motto illuminated and hung at the foot of her bed. It was the old command to a people entering a strange land—"Be strong and of good courage, for the Lord thy God is with thee."

Madeline's eyes so often rested upon this as she talked that her friends began to notice it. And then they remembered that from the day Madeline's door had been opened to them no one had ever heard her complain.

But it was not until Madeline had gone that they understood what she had done for them. Rose Kenton began it by telling of a fine time when she was discouraged over her failure as a nurse.

"Madeline didn't pity me," she said. "She only said, 'Dear, there's always something left. One can always be brave, and—one doesn't have to be brave alone.' And when I thought of her and of her motto, I tell you, girls, I had to brace up."

Other experiences followed. One knew how George Alvord had gone to Madeline when Edith Marlow broke her engagement with him; another knew of one who had gone in the deep failure of sin, and many there were who had sought her in the loneliness death had made. To all her message had been the same. "One can always be brave—and one doesn't have to be brave alone."

He Swelled Up.

A little girl went for the first time to church with her mother. All went well during the service (Episcopal), but the child grew uneasy during the sermon, which was a long one.

The mother tried every way to keep the little girl quiet, but in vain.

Finally the child observed that the preacher had a pompous way of inflating his chest and lungs at a new paragraph or head. Just as the mother was assuring the child that the preacher would soon stop, he did, for another start, and the tired child burst out on her mother's assurance—"No, he won't; he's swelling up again."—*From the Rev. Kinder and sweeter-hearted,
Perhaps in some near by and by
A good time might get started;
Then what a happy world 'twould be
For you and me—for you and me!
Speak gently! 'tis a little thing
  Dropped in the heart's deep well:
The good, the joy, that it may bring,
  Eternity shall tell.

The Passion Flower.

This interesting flower, which has been specially cultivated in Gethsemane, beyond the Vale of Kedron, has been for many years looked upon by the Christian church as most symbolic of the passion of our Lord. Ten leaves, large, white, faintly tinted with violet, form the calyx. These are supposed to represent the ten commandments—the "outer court." In the center of the calyx we find a golden radiating circle. This represents the Sun of Righteousness that in the night of the dear Saviour's birth arose upon the world—the "holy place." Within the flower we find the implements of torture, hammer, nails, etc., used in the crucifixion. These represent the painful and atoning sufferings of our blessed Lord—the "holy of holies." This wonderful flower is sometimes called the "Rose of the South."—Selected.

A Failure of Contract.

Bishop Wilmer, of Alabama, was once asked by a colored man what he would charge to marry him just like white folks.

"Why," said the Bishop, "if you will get the wedding ring and meet me at the church, I'll marry you for—for five dollars just exactly like I do white folks."

"All right, sir," the darkey replied, "I'll get the ring and be at the church to-morrow morning at 6 o'clock."

The next morning, in the dim light, the Bishop, fully robed, stood in the chancel and read in his impressive voice the marriage service of the Episcopal church, joining together two loving hearts and dusky hands in the holy estate of matrimony, and blessed them as they knelt at the chancel-rail. When they arose, the groom paused for an instant as if in keen expectation of something further, then turned and hurried the bride away.

"Hold, John, wait a moment;" cried the Bishop, "where is that five dollars?"

"'Scuse me, Bishop," replied the groom, with deep disappointment in his tone, "but you ain't carried out the full contract."

"Not carried out the contract? What do you mean, sir? I said I'd marry you for five dollars just like white folks, and I have done it word for word," cried the justly indignant Bishop.

"Dere's one t'ing you've left out, sir," persisted the groom.

"And what is that, pray?"

"I notice, sir, dat you ain't salute de bride!"

For a minute the Bishop was stunned; then a great light of supreme amusement shone over his face, and he cried, "All right, John; that's all right about the five dollars, you just keep it—and I wish you much joy!"—Claude Roberts.

Canine Intelligence.

That a policeman on night duty in a great city would be more respected by criminals if accompanied by a powerful and sagacious dog, is a reasonable supposition; yet it remained for little Belgium to carry out this innovation in Antwerp, Ghent, Mons, Bruges and Ostend—an innovation which has now spread to other parts of Europe.

As time went on and the number of dogs was increased, it became apparent that night crimes, even in the worst quarters of Ghent, almost disappeared. Cunning ruffians had often contrived to outwit the soldiery patrol, but these big, swift, silent-footed and sagacious sheep-dogs inspired terror in the most desperate evil-doers.

The night service of the city is now made by about 120 guards, assisted by 50 or 60 perfectly trained dog police. The city is divided into 120 sections, so arranged that man and dog can always count on their neighbors' support if occasion should arise. Careful check is kept upon the men, that they visit every yard of their beat; but even if the men are inclined to shirk their work, the dogs will keep them to it. If the night guards are used by day, they get extra pay, and a corresponding number of hours is taken from their next night watch.

Relating the achievements of his dogs, M. Van Wesemeal told of an arrest by one of them named Beer. One night Beer came upon five drunken fellows wrecking a saloon on the outskirts of the city. The men were making a great uproar, and a resolute resistance to the law was feared. Beer's muzzle was removed, and the fine animal sprang forward without a sound. When the patrol reaches the spot, four of the men had fled, and Beer was clutching the fifth by the leg. The moment the officer appeared, Beer gave up his prisoner, and was off like the wind on the trail of the fugitives. The patrol followed with his prisoner, guided by a series of short, sharp barks. Presently he came upon the other four, who had turned at bay and were trying to keep dauntless Beer from tearing them to pieces. Thoroughly frightened—sobered even—the men offered to give themselves up if Beer were controlled and muzzled. This was promptly done, though not without a little protest from Beer, and the procession started for the central police bureau, with the victorious Beer, now at liberty to give vent to his joy, barking and racing round his prisoners, exactly as if they had been a flock of sheep.

Tom is another dog no less alert. One winter night in a quiet street near the docks he met a man with a sack. Tom was alone at the moment, but as both sack and man seemed queer to him, he gave the alarm, repudiating all attempts at anxious conciliation. In a minute or two Tom's colleague came along and asked about the sack. The explanation being somewhat lame, the man was invited to the police bureau. There he confessed that he had stolen a piece of beef and several dozen eggs from a small store on the outskirts of the city.

Tippo is another terror to burglars. He is a record racer of great weight and strength, long and lean of fang, a fast swimmer, a high jumper and so daring that not even point-blank revolver-shots will turn him from his duty. He has been wounded more than once and has narrowly escaped death.—The October Century.

—All books we sell of our own publication are of the very best grade. Among the premiers of this class is "Christian Union" by Editor Garrison, postpaid, $1.00.

—"John Doe, Sept. '06," on the yellow label of your paper means that John should send us $1.50 immediately, thus paying for his CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST until September 1, 1907.

—Hoping it will bring us 5,000 new subscriptions within the next thirty days, we offer an excellent stereoscope and fifty high-class views for two new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST accompanied by $3.00. This premium will make an excellent Christmas gift.

—Are our preachers provident and enterprising? Some are—they sent us one new subscription and the $1.50 and secured "Helps to Faith" by Editor J. H. Garrison. Then they sent us another new subscription and secured as a premium "Victory of Faith" by E. L. Powell. Four thousand other preachers ought to avail themselves of this opportunity before January 1, 1907.

—Our Thanksgiving number will be a magnificent magazine of fifty-two pages. We will print all the people want. Single copies, 5c.; 6 for 25c.; and 50 to one address for $1.00. Orders will be filed and filled in order as received. Write us at once, enclosing remittance for this imperial number of America's best religious journal.

—A gratifying feature of the remarkable increase in the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is that it is not being accomplished at the expense of any of our contemporaries. All our church papers are reporting gratifying numerical growth. Our special aim is a Christian paper in every Christian home and we much prefer being a pioneer than a supplanter.

—Few children are thoroughly indoctrinated into the principles of this Restoration in the home and none are in the world. If done at all it will be in the Bible school. It can not be done even there if the colorless interdenominational lesson helps are used. We commend those prepared by William Worth Dowling, one of the most loyal and scholarly living Disciples.

—For twenty years an invaluable annual contribution this house has made to Bible school literature is W. W. Dowling's Christian Lesson Commentary. The 1907 volume is superb as respects its mechanical construction, skilful massing of helps, and scholarly interpretation of scripture. We recommend it as a Christmas gift by pupils to teacher, children to parents, schools to superintendents, churches to pastors. $1.00.

—While a larger percentage than usual of last week's new subscriptions came singly and in pairs at the regular $1.50 rate, we are pleased to report the following new clubs:

—"Christian Union," by J. H. Garrison, is far more than a republication of his editorial serial. Every article has been elaborated, and one entire new chapter has been added, and there has been a re-arrangement of matter. The book treats one of the livest subjects now before Christendom, and is certain to be widely read. Its statement of the present federation movement, its meaning and necessity, is a timely contribution to a better understanding of this great forward stride towards Christian unity.

—"Gloria in Excelsis" is a beautiful and complete hymnal. The hymns and tunes and chants have been judiciously selected. The responsive Scripture readings and the forms of words for special occasions add much to the value of the book. These will prove helpful to many. The editor-in-chief has spared no pains and no expense to produce a work that will meet all the needs of worship in the church and in the home. The printer and binder have done good work. This hymnal deserves and will doubtless secure a very wide sale.—A. McLean. Cincinnati, Ohio.

—Here is a list of excellent and acceptable Christmas gifts that may be secured as premiums by those securing subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: For one new subscription, large print New Testament; for two, large print New Testament bound in Morocco; or the American Kitchen set—bread knife, steel, large and small paring knives, cake turner and egg spoon, or an excellent stereoscope with 50 high grade pictures; for three, a seven-piece Gold Coin Initial Fruit Set—very beautiful; for five, a $2.50 gold piece, or half dozen plated silver teaspoons. We have other beautiful, valuable premiums. In an afternoon's canvass anyone can secure one or more of these premiums making acceptable Christmas presents to their friends; and at the same time blessing the home where the paper is placed.

Good News.

—In the publishers' notes of a recent CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST appeared the statement that the circulation of the paper had increased 30½ per cent since Oct. 1, 1905. This is cheering news for several reasons. For twenty years I have been one of its readers and have received much help in my ministry. It is easier now than ever before to induce people to take a religious paper. The increased circulation means several things:

1. The increase of interest in the extension of the kingdom. The church wants to know the work for the Lord being done. It is concerned not only with the record of the victories in the first century but also of the twentieth century. The record of great meetings stirs the soul and promotes renewed activity.

2. The desire for such a publication in the home. It is a help to the parents in the education of the children. The daily is filled with the record of evil deeds and can never take the place of the religious paper.

3. The increased circulation of this particular paper is evidence of heroic efforts in the subscription department. It requires peculiar talents to keep a publication to the front—both in the editorial and subscription departments. Hard work, an extended acquaintance, and business sense is required.

4. The church has confidence in the policy of the paper to herald a full Gospel. The high plane of its editorials and the general tone of it all meets with the approval of the many.

Interest is being aroused. Some are acting. Others are carefully considering. The friends of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society can be counted upon to do what is right. Now is the time to act!

IMPORTANCE OF SECURING LAND

Now on the foreign mission fields can hardly be overestimated. Land is rapidly advancing in value in all these countries, as it is wherever the Gospel is preached. Land the Foreign Society bought in Asia ten years ago is now worth many times what was paid for it. If we do not secure land and lots we need now, we will be compelled to pay much more in the near future.

The need in China and Japan and India and the Philippines and Africa—in a word, all our mission fields, is most pressing.

Our motto should be: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." The children of light should be as wise as the children of this world.

NEXT WEEK WE HAVE A WORD TO SAY ABOUT THE IMPORTANCE OF MISSION HOMES.

We ask the hearty, liberal and prompt co-operation of the readers of The Christian-Evangelist. Send cash if you are prepared to do so; if not sign the following pledge or copy on a postal card and return:

If you will move in this matter now, you will help to insure the Centennial Fund and help to move others. What is now needed is a movement!

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

LOOKING TOWARD PITTSBURG.

One of the most picturesque Centennial missions yet proposed is that of Brother David Millar's. We believe it is eminently practical and will be crowned with gratifying success. The apostolic uniqueness, simplicity and trustfulness of it makes the blood thrill with desire to have part in the apostolic triumph awaiting it. Who will be the Marks, Tituses and Timothies accompanying this twentieth century Paul on his first great missionary tour! The country is large and there are other beckoning itineraries who will claim them?

Our Centennial Secretary's clarion call to our sisterhood will strike chords in thousands of true hearts whose response will be, "We will, We are." As indispensable as women are to the successful development of religious enterprises among all Christian bodies, the achievements of our own sisters is unparalleled outside our Disciple annals. Nor has the C. W. B. M. reached the zenith of its power for good. A saintly sister Burgess may be called home, a Nancy E. Atkinson may relinquish leadership, but there will never fail an inspiring Mrs. M. E. Harlan to lead faster and farther and wider.

Woman and Missions.

BY W. R. WARREN.

The necessary part borne by women in the activities of missions may be clearly understood by a simple outline of the several fields in which the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is at work. Side by side with the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, mission stations, orphanages, schools and hospitals have been maintained in India. The growth and accomplishments of these have been most gratifying. On the island of Jamaica, in Mexico, South America and Porto Rico, the missionaries of this society have been laboring devotedly and successfully among our unfortunate neighbors. With industrial and other schools of the most approved types, its teachers have been serving among the negroes of the South and the neglected but capable white people of the mountains of Eastern Kentucky. She has sought out also the states and cities of our country in which the apostolic plea was least known and has supported missionaries and evangelists there while they have been planting and developing churches of Christ. She has entered our great State Universities and established chairs for the teaching of the Bible on a par with other branches of learning. While maintaining these outward activities by her gifts systematically consecrated and accumulated, she has been devoting her time and attention with equal orderly care to increasing her own individual knowledge of missions and the Bible, training up the children of her community in the full appreciation of both the obligations and the privileges of the Savior's commission and exerting a constant influence in the church for aggressive righteousness throughout all the world.

Nothing further is needed to justify setting apart the first Lord's day of December as C. W. B. M. Day and devoting it to making the whole church familiar with the way in which our modern Marys have done what they could. Such a public presentation of this service to which the love of Christ has constrained fifty thousand will lead as many more to choose the better part, and will help in many ways to prepare us all for the Centennial.

Centennial Secretary, Pittsburg, Pa.

Centennial Overland Campaign.

I am planning an evangelistic tour to begin about May 1, 1907, to continue until the Centennial convention at Pittsburg in 1909.

That some such work as I am now planning is needed I am forced to believe by the fact that during the last few months I have been asked to hold meetings to strengthen weak churches and organize new ones, and had to decline owing to financial inability of the brethren. By this plan I expect to help at just such places.

The plan is to secure the co-operation of six consecrated young men (ministerial students) who can play some kind of instrument and sing, and who are possessed of hustling qualifications, grit, go and gumption. Our outfit will consist of an up-to-date wagonette built to accommodate comfortably seven persons, with the necessary rain and sun protection, drawn by a pair of strong horses, also a pair of lighter ones to be used as trace and saddle horses.

Our route will be through southeast Missouri, northwest Arkansas, into Indian Territory and Oklahoma, as far as we can reach in five months, the time to be occupied in the outgoing trip. After which the young men will return by rail to their schools (if they are students), while I return over the course traveled for the purpose of confirming and strengthening the churches visited. Our work will be to hold meetings for weak churches and to organize new churches and Sunday-schools, staying a week or ten days at the most at each place. We will also stop at every village and town we pass through and hold a service, and distribute tracts, etc. When we stay over to hold a meeting, we will drive to nearby points in the daytime and on Lord's days the young men in pairs will hold meetings in school houses in the morning within a radius of five miles from town, while I preach there, and they will return for the meeting in town at night.

Our method will be in entering a town to drive around it, say seven times, for the purpose of getting the crowd from the very start. The band will play and signs will be conspicuously displayed upon the sides of the wagonette.

Our expenses and remuneration will be met by free will offerings and some help (I believe) from the missionary boards of the states we pass through, by advertising some of our schools and by the sale of bibles and other books. In fact each of the young men will be in charge of something that will prove remunerative.

Some one may ask why does it require a company of seven. Well, if I thought we could come out financially it would be a company of a dozen, so that when we entered a town we would not be handicapped by the attractions of the devil or the opposition of sectarians. We would have the right of way, and as our time will be limited this we must have. A center rush from start to finish. Do you know of any young men with the necessary qualifications? Do you know of any churches along the route given who need our services?

Have you any suggestion to offer, then please address, Yours in Christ,
Belleflower, Mo. DAVID MILLAR.

The Highest Journalism.

BY G. L. BUSH.

I write to congratulate you as General Superintendent upon the unprecedented increase in the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. That it was growing and deserved to grow, I knew like many others, but 30½ per cent in one year surprised me most delightfully. It is a fact of great significance to our movement and gives me as much joy as the increased receipts of our missionary societies. It indicates a growing appreciation of the best type of religious journalism by our ministers and members. This is one of the hopeful signs of the times and tends to optimism as to our future usefulness among the religious forces of the world.

Placing such a paper in every Christian home is an enterprise that should have the hearty co-operation of every minister in our ranks. It will give him an assistant pastor calling fifty-two times a year upon his members and keeping them well informed as to the progress of the gospel and the best thought of the times. It is high time for us to awake to the power of the press and help to supply the people with the right kind of literature. The wise shepherd seeks to feed as well as herd the flock, and many know how easy it is to herd those who read our papers

OUR CENTENNIAL HELPERS.

Last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST was great. If you have them on hand, please send me 100 copies. I want to distribute them here in the city and among my members.—L. A. Chapman, (minister) Mt. Pleasant, Ia.

Enclosed you will find order for my renewal of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I feel I can do without most anything else rather than do without THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—Mrs. Sarah E. Stoops, Fullerton, Neb.

Current Events

The Country Saved.

Again the country has been saved. The patriots of both parties throughout forty-two of our forty-five states have rallied to the defense of principle, party or persons, as the case happened to be, and the election is over. At the present writing, the returns show a Republican majority of something over fifty in the next house of representatives. This, of course, is for the sixtieth congress, which will meet a year from next December. We have many times commented on what seems to us the unfortunate arrangement of electing congressmen thirteen months before the time appointed for congress to assemble. In general interest the contest in New York overshadowed all other state campaigns. The election of Hughes (Rep.) by a plurality of about 75,000 over Hearst (Dem. and Ind.); while nearly all the remainder of the Democratic state ticket was elected, would be discouraging to any one less buoyant than Mr. Hearst. The contest hinged upon the popular opinion of Hearst's sincerity rather than upon any question regarding the principles which he professed. A candidate professing the same principles and admittedly sincere in the profession, would have been elected. But Hearst is still an unknown quantity and an undependable personality in the opinion of some thousands of people whose support he needed. For ourselves, we do not profess to know whether Hearst is sincere or not. But we are reasonably certain that in Mr. Hughes, New York will have an honest and capable governor who, in spite of inexperience in administrative work, will be efficient in his office. Most of the other states went about as they were expected to go. Missouri returned to the Democratic column. Nebraska, unmoved by the recent triumphal homecoming of the peerless leader, went Republican. Minnesota continued Democratic in the deserved re-election of Governor Johnson. The Republicans carried Colorado, which means the election of Buchtel as governor. He is a Methodist preacher (and a good one) and president of Denver University.

Statehood.

New Mexico and Arizona will wait a while longer for statehood. At last week's election New Mexico voted to accept, but Arizona voted to reject, the proposition made by the last congress. In New Mexico the vote was about three to one in favor of joint statehood; in Arizona about three to one against it. Since New Mexico's vote is the larger, the proposition would have won but for the provision that each territory must accept before the act could become effective. New Mexico has elected delegates to a constitutional convention. It is probable that these delegates will meet, frame a constitution and ask for separate statehood. Whether they will get it or not is another question. Probably not. But the expectation of getting separate statehood if New Mexico showed a disposition to accept what congress offered while ~~New Mexico~~ Arizona rejected it, was one factor in getting a large vote for joint statehood.

Prosperity.

The Pennsylvania railroad has announced a 10 per cent increase in the pay of all of its employes who are receiving less than $200 a month. Here is a fine slice of the general prosperity handed out to some of the persons who are most deserving of it. Some other large employers ought to speak up to the same effect. And by the way, does it ever occur to church boards or school boards that preachers and teachers might appropriately be given a share of the prosperity of which we are all so proud. They get their share in the increased cost of living but they seldom have any other personal way of knowing that the times are prosperous.

Manual Labor.

That nine out of every ten Cubans entertain an unalterable prejudice against manual labor as a means of obtaining a livelihood, is the answer which a recent visitor to the island gives to the question, "What's the matter with Cuba?" Cuba may have other and more original ailments. This one is certainly not confined to that island. But if it is so generally prevalent there it will inevitably be fatal to the infant civilization of that republic. Personally, we confess to a preference for intellectual toil. We woud rather help to edit a newspaper than dig ditches. But most occupations (even newspaper work) require a combination, in varying proportions, of muscular and mental labor. The ideal work is one which calls into play both the gray matter and the long red fibers. The more successful workers generally find their work growing gradually more mental and less physical, for one good head can direct several pairs of hands and a head that can do that is better paid than one which can manage only one pair. But the man who starts in with the determination not to work with his hands is not choosing the right road to success. Nearly any soldier would rather be a colonel than a private, but it will be a poor army whose soldiers all insist on wearing the shoulder-straps. That's one thing that makes so many of the South American armies foolish and ineffective. The same principle applied in the industrial army produces no better results. A man of energy and ambition will say: I will work in just as high and dignified a station as I can get and fill, but, come what may, I will work somewhere and will dignify my work for my fidelity in it. It was an Irish ditch-digger who said that, "for a nice clane, dacint job" he would like to be a bishop. But he showed his manhood by continuing to swing his shovel without waiting for some one to hand him a crozier. There are never enough bishoprics to go around.

Artificial Jewels.

The jewelers of New York are reported to be perturbed over the arrival of a lot of artificial emeralds and sapphires which are indistinguishable from the genuine article. Artificial rubies have already been made with considerable success. Diamonds can be manufactured but they are too small for use for jewelry and it costs more to make them than to buy the natural stones in open market. The question is whether there is a real demand for cheap diamonds and sapphires. We doubt it. Most people who wear gems do not wear them because they are beautiful, but because they are costly. If good diamonds could be bought at a dollar a carat and emeralds were as cheap as celluloid, their charm would be gone for most people. They would still be as beautiful—and they are really very beautiful objects and well worth wearing for their beauty. But the wearing of them would be no badge of wealth. If the new processes should utterly demoralize the market for precious stones and bring them within reach of the most modest incomes, the snobs will have to make other arrangements for the display of their affluence. Perhaps, in such a case, certified cheques and government bonds, if issued in decorative editions, could be made to serve the purpose of personal adornment and display.

Lieutenant Peary is on his way home from the arctic regions. He broke all previous records for "farthest north," achieving a latitude of 87 degrees and 6 minutes, or a distance of only 200 miles from the pole, which beats the records of both Nansen and the Duke of Abruzzi. In his poleward dash, after leaving his last base of supplies, he covered over 400 miles due north with dog-sledges. This journey was interrupted by finding open sea much farther north than there was supposed to be any open sea. But for this unfortunate fact he is sure he would have reached the pole.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—XII.

The Place of the Cross in Human Redemption.

We are still following Christ's own method of revelation. When he had brought his disciples to the clear recognition of his Messiahship and of his divine Sonship, "from that time began Jesus to show unto his disciples, that he must go unto Jerusalem and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and the third day be raised up." (Matt. 16:21.) There were two reasons at least why this revelation of his humiliation and death was not made known to his disciples earlier. Not until their faith had grasped his divine character and mission were they able to stand such a revelation. It would have been too severe a shock for them. As the sequel shows they were imperfectly prepared even then, but the time had come when he could begin to take them into his confidence and let them know something of what awaited him. And then, in the second place, it is only in the light of Jesus' true nature, as "God manifest in the flesh," that his death can be seen in its vast significance, as essential to human salvation.

How foreign this thought of redemption through the sufferings of Christ was to the mind of the disciples, even at that period, is shown by Peter's rebuke to his Lord, saying: "Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall never be unto thee." This seemed to Peter, and no doubt to the others, as utterly inconsistent with the promise and hope that Christ should establish a kingdom and reign as king over that kingdom. But this was because Peter was looking at the problem from a purely human point of view. He expected his Master to come into the power of kingship, in the same way as other kings had come, and much in the same way, by which Satan had tempted Jesus to become a world-ruler. This was why Jesus rebuked Peter, calling him Satan, and bidding him get behind him. "Thou art a stumbling block unto me: for thou mindest not the things of God but the things of men." Christ had chosen the path of self-denial, humiliation, suffering, and death, as the way to universal dominion. This was contrary to all human ideas and methods. But nineteen centuries of Christian history have sufficed to show that the true way to dominion over the hearts and lives of men was indeed by the way of the cross.

While of course there is a uniqueness about the fact of Christ's death, in its relation to human salvation, the law of sacrifice which underlies it Jesus expands into a universal law, saying to his disciples, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever would save his life shall lose it: and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it." As there was no other way by which Christ could effect human redemption but the way of the cross, so he tells us, there is no other way to discipleship to him, except the way of the cross—the taking up of our cross and following him. As the principle of loyalty to his Father, and of love for men led him to offer his life for the sins of the world, so the principle of loyalty to God and of love for him and for our fellow men, will lead us to endure whatever sacrifice of time, money, reputation, and even of life itself, may be involved in doing the will of God and promoting the interests of our fellowmen. Whoever hesitates at any sacrifice however great, which is involved in discipleship to Jesus Christ, is unworthy to be his disciple. If this principle were emphasized more than it is, it would probably act as a sieve in keeping out of the church many who enter it, but the church would be stronger for the sifting, and would recruit its ranks none the less rapidly from those who are willing to follow Christ at all hazards.

The fundamental nature of Christ's death is graphically set forth in the scene in the Garden. "My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Again, "If this can not pass away, except I drink it, thy will be done." The fact that the cup did not pass away, but that he drank it, even to its bitterest dregs, is evidence sufficient that not otherwise could the purpose of God in the salvation of men be realized. His language at the institution of the Lord's Supper is to the same effect. Concerning the loaf he said, "Take, eat; this is my body"; and of the cup he said, "Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the covenant which is poured out for many unto remission of sins" (Matt. 26:26-28). After his resurrection from the dead, on his walk to Emmaus with the two disciples, he said to them, "Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer and rise again from the dead on the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all nations, beginning from Jerusalem" (Luke 24:46, 47).

These passages suffice to show the fundamental importance of Christ's death in the plan of God for human redemption. They fully justify the statement of the greatest preacher of the first century: "But far be it from me to glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, through which the world hath been crucified unto me, and I unto the world" (Gal. 6:14). The cross of Christ is at once the highest expression of God's love for a sinning world, and the deepest revelation of the awful nature and consequences of sin, from the bondage and wages of which it was the purpose of Christ's death to redeem men. No pulpit that minimizes the cross can be a pulpit of power, for the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation," and Christ's death for our sins is the very heart of the Gospel. Well may the church, in her onward march through the centuries, continue to sing:

> "In the cross of Christ I glory
> Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
> All the light of sacred story
> Gathers round its head sublime."

A Pertinent Question.

An editorial from "The Examiner" (Baptist), New York City, entitled, "Why Not United?" which will be found elsewhere, raises a most pertinent and pressing question. The question why Baptists and Disciples are not united is a pressing one to all who feel that Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers expresses the will of God concerning us, and that it is our duty to do the will of God on earth as it is done in heaven.

If we were asked to answer the question raised by "The Examiner," "Why Not United?" we should say, first and chiefly, because they do not know each other well enough. Each body seems unaware, in the main, of the progress which the other has made and of the present state of religious feeling and conviction prevalent in each of the bodies. There ought to be, therefore, first of all, some plan for bringing the two bodies together in local, state and national gatherings for the purposes of interchange of thought and the promotion of mutual acquaintanceship. Why should we not plan to hold a common national congress in which there might be a discussion of the fundamental things of our common Christianity and an emphasis of things upon which we agree? One session might be devoted to disagreements which would tend to clear away the mists and reduce mountains to mole hills.

Another reason why the two bodies are not united is the existence of an extreme element in each, which magnifies the differences and minifies the agreements. This is a fact that must be reckoned with. It need not, however, be made a bar to mutual fellowship and co-operation among those who feel that we can not escape the displeasure of our Lord and Master, if we fail to carry out his desire that we should be one. Both the Baptists and Disciples have solved the problem of dealing with their anti-missionary society brethren by agreeing that all who believe in co-operation and missionary work should co-operate, and that those who are opposed to such a co-operation or prefer a different method of doing mission work, should pursue their own way, and we will have no quarrel with them. This same principle could be adopted in planning for such co-operation as is now practicable between the churches in both bodies prepared to enter into such co-operation. The others might be left free to come in later or permanently withhold their co-operation if they so preferred. There need be no quarrel nor separation, any more than there is in respect to our missionary methods. If this brief journey on shipboard with a company of our members on their way to the Buffalo convention, could create this impression on the mind of the editor of "The Examiner," think what a series of interdenominational gatherings would have in bringing about this feeling of unity.

The "Word of Approval," by Professor Hobart, called out by the editorial, which we also print, suggests that the Baptists as the older and larger of the two bodies, should take the initiative in bringing about this union. We feel perfectly safe in saying for the Disciples of Christ in general that "Barkis is willin." There was inaugurated at our last congress in Indianapolis, in which two eminent Baptists participated, a movement looking to a better understanding of each other, and we believe that Dr. Mullins, president of the Baptist Theological Seminary, at Louisville, took the initiative in this measure. If we will only be honest and open-hearted in trying to understand each other, the Lord, we are sure, will lead us into a closer unity and a sweeter fellowship.

Jesus and the Great Commission.

In another place we publish an article by Bro. J. S. Hughes, who believes he has a message on the above subject which the people should hear. We believe in freedom of speech and discussion and have agreed to permit Brother Hughes to state his position on this subject and his reasons therefor. The attempt of Brother Hughes to divorce baptism from the authority of Christ seems to us unavailing and unconvincing. Against it are the following facts: (1) Jesus himself was baptized, thereby setting us an example. (2) His disciples under his instruction practiced baptism. (3) He taught Nicodemus that "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God," and (4) his apostles whom he trained and endowed with power from on high taught and practiced baptism, always connecting it with the name of Christ.

But we have not mentioned the fact that in the great commission as recorded by Matthew, Jesus commissioned his disciples to go and make disciples of all nations, "baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Brother Hughes gives certain reasons why he thinks Jesus did not give this commission to his disciples, but against all these reasons, stands the undisputed fact that Matthew's Gospel in all the oldest and best manuscripts, contains the passage quoted above, ascribing it to Christ. If we may annul the statement of Jesus contained in the received text of the New Testament, there is no end to this destructive process, except the fancy of each interpreter. As long as the scholarship of the world approves this passage as genuine no amount of subjective reasoning nor arguments based on silences will suffice to separate that baptismal formula from the authority of Christ. That Brother Hughes has no proper appreciation of this fact is evidenced by his reference to the silence of the Scriptures concerning infant baptism, as a parallel case. But suppose there was an undisputed passage authorizing the baptism of infants: then to base an argument on the silence of the record concerning the actual cases of infant baptism, would be a very different proposition.

Hasting's Dictionary of the Bible, one of the ablest productions of modern scholarship, charged by no one with being too conservative, contains in its article on Baptism, page 241, the following statement which is given as the most satisfactory explanation of the formula mentioned in Acts of Apostles:

> "When St. Luke says that people were 'baptized in (or into) the name of the Lord Jesus' he is not indicating the formula which was used in baptizing, but is merely stating that such persons were baptized as acknowledged Jesus to be the Lord and the Christ; in short, he is simply telling us that the baptism was Christian. When Peter healed the cripple at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, the form of the words used is quoted: 'In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, walk.' No such form of words is quoted in any of the passages in which persons are said to be baptized in or into the name of Jesus Christ. There is no evidence against the supposition that in these and in all other cases the formula used was that which Christ nejoined. This is perhaps what Cyprian means when he says on Acts 2:38, Jesus Christi mentionem facit Petrus, non quasi Pater omitteretur, sed ut Patri Filius quoque adjungeretur (Eph. Lxx iii. 17). In I Cor. 10:2, where the Israelites are said to have been 'baptized into Moses, the meaning is that they were baptized into obedience to him and acknowledgment of his authority, not that his name was called over them in some formula."

With this view we concur, and with this brief statement we submit the article of Brother Hughes to our readers for their own judgment without further criticism.

Notes and Comments.

He is not a contributor to the peace and unity of the brotherhood, who magnifies the differences of opinion among brethren into articles of faith, and who speaks of the brethren, even those co-operating in missionary work, as divided into hostile camps and firing into each other! If we are going to adopt that sort of policy, and cultivate that sort of spirit, we may as well make up our minds to split into a number of little sects and parties, as many of the other Protestant bodies have done. It has generally been supposed that we have adopted a broader basis of fellowship than that, and had come into a larger inheritance of liberty not inconsistent with unity. And this we are persuaded is the conviction and guiding principle of the sanest and safest leaders among us.

We may have remarked before, but it will bear remarking again, that one of the greatest needs among the churches of this Reformation is a much larger number of preachers who are willing to locate and labor with churches that are able to pay only $500 or $600 a year salary. We are continually asked by such churches to recommend young men of this class who have faith in themselves and in the gospel as well as in God, and who are not afraid that they will starve or lack in any necessary comfort of life by accepting such fields and devoting themselves to their cultivation with singleness of heart. Our colleges can scarcely do better work for the young men they are sending out as preachers than to inspire them with this spirit of faith and of sacrifice that would enable them to undertake such fields and show the metal that is in them by building up the weak churches into strong ones.

We are in receipt of a sermon published in neat tract form on "The Correlation of Christian Forces," by Richard M. Vaughan, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Janesville, Wis., which we have read with no little interest. It is one of the freest and most cogent discussions of this vital topic that we have seen. Take this extract as an example of the spirit of the author:

> "There are two stars by which we must sail, if we ever reach our haven—loyalty and freedom. There are some things upon which we must all agree. We can not correlate forces with any society of atheists. The men who constitute the larger church must believe in God the Father, in Jesus the supreme disclosure of the infinite holiness and love, in the obligations of a life of service, and in the certainty of an endless life. But there must also be a sphere of freedom. We can not all think alike on all points; temperament and training forbid. If we are to wait for correlation until all Christians accept our individual opinions, correlation will never come."

We should like to quote further, but it would be better if our readers, interested in the subject, would send to Brother Vaughan for a copy of this sermon. They may not agree with every sentiment in it, but they will find a luminous discussion of a vital problem by one who has a clear head and a warm heart.

The St. Louis "Christian Advocate" comments upon that statement quoted from one of our Buffalo speakers, to the effect that if the sermons preached fifty years ago were delivered now verbatim et literatim, they would prove ineffective, as if the speaker had said that the preachers of fifty years ago were not to be compared in ability and consecration with the preachers of to-day! Of course that is entirely foreign to the speaker's thought, which was simply that each age had its own special conditions and peculiar problems, and that preachers must adapt their message to the needs of the age in which they live, and to the generation which they serve, if they are to be effective. What army would be so foolish as to go on firing in the same direction, and with the same sort of weapons, when the enemy had changed front and had adopted a new style of warfare? "The Advocate" shot this time without taking accurate aim.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Indian summer weather continues right along across the October line into November, regardless of our artificial divisions of time. There is as much haze and mystery about the origin of this phrase, "Indian Summer," as there is in the kind of weather which it designates. The most probable theory, however, is that the name was applied to the hazy, smoky, mild weather, which often comes in October and November and sometimes as late as December, because, in the early settlement of the country, the Indians committed their depredations in the white settlements at this season of the year, because their movements would be more or less concealed by the hazy condition of the atmosphere. But whatever may be the true theory about the name, the kind of weather which it designates is most charming. It brings to one who is fond of nature "The Call of the Wild." It is indeed a sort of imprisonment to be confined by one's duties indoors when

"There's a whisper on the hilltop and a murmur in the wood,
There's a dream of golden glory everywhere;
On the beech a russet cover, on the elm a scarlet hood,
But the walnut lifts her branches brown and bare.
When the squirrel's at his feasting in the old oak's top—
And lo! the Indian summer, when the acorns drop!"

One picture comes clearly before our vision from boyhood days: It is the nutting season and November's "wailing winds" are bringing down the frost-loosened nuts from the great trees. And as they fall upon the ground the hulls burst and they lie in thick profusion. Sometimes when the wind did not suffice to bring them down fast enough, stones and clubs were improvised to assist nature in the work of harvesting the nuts. There were sacks full of hickory nuts, hazel nuts and walnuts, gathered from nature's own orchards, and laid away to dry for use in the long winter evenings around the blazing fire. Those were bright, halcyon days to us all, and the memory of them survives the wreck of many other scenes and incidents less congenial to the heart of boyhood and girlhood.

This is the era of simultaneous revival services. The phrase, as now used, means that the churches of the same religious body in a given district or state are engaged in evangelistic services at the same time. There is a great gain in this, both in the way of attracting public attention and in the mutual inspiration and encouragement which each church gets from the success of the others. The word "simultaneous" hardly expresses all that is involved in such meetings. The idea of union and of co-operation must enter into the plan as well as simultaneousness. The heart of these simultaneous revival movements is the union meeting in which the churches of a given city or district should meet together, at some central place, with as many people as they can bring together with them, for concentration of effort and for the mingling of hearts and voices in prayer and praise, for strengthening the bonds of unity, and for generating enthusiasm which can be transmitted to all parts of the movement. This feature of union added to that of simultaneousness will enable the weaker churches to share in the benefit, equally with the others, of all the advertising and all the general interest and enthusiasm. The simultaneous revival has probably come to stay, especially in the cities, for it is difficult for a single church in the city to make an impression upon the life of the city. But when a number of churches in different parts of the city join hands and hearts and make common cause in a great evangelistic campaign, the public attention is attracted, and many hear the Gospel and are drawn under the power of Christ, who would not otherwise be reached.

But the idea of simultaneous evangelistic services needs to be enlarged. It should, occasionally, at least, embrace all the churches of the city that believe in the preaching of the Gospel for the conversion of sinners and the edification of saints. We can never make the impress upon our great cities which Christianity ought to make, until all the churches which acknowledge Jesus Christ as Lord, unite their efforts in preaching his Gospel and in bringing the knowledge of his truth and grace to the unevangelized masses. In the past it has been difficult, on account of excessive denominational zeal, to conduct such union meetings; but we have now reached a degree of Christian breadth and fellowship which makes it possible for Christian bodies, differing as yet in many things which would prevent their organic union, to unite in a common effort to bring men to repentance and to a saving faith in Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. We are destined to witness more union evangelism in the future than has ever been possible in the past. Out of this united effort will come not only a larger influence for Christianity upon the thought and life of our cities, but a greater unity of feeling and fellowship among the several churches, which will greatly hasten the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the oneness of his followers. These great union evangelistic meetings can alone solve the problem of city evangelization, and our cities must be evangelized if we are to perpetuate our free institutions and the life of the republic.

One of the changes needed to complete the preparation of all the churches for union evangelistic services, is the realization, to a much greater degree, of how much more important it is that men should be brought to a knowledge of God and to a living faith in him as he is revealed in Christ, than that they should have correct theories about forms of church government, theology, and methods of salvation. To put these things in the same class is to make all co-operation impossible. But he who so classifies them has yet to learn the deepest meaning of salvation as taught by Christ and his apostles. We are far from decrying the value of a correct knowledge of all questions that relate to Christian doctrine and to the progress of the church. But all this is a matter of growth after the soul has been brought into right relations with God by leaving off its sins, and, in a penitent faith coming to Christ for life and for pardon. This is the work of supreme value, and it is a work in which all churches can engage that are able to discriminate between things which are vital to salvation, and those which are useful and helpful in promoting the soul's growth and usefulness. After all, is not this the very distinction which our own religious movement has sought to emphasize from the beginning—the difference between faith and opinion, insisting that faith, in the New Testament sense, is confidence in and allegiance to Jesus Christ, and not the intellectual acceptance of a formulation of doctrines, either about Christ or about the church or the ordinances. Get Christ in the heart, we have said, and he will make everything else right. This is the basis on which we can hold union evangelistic services.

* * *

It is a group of strong, forceful men of faith that is preaching the Gospel in our evangelistic campaign in St. Louis. They do not deal in negations. They have a positive message for the people. They believe and, therefore, speak. They have a clear grasp on fundamental truth, on the great spiritual realties, and these they present with a clearness of conviction that proceeds from faith quickened and intensified by personal experience. What a power it is to the preacher to commend to others that which he has experienced and found to be true in his own life! To lay a broad foundation for faith, to exalt Christ to his true place as the only Savior, and then to make the way unto him clear and plain—that is the program of true evangelism. Never since the apostolic age have men been truer to this New Testament method than are our own best evangelists today who are winning such victories for Christ. What this world needs is faith, not doubt.

"Talk faith. The world is better off without
Your uttered ignorance and morbid doubt.
If you have faith in God, or man, or self,
Say so. If not, push back upon the shelf
Of silence your thoughts till faith shall come:
No one will grieve because your lips are dumb."

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis[*] By W. H. Bagby

To become the Savior of the world Jesus had to become the Teacher of the world. Salvation in its broadest and best sense is education in its highest and most comprehensive sense. If Jesus had not taught, all else he did would have been in vain. Not because he wrought mighty works, but because he spake mighty words, has he been received by men as the Savior of the world. In making this assertion I in no wise minimize the importance of his works. On the contrary, I magnify it. If I wished to indicate by comparison, the loftiness of the Himalayas, I should choose the Alps or the Andes or the Rockies, the next loftiest mountains in the world.

To become the acknowledged Teacher of mankind Jesus had to meet the unrelenting demand the world makes upon him who aspires to be its teacher: that there shall be no mistake made in the placing of the emphasis. If he is the acknowledged Teacher of the world today it is because he met this demand by stressing only those things which the consensus of human intelligence and experience approves as worthy of emphasis. If he is the accepted Savior of men it is because he is the acknowledged teacher of saving truths and vital principles.

If what has just been affirmed be true, it follows as a vitally important conclusion, that the Church of Christ, to become, under her great head, the savior of the world, must become the acknowledged and accepted teacher of the world. In order to this, she must make no mistake in the point of emphasis. She must place the emphasis where Jesus placed it, and not be found stressing traditions and technicalities, and slurring vital principles and eternal verities. She must not be found like the Pharisees of old, magnifying matters of minor importance to the neglect of the weightier matters of the law. He sows in vain who sows but glittering grains of lifeless sand. In vain the Church of Jesus Christ expends all her precious strength and store scattering the seeds of dead dogmas, lifeless traditions, and powerless provincialisms. Only the seeds of living truth sown in good and honest hearts, can save this sinful world. There is no greater need than that the Church of Christ should be awakened to a realization of this great fact; for it would drive her to the task of seeking and stressing the vital things that Jesus stressed. Christ is the potential Savior of all men; but he is the actual Savior of only those who accept him as best they can with the light they have. Under Christ the Church is the potential savior of all: but to be the actual savior of any, she must become the accepted source of saving, teaching and help. To become such she must teach truths and exemplify principles conceded by the best thought of the world to be vital and essential. In a word, he must stress the things that Jesus stressed. In the limited space of this paper, only a few of the things that Jesus emphasized can be dwelt upon, and these but briefly. Those only have been selected the discussion of which is deemed most profitable at the present time.

I. Jesus placed the emphasis on the Function of the Church and not on its Form.

Like everything else in the world, the Church came into being for its highest function. Not to attain to a predetermined perfection of form, but to the perfect performance of a divinely prescribed function was to be its high aim and effort. As in the natural world, so in the spiritual realm, form is determined by function, and not function by form. As to its form, everything is what it is because of what it does. There is no better illustration of the truth of this than is afforded by the Church herself. It is a matter of history that the Church came into being in the simplest possible form. There were but two classes in it—apostles and private members. This first simple form was adequate for the discharge of its first simple functions. As time passed on other demands arose and its form became inadequate to the full discharge of its functions. To meet this enlarged demand there was an enlargement of the form of the Church. In obedience to the law that says that function shall determine form, and in response to the voice of need, which is always and everywhere, the voice of God, the office of Deacon came into being. As came this office (organ) so came all the others that were later added. The need did not arise to meet the pre-existing office, but the office arose to meet the pre-existing need. The form of the Church at the close of the apostolic period was simply what its efforts to meet the needs of that period had made it. Was this to be its fixed and final form? Only to the extent to which that form had been determined by the demand of permanent need. It is a matter of history that there were offices in the apostolic Church that came into being in response to temporary demands. These ceased after the cessation of the demands that had called them into being. Among these were the offices of apostles and prophets. They departed in obedience to the law that says that no organ shall survive its function. If there should cease to be a demand for any office now in the Church, the same law that demanded the elimination of apostles and prophets from the Church of the first century would demand the elimination of that office from the Church of the twentieth century. If a demand unknown to the Church of the first century should arise in the twentieth century that same law would demand the creation of an office unknown to the Church of the first century. The divine form of the Church is what the present demands upon it make it. Its fixed features are those only which exist in response to fixed demands. We have made a fetish of the form of the apostolic Church. We have attached an importance to it that does not belong to it. Assuming that it was constructed according to a divine pattern, we have made it the true test of the Scripural Church. The possession of the form of the apostolic Church no more proves that an organization is the true Church of Christ than the possession of the form of a man proves that a marble statue is a living man. Only by the possession of his Spirit and the performance of its divinely-appointed functions can an organization establish its claim to be the Church of Christ. By her fruits and not by her form the Bride of Christ is known.

The Church could have no greater handicap than rigidity of form and inflexibility of method. Her task is world-wide and age-long. She is the hand of God for the accomplishment of this task. That hand must be characterized by the utmost freedom and flexibility. The conservatism that would sacrifice the work to save the form of the hand is as unreasonable as it is unscriptural. Christ was glad that demons were being cast out even by those who did not company with him. He is not in sympathy with the sentiment that would let the old ship of Zion remain forever becalmed rather than to convert her from a sailing vessel into a steamer. God's hand is not with the Church that is standing guard over its form, but it is with the Church that is on a forced march in pursuit of its function. To eyes not blinded by prejudice, it is perfectly manifest that his hand is with bodies that, in their form, are wholly unlike the apostolic Church. The vital question to-day is not whether the Church has the form of the apostolic Church, but whether she has that form which best adapts her to meet the meeting of the demands of the present age. That form which does this is the most scriptural and the divinest. For the Church to eliminate the useless and to add the useful is to exercise the liberty wherewith Christ has made her free. In the eyes of Christianity nothing is sacred simply because it is conventional, but only because it met the demands of that period. If any feature of it is still divine (I speak reverently) it is because it is useful, and not because it was a feature of the Church of that period. Nothing can have any rightful place in the Christian Church on the mere ground of its conventionality. If it is useful the fact that it is conventional weighs nothing against it; but if it is not useful the fact that it is conventional weighs nothing in its favor.

Visions of the English Bishops

By William Durban

The prophets are predicting, the pessimists are moaning, the optimists are indulging in dithyrambics and dances, the soothsayers are vaticinating, and the dictators of divinity are scattering broadcast the seeds of new controversies. It can not be said that the British people are religiously asleep. For never have I known livelier times than we are passing through. I have always felt deepest interest in the various and multitudinous conferences of all the great religious societies, for at these the representative men find opportunities of making authoritative statements of the opinions they are able to formulate after matured experience and protracted study. I shall not, of course, be able in the course of one short article to give any account of the vast volume of autumnal talk to which we are being treated by Anglicans, Baptists, Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Methodists in their fine assemblies. But I will make reference to certain extraordinary deliverances which I regard as most instructive and noteworthy signs of the times. In the buzzing and confusion of the oratorical chorus it is well to hearken specially to some few of the most suggestive dicta.

The Bishop of London on Christian Unity.

Dr. Winnington Ingram, the esteemed and intensely popular Bishop of London, has been delivering one of his characteristic utterances at a great gathering of young men at the London Polytechnic. After descanting on the immorality of great cities, the bishop observed that one of the greatest difficulties to be contended with to-day is the divided state of Christendom. He said that in the work of the Church one expected to encounter agnostics, sceptics, vice, crime, and drink, but the most miserable thing was the division among Christians. He would ask Christians of all denominations to be good members of the society to which they belonged, for the only way to heal the divisions in Christianity was for all to be enthusiastic working members of their several communities, but having tolerance, love and respect for those who differed from them, rather than feelings of bitterness.

The Bishop of Carlisle's Vision of Unity.

It is evident that some of the ablest and most influential of the English prelates are feeling troubled over this problem of Christian unity. I observe one singular phenomenon. A few years ago most of the great Anglican dignitaries were indulging in a roseate dream of what they styled the "Corporate Reunion of Christendom." The ring-leaders were Dr. King, Bishop of Lincoln, and the late accomplished Dr. Creighton, for a few years Bishop of London. This vision related to the reunion of the Roman, Greek and Anglican communions. It was fondly imagined by the great body of high churchmen, Lord Halifax being the most influential layman amongst them, that negotiations and overtures would bring about a great federation of Roman Catholics, Greek Catholics and Anglo Catholics. But we hear little of such aspirations now. The Pope of Rome has condescended only to make it clear that there can quickly enough be consummated a reunion of Christendom if all who are not Roman Catholics become such, and the great Russo-Greek church in all its actions insists on its right to swallow up all competitors. Now, the Bishop of Carlisle, Dr. Diggle, has at the great meetings of the church congress, just held at Barrow-in-Furness, launched a most uncomfortable sort of philippic against his own Anglican communion. Presiding as bishop of the northernmost English diocese at the congress, held within his own territory, Dr. Diggle talked in his address in a style that would have been unthinkable on the part of any prelate a few years ago. He struck out right and left in his unsparing criticisms of the Anglican church. He contended that the church must be both ancient and modern, primitive and progressive. One of the surest notes of a living religion is that as it grows older it also grows younger. The present peril to the church was that of going too near the middle ages, but not near enough to Christ. It was in danger, too, of falling behind the times, and so of being forsaken by the people. One of their shortcomings, accounting for the vast falling away of the people, was that the world was too much in the church and the church too little in the world. The world's knowledge was penetrating to the masses and becoming increasingly scientific in temper. Would the church welcome that temper as a friend, or treat it as a foe? Would she shut herself up behind tottering traditions? They stood at the parting of the ways, and the only choice was reform or ruin—fresh development or certain decay.

"In my young days," said the bishop, "I often dreamed dreams, and now I am growing old I sometimes see visions. Among my sweetest visions is that of a truly catholic and apostolic church. I seem to see all the churches marching into one flock. In the van of the procession I see our own beloved church of England, with a vast train of young and old, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, sinful yet pardoned, carried in her arms, holding on to her robes. Then I see the noncomformist and other reformed churches following close behind; then the Greek and other eastern churches, emancipated from their trammels and glowing with freedom; then the Roman church, purified as by fire, and, last of all, the hosts which no man can number. Then I wake and find it all a vision; yet not a vision of the black closing night, but of the red opening dawn. That God will grant to this congress the power to help forward, if only by a single step, the realization of this vision is my heart's most earnest prayer."

The Church that Most Impedes Unity.

It is not surprising that the magnificent oration of Bishop Diggle was greeted with the most enthusiastic applause. His eloquence carried away his immense audience. What is to be deeply regretted is that this same learned and aspiring dignitary seems utterly unconscious that he and an army of good men like him are the most formidable obstacles to the very thing that he so ardently longs for. It is certain that the Bishop of Carlisle will never, unless he becomes radically revolutionized, help to materialize his own vision. For only a few days before he delivered this harangue he was expressing himself vehemently in favor of sustaining the state establishment of the Anglican church, and he on the same occasion declared himself against the idea of mutual interchanges of pulpits by Anglican and free church preachers!! Truly such an attitude of mind as this makes his position on reunion an incomprehensible paradox. Here we have him in the same week declaring for the most emphatic symbols of separation and sectarian exclusiveness and also for a universal spiritual brotherhood. Well, I profoundly respect the learning and the earnestness of Bishop Diggle, but I absolutely despair of comprehending his meaning. I might as well en-

IT'S THE FOOD

The True Way to Correct Nervous Troubles.

Nervous troubles are more often caused by improper food and indigestion than most people imagine. Even doctors sometimes overlook this fact. A man says:

"Until two years ago waffles and butter with meat and gravy were the main features of my breakfast. Finally dyspepsia came on and I found myself in a bad condition, worse in the morning than any other time. I would have a full, sick feeling in my stomach, with pains in my heart, sides and head.

"At times I would have no appetite for days, then I would feel ravenous, never satisfied when I did eat and so nervous I felt like shrieking at the top of my voice. I lost flesh badly and hardly knew which way to turn until one day I bought a box of Grape-Nuts food to see if I could eat that. I tried it without telling the doctor, and liked it fine; made me feel as if I had something to eat that was satisfying and still I didn't have that heaviness that I had felt after eating any other food.

"I hadn't drank any coffee then in five weeks. I kept on with the Grape-Nuts and in a month and a half I had gained 15 pounds, could eat almost anything I wanted, didn't feel badly after eating and my nervousness was all gone. It's a pleasure to be well again."

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

November 18 is to be observed throughout England by the "Day of Rest Movement." Simultaneous sermons, popular messages of representative leaders of Christianity through the press, Catholic and Protestant, united prayer and united effort in public meetings and house to house visitation, in which the established church and evangelical uniformity join hands; all are to promote better observance of the Lord's day.

A German reviewer spoke some time ago of "the religious Renaissance in London." One certainly sees great religious activity in the world's metropolis. The Welsh revival and the Torrey-Alexander meetings, and the ceaseless work of the churches show their effects to every visitor. Such an array of meetings as one sees announced by every individual church is amazing to an American. London has 2,700 places of worship. The church of England has 1,014; the Baptists, 283; Congregationalists, 219; Wesleyans, 159; Roman Catholics, 100; Presbyterians, 68; Christadelphians, 7; Disciples, 6. A religious census in 1902-3 shows in the population of 4,580,065, a Sunday attendance of 1,003,361; that is, a decrease since a similar census in 1886 of 163,951. The decline was almost entirely in the church of England. This showed a falling off of 139,519, while that of nonconformity was only 5,467. Of the attendance of 1,003,361, 323,735 were children, 412,999 women and 266,627 men.

A great change has come over London in twenty years—a revolt against formalism. The new century has its own spirit. Booth was laughed at once, his people mobbed and jailed, his religion characterized as corybantic. Salvation Army barracks now number 94 and Booth is classed with Loyola and Luther as the religious genius of his time. Earnestness and sacrifice have triumphed. But a decline in regular church attendance in sixteen years from 1,167,312 to 1,003,361 would mean that London is in a state of backsliding. Buckle said statistics will tear the heart out of every human system. The figures tell.

That this decline is a revolt against formalism is evident from the tremendous loss in the attendance upon the established church. The militant secularism, of which Bradlaugh was the chief protagonist, is dead. Scientists like Huxley and Tyndall descended into the arena of theological conflict as companions of agnosticism and tilted with Gladstone, Wace and Argyll. Now the scientists who deal with religion are not nearly so confirmed in their negations, many like Alfred Russell Wallace, Sir William Crookes and Oliver Lodge openly avowing their faith in the Bible and immortality. Evolution is no longer exempt from attack. Formalism is losing trust in its formulas and agnosticism shows a more open mind. In the nonconformist churches, like Dr. Clifford's and Dr. Campbell's, and many others which I attended, I observed large congregations, and a devotion and enthusiasm one does not see in our American churches. Christian Endeavor has twenty-one unions, with 754 societies, and a membership of 33,570, and only five societies belonging to the church of England. It was Easter when the ritualistic organizations are at their best, and yet the audiences I noticed in Oxford and London in these churches did not seem large. Many vacant seats though the music was exceptionally fine and the millinery and ceremony as effective as might be desired. In Westminster Abbey Easter Sunday, April 15, I listened to Canon Henson. This historic place is a center of interest to strangers, and one always sees Americans here and tourists from everywhere, and the service is impressive by reason of the surroundings, more so than in St. Paul's or the city temple or the Westbourne Park Chapel, but even here there was no crowding. The people evidently do not care for formalism. They need New Testament Christianity.

The explanation of present religious conditions in the great metropolis was clear to me when I picked up the order of worship for the day in Westminster. On the first page of this bulletin with greatest prominence was printed the "Fides Catholica." It seems an archaism, but here it is, as placed in the hands of this twentieth century congregation. Perhaps you never read it:

The Catholick Faith is this: That we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity;
Neither confounding the Persons: nor dividing the Substance.
For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son: and another of the Holy Ghost.
But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one; the Glory equal, the Majesty co-eternal.
Such as the Father is, such is the Son: and such is the Holy Ghost.
The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate; and the Holy Ghost uncreate.
The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible: and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible.
The Father eternal, the Son eternal: and the Holy Ghost eternal.
And yet they are not three eternals: but one eternal.
As also there are not three incomprehensibles, nor three uncreated: but one uncreated, and one incomprehensible.
So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty: and the Holy Ghost Almighty.
And yet there are not three Almighties: but one Almighty.
So the Father is God, the Son is God: and the Holy Ghost is God.
And yet there are not three Gods: but one God.
So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son Lord: and the Holy Ghost Lord.
And yet not three Lords: but one Lord.
For like as we are compelled by the Christian verity: to acknowledge every Person by himself to be God and Lord:
So are we forbidden by the Catholick Religion: to say there be three Gods, or three Lords.
The Father is made of none: neither created, nor begotten.
The Son is of the Father alone: not made, not created, but begotten.
The Father is made of alone: not made, not created, but begotten.
The Holy Ghost is of the Father and of the Son. neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding.
So there is one Father, not three Fathers; one Son, not three Sons; one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts.
And in this Trinity none is afore, or after other: none is greater, or less than another;
But the whole three Persons are co-eternal together: and co-equal.
So that in all things, as is aforesaid: the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped.
Furthermore the right faith is, that we believe and confess: that our Lord Jesus Christ the Son of God, is God and Man.
God, of the Substance of the Father, begotten before the words: and Man, of the Substance of his Mother, born in the world;
Perfect God, and Perfect Man: of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting;
Equal to the Father, as touching his Godhead: and inferior to the Father, as touching his Manhood.
Who although he be God and Man: yet he is not two, but one Christ;
One, not by conversion of the Godhead into flesh: but by taking of the Manhood into God;
One altogether, not by confusion of Substance, but by Unity of Person.
For as the reasonable soul and flesh is one Man: so God and Man is one Christ.
Who suffered for our salvation: descended into hell, rose again the third day from the dead.
He ascended into heaven, he sitteth on the right hand of the Father, God Almighty: from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead,
Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost;
As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be: world without end. Amen.

The greatest charm of woman's character is the union of feminine qualities with a virile intellect. Such was Madame de Stael, the foremost French writer of the Napoleonic period, whose literary style combines the solidity and largeness of the majestic mountain and the grace and sweetness of the wayside flower; and who, though she could thrill the hearts of kings, emperors, statesmen by her colloquial eloquence and all Europe by her pen, in the sanctuary of home was the loving wife, the tender mother, the angelic woman.

Impressions of the Buffalo Convention

We asked a few of the veterans attending the conventions at Buffalo to send us their impressions of the convention with any suggestions for improvement in future conventions. We published some of the replies last week. Others follow:

By S. C. Toof.

I first attended the general convention in 1870, and have attended or thoroughly read the reports of all the conventions since. My opinion is, that all our general conventions have been marvels of success in the manner of their order of proceedings. I see no cause for change in the preparation of the programs. A little more variety might be introduced by fewer set addresses, leaving time for some short impromptu talks by well-known men who might be in attendance, to be called upon by the presiding officer. I find no language to tell of the wonderful meetings held by the C. W. B. M. at the Buffalo Convention. The little talks by the returned missionaries were a source of information and inspiration to all.

Memphis, Tenn.

By Addison Clark.

The national convention of 1893, 1895, 1899, 1902, 1903, 1906, are the only ones which this far-away Texas teacher has had the privilege of attending. They have all seemed the best to me; that is, each seemed better than its predecessor. At the Buffalo Convention, the decorum seemed to me to be much better than at former conventions. Business seemed to be dispatched with greater ease and promptness. The addresses, though delivered, in the main, by the younger men, impressed me as being of a very high order, both as to matter and manner. The peace, unity and harmony that prevailed kept my mind filled with the 133d Psalm. So eager was the desire for harmony that the word "federation" was not spoken from the platform. If so, I did not hear it. For this condition of things, however, I did not rejoice, and do not rejoice. I mean that condition that held back from free expression of the readiness and eagerness of that great body of Disciples to take this long step toward that unity for which Christ prayed. I doubt the wisdom of holding the next convention, or any of our conventions, at the place of international expositions.

Thorp Spring, Texas.

By E. C. Browning.

My impression of the Buffalo Convention was generally good, and very good.

I think our conventions have improved in the devotional and reverential spirit. Perhaps there is still room for improvement in this regard. I heard a brother of reputation say, he would prefer "less clapping of hands and more Amens." If this would be more reverential he is probably right.

One very encouraging thing was that there were more young men on the program. The addresses were generally, if not universally, of a very high order. I am inclined to think that it is unwise to present the same names for special addresses, year after year. Of course the officers of the general boards must make their reports, but if suitable men can be found for special addresses, it seems to me expedient that different sections of our country should be represented.

I have little disposition to criticise a program, for it is one of the most difficult things to make a satisfactory program. All speakers should be held strictly to their time on the program.

It seems to me a wise provision to specify a portion of time for visiting places of special interest. There are certain phases of our convention work that relate to business, that I have thought could be improved, but I leave suggestions to others.

The spirit of harmony, good will and liberality that pervaded the convention is very encouraging.

No convention has been better cared for than the Buffalo meeting.

Little Rock, Ark.

By John H. Gordinier.

I was greatly pleased with the Convention. The arrangements for the care of the delegates were complete. The business management of the sessions was perfect. The leaders were the right ones in their places. The sermons and addresses by the speakers were very instructive and inspiring. Picked men and women gave us their best thoughts. The spiritual tone of the convention was pitched on a high key. The closing service was grand. The rapid firing guns electrified the audience. The interest was intense, the enthusiasm great. We thanked God and took courage for greater things in the future. We see more clearly in vision the world-wide empire of the Christ, and pray more fervently for its expansion among the nations.

Scio, N. Y.

By Charles Louis Loos.

What first of all profoundly impressed every one was the great assembly that had come from all parts of the United States and from the British dominions. The vast convention hall was filled to its utmost capacity. It presented a most inspiring sight. I said to myself, "Hitherto, after so many years of conflict and waiting, the Lord has brought us."

We have gone far to overcome among our brotherhood the obstinate resistance to the cause of world-wide missions. What we have accomplished is a strong encouragement to go on to greater victories.

The spirit of the convention was all that could have been desired. A happier concourse of men and women could not be imagined. And all present had an intelligent conception and appreciation of the motives that had brought us together. Here was a fair representation of the best intelligence of our people in the holiest and most potent cause that can move human hearts.

We have learned much through the years that have passed since the national convention of 1849. And yet there is no religious people more free than we are in our judgments and the expression of them. Wisdom presided over the convention. Nothing was brought before it but the great and holy themes that were supreme in the hearts of all. May it ever be so. May we ever guard with diligent care, with sleepless vigilance, the sacred trust of unity, of perfect fellowship of faith, of life and action that has been our strength.

One thought constantly passed through my mind as I observed the proceedings of the convention of the C. W. B. M. I said to myself: Here is a striking living exposition of the divine reason given in Genesis for the creation of woman: "It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an helpmeet for him."

It is certainly a most feeble and unworthy interpretation of these words to assume that they refer only to the office of woman in her conjugal and domestic relations. No! So great a word as evidently is this goes much farther; it certainly embraces in its widest scope all the social and all the moral and religious life of "the man," the "Adam," in even its greatest enterprises. In all these woman's assistance is needed to bring them to perfect completeness. And nowhere is this more manifest than in the work of the people of God on the earth. See what woman is accomplishing since she has been brought into special activity in her own particular sphere in the great enterprises of the church.

We must understand, once for all, that the vast enterprise of evangelizing "all the world" outside of christendom, including even many nations nominally Christian, must necessarily excite a supreme interest in the Christian church. Nothing can awaken in the hearts of God's people such strenuous motives for action, for liberal consecration of our substance and of ourselves, as the appeal to go forth and bring the whole pagan world to Christ; to save it. This must of necessity ever stand in the front of our missionary enterprises. The argument in behalf of our home missions cannot well be exaggerated. The A. C. M. S. demands and deserves a powerful support from a million and a quarter of Christian believers.

I know of no good ground for looking into the future otherwise than with hope and strong confidence in all our state and general missionary enterprises.

Lexington, Ky.

By W. S. Dickinson.

My mind and heart are so full of good impressions and thoughts of the convention that I am at a loss to specify its strongest points. It was a most inspiring, uplifting meeting; its personnel was excellent and harmonious beyond expectation, with not a note of discord. I was impressed by the careful preparation of the addresses of the various speakers, which, I think, have not been excelled in any of our former conventions; all breathed the spirit of Christ and Christian union; all strongly set forth the importance and necessity of missions—foreign and home—and a deeper spirit of consecration among all Christians.

There was no magnifying "our views;" there was no occasion for it. The arrangements of plans and details were most admirable and could hardly have been excelled. I regret to write of a lack of order during some of the sessions. I suggest that in the future a rule be adopted to have all doors of the hall locked a minute or two previous to the delivering of any address and until its close, none be permitted to pass in or out. An arrangement of this kind, I think, would add to the pleasure of both speaker and listeners.

I regard the Buffalo Convention as one of the most encouraging and helpful of any held by our churches—it so impressed me.

The Outlook As Seen From Buffalo

By W. J. WRIGHT,

Corresponding Secretary of American Christian Missionary Society.

"The morning cometh!" All signs indicate it. As a people we are going forward rapidly. The missionary enterprises can not lag behind—least of all, home missions, the basis of all our organized work.

That every prospect brightens for the American Christian Missionary Society is evident in a few infallible signs much in evidence in Buffalo. Note a few of them: The attendance at the sessions of the home society. Instead of falling off, as at some other conventions, the great hall continued to be well filled at each session. Most of the people came early and got as near as possible to the speakers. Moreover, they stayed till the benediction was pronounced.

That makes the next point evident: They were interested. They knew something of the history of this society which is the mother of more than 3,000 churches in the United States. They wanted to hear her plans discussed and her claims set forth. They were ready, yea eager, for every good word. The flash of wit, the straight hard drive from the shoulder, the revelation of a great opportunity, the accusation that the home society was neglected and did not get the "square deal," the appeal for liberal things, the declaration that her work would be brought to the front—all these were instantly and heartily applauded in every session of the American society.

Her sessions were marked by great addresses. "The greatest day of sacred eloquence within my experience," was the verdict of the bishop of Washington; and men who were forward in the councils of the Disciples of Christ twenty years before Brother Power was known declared it the greatest day of speeches in the history of the society. The optimism of the speakers was contagious. Hundreds voluntarily expressed their firm hope that the new era had been entered upon by the home society, and that her progress would henceforth be many fold greater than in the past. The speakers presented great plans and made powerful pleas for their accomplishment; and the people responding in hearty and prolonged applause showed that they agreed with what was being said.

The convention confirmed the friendship of many and made a host of new friends for the American Christian Missionary Society. These friends, old and new, will take up her burdens as being their own, and will seek to increase greatly the number of individual churches, Sunday-schools and other organizations contributing to her support. Her receipts will swell. The volume of her work will increase, and its quality improve. The whole brotherhood will rejoice in her power and prosperity, and all our other work will go forward the more rapidly because the base of supplies, home missions, has been cared for as becomes wise men engaged in this spiritual warfare.

Without being unmindful of some mists, clouds and partial darkness, here in Buffalo I can not do otherwise than borrow for the American Christian Missionary Society an expression from one of the greatest missionaries, and declare that "The outlook is as bright as the promises of God." Will you help to keep them so?

[And let all the people say Amen!—Editor.]

The Holy Spirit By F. M. Green

To the student of the New Testament there can be no question as to the important place the Holy Spirit holds in the conversion and sanctification of man. From first to last it is given large place; and "his personality, mission and modes of activity" are not confined in a "prison of words," but are declared in words so plain that the discussion of the subject since the apostolic age has added little, if anything, to the clear, clean-cut declarations of the Lord and his apostles. Books have been written almost without number; pamphlets have been written by the thousands; and a great multitude of orators have thundered their dogmas concerning the great subject. To-day the religious periodicals of nearly every "branch" of the Church of Christ are filled with almost numberless articles, pro and con, on some phase of the great question. I have no doubt that many of these speak or write with a sincere desire to explain what they think lacks clearness or needs explanation; but since the early days of my ministry when I considered it my duty to enlighten the people on "The New Birth" and the "Doctrine of the Holy Spirit," I have dreaded the appearance of any new discussion of the subject. Most that appears is the "threshing of old straw" and the added dogmatism of men who are bound to have their way right, "whether or no." In looking through the pages of one religious newspaper which comes to me every week, I noticed a half dozen articles by as many different writers, each of them having a different view of the question and each one quite certain that he was right and the others wrong. But I suppose the discussion must needs go on, for "what has been must be," though "there is nothing new under the sun;" and I pray that no harm may come and the divine declarations concerning the great questions be obscured by clouds. I have read with interest Dr. J. H. Garrison's treatise on the subject. There are several things in the book that I like. First, I agree with him in most of the positions he takes and that makes me feel pleasantly when the other man agrees with me. Second, the author is not a dogmatist and does not seek to force any one to accept his dictum anyhow. Third, all the Scripture passages which bear on the subject are given with a commentary modest and conservative following. All in all I am pleased with the book and am glad I have no fear that "the foundations of the great deep" will be broken up if some of the positions taken by the Christian man who has written it should not be agreed to. The book has its value because it gives indirectly a history of the various stages in the progress of the discussion of the great question. Because of these characteristics the book can be read with profit by all. He who is really "filled with the Spirit" can not lead men astray and his prayer will ever be:

"O Church of Christ, to prayer, to prayer!
  Lean on thy sacred shrine,
And there while lowly bowing down
  Receive the strength divine.
Then rise and let the Spirit's life
  Be healing for thy woes;
And let the Spirit's flaming sword
  Be lightning on thy foes."

"GOOD STUFF"

A Confirmed Coffee Drinker Takes to Postum.

A housewife was recently surprised when cook served Postum instead of coffee. She says:

"For the last five or six years I have been troubled with nervousness, indigestion and heart trouble. I couldn't get any benefit from the doctor's medicine, so finally he ordered me to stop drinking coffee, which I did.

"I drank hot water while taking the doctor's medicine, with some improvement, then went back to coffee with the same old trouble as before.

"A new servant girl told me about Postum—said her folks used it and liked it in place of coffee. We got a package but I told her I did not believe my husband would like it, as he was a great coffee drinker.

"To my surprise he called for a third cup, said it was "good stuff" and wanted to know what it was. We have used Postum ever since and both feel better than we have in years.

"My husband used to have bad spells with his stomach and would be sick three or four days, during which time he could not eat or drink anything. But since he gave up coffee and took to Postum, he has had no more trouble, and we now fully believe it was all caused by coffee.

"I have not had any return of my former troubles since drinking Postum, and feel better and can do more work than in the last ten years. We tell everyone about it—some say they tried it and did not like it. I tell them it makes all the difference as to how it's made. It should be made according to directions—then it is delicious."

Our Budget

—The Evangelistic Campaign goes bravely on.

—"It is a glorious thing to rally souls to the cross of Christ."—Knowles Shaw.

—"God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Paul.

—"They that win many to righteousness shall shine as the stars, forever and ever." —Daniel.

—"There is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine just persons who need no repentence." —Jesus.

—"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy wine and milk without money and without price!"—Isaiah.

—Notice that thirst precedes coming to the waters. The sinner must feel his need of salvation before he will or can come to Christ. This indicates the divine order of procedure. O for the power to convict men of sin! This is the work of the Holy Spirit through the Gospel and the preacher who is most filled with the Spirit will succeed best in this vital work.

—D. Y. Reavis is in a meeting at Linn Knoll, Mo.

—A Christian Endeavor Society will be organized at Lone Jack, Mo.

—J. L. Thompson has been asked to remain another year at Christian Temple, Decatur, Ill.

—Lewis R. Hotaling has re-engaged with the church at Catlin, Ill., for a period of two years.

—Joseph Gaylor reports as the result of a meeting held at Cracker, Mo., the trebling of the preacher's salary.

—Sherman B. Moore reports 440 additions to the First Church at Oklahoma City during twenty-six months.

—W. T. Hilton has just begun, at his church in Atchison, Kan., a winter series of sermons on the book of Acts.

—W. A. Dameron is holding a meeting with home forces at Shelbyville, Mo. Brother Dameron is energetic in the Lord's work.

—A. E. Cory and wife sail back to their mission work in China on the steamship Korea, leaving San Francisco on November 20.

—W. A. Fite has accepted a call to the church at Fulton, Mo., to begin December 1. The church at Windsor will, therefore, need a pastor.

—Lee H. Barnum has resigned at Caldwell, Kan., after three years of service, to take effect January 1, when he will be ready for other work.

—Milo Atkinson, of Marion, Ind., has accepted a call to succeed George A. Miller, at Covington, Ky., and will begin his work there January 1.

—The work at Litchfield, Ill., under M. S. Johnson is making great headway, but the dedication of the church has been postponed until December 2 or 9.

—Alson E. Wrentmore is to begin a meeting at Covington, Pa., November 17. Brother Wrentmore has recently changed his permament address from Cleveland, O., to Litchfield, Ill., where he may be solicited for evangelistic work for any part of the country.

"CHRISTIAN UNION."

"AN IRREFUTABLE ARGUMENT; AN IRRESISTIBLE APPEAL."

DEAR BRO. GARRISON.

I have just finished reading your volume on Christian Union, and have laid it down with the feeling that it was surely suggested to your mind and heart by that Holy Spirit whose influence is so manifest on every page. The treatment of the subject is most happy, for no man can understand the problem of Christian Union who has not studied the history of the Church in its departure from and return towards the simplicity and unity of the Apostolic age. Every one of the five chapters is strong and clear, but the volume rises to a climax in the last chapter, The Period of Reunion. Here is found such vigor of thought, such lucidity of expression, such accuracy of discrimination, such sympathetic recognition of all that is good in other Christians than ourselves, as make an irrefutable argument and an irresistible appeal, for the real unity for which our fathers plead, and for which we, their children pray. The problem "How can we stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, while standing fast also in the unity wherewith Christ hath made us one?" is answered by a sane and irenic setting forth of our appeal to the Christian world such as must have a profound effect upon all who read it. The volume ought to be placed in the hands of all our preachers, and might well be circulated widely among the ministers of all religious bodies. We are greatly your debtors for this delightful and inspiring book on the theme most dear to the heart of every true Disciple of our Lord. May its circulation be worthy of its merits! W. F. RICHARDSON.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 5, 1906.

—E. W. Thornton, who was elected at the Buffalo convention third vice-president of the American Christian Missionary Society, has just begun his second year's work with the church at Long Beach, Cal. During the year there have been 321 additions that will retain membership. This does not include quite a number who came forward during the Scoville meeting, but who placed their membership elsewhere, not being residents of Long Beach. This church gave over $2,500 for missions and benevolence during the year.

E. W. THORNTON.
Third Vice-President of A. C. M. S.

—C. C. Hill is to remain the fourth year at Roswell, N. M., by the unanimous request of his congregation. During his labors there nearly 300 have been added to the membership of the church.

—D. Millar is in a good meeting at Mendon, Mo., with four additions on the day he reported. He would like to hold a few meetings for good town churches this winter.

—J. E. Dinger, minister at Chickasha, I. T., writes he expects to launch a local church paper and would like to receive specimen copies of those published by other churches.

—The remodeled church at Mt. Sterling, Ill., has just been rededicated, free from debt. We have no space in this issue to give particulars. J. E. Lorton is the present minister.

—The foreign society has received an annuity gift of $800 from a friend in Ohio. The society's new and attractive booklet about the annuity plan will be sent free upon application.

—F. M. Rains will dedicate a new building at Watertown, N. Y., December 9. The church extends a cordial invitation to all Christians in the vicinity. S. B. Culp is the minister.

—Lee H. Barnum reports the confession of an old lady who is one year short of 90 years. She came to witness the baptism of her son and during the invitation accepted Christ.

—R. A. Highsmith has started his work well at Prescott, Ark., where formerly there was but half-time preaching. W. D. Humphrey, the home missionary of the Hope Church, is now on the field.

—The prospects of the work at Nevada, Mo., where a meeting is now going on, were never brighter, writes Brother Burks. The membership is more nearly a unit in heart and purpose than for years.

—E. D. Long, who has recently taken charge at Atlanta, Ind., reports a good start there. A Sunday-school rally is to be held the first Sunday in December, and the church rally the first Sunday in January.

—J. H. Hammond, whose field of activity for many years has been in Michigan, paid THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a pleasant visit last week on his way to the Indian Territory, where he will spend the winter.

—Evangelist J. E. McKenzie, of Woodbine, Ia., has recently closed a meeting at Siam, resulting in 38 additions. Seventy-six have been added to the church since September 1. He is now in a meeting at Lacona, Ia., with Ben Alter.

—At the annual jubilee service at La Harpe, Ill., where L. H. Huff ministers, J. M. Elam, of Carthage and President R. E. Hieronymous, of Eureka, gave the principal addresses. The church is in good condition and doing excellent work.

—John Williams, who has resigned at Collingwood, Ont., is now visiting at Lacota, Mich. A good minister is wanted at once for the Collingwood church. The salary offered is $800 and Mrs. James Beecroft should be addressed.

—The Ohio Committee on Pulpit Supply will meet regularly, aid pastorless churches and preachers wanting locations may address J. P. Allison, 6416 Quinley avenue, Cleveland, O; J. E. Pounds, Hiram, or M. L. Buckley, Collingwood.

—Robert W. Lilley has entered upon his third year at Corydon, Ia., where every department of the work is prospering. Brother Lilley teaches a large Bible class on Friday evening.. He has held two meetings for his church, with good results.

—Cecil J. Armstrong will close his ministry at the First Christian Church, Winchester, Ky., November 30. Brother Armstrong has been in this pastorate for five years and has accomplished a fine work. His future is not yet definitely decided upon.

—William J. Russell, of Frankfort, Ind., sends out a note of warning against A. C. Babcock, who has been preaching at Battle Ground, Ind. He is about 35 years of age, with dark hair, of medium size, and a good talker. He is reported to be unfit for the ministry.

—James S. Beem, evangelist, and George W. Light, singer, will assist Hugh Gresham in a meeting at Cornell, Neb., which will begin November 20. They will make use of 300 copies of The Christian-Evangelist to help them in reaching the homes of the people.

—The motto for Oregon missions is 2,000 conversions and $6,000 for the work. F. E. Billington, the corresponding secretary, writes us that the state has been divided into five districts, and the effort is being made to put an evangelist into each one, besides aiding weak churches.

—Tally Defrees has concluded his first year's work at Greenville, Ill., with 170 additions, 31 of them being at regular services. Money raised for all purposes was $1,200, and $350 more for special revival services. Plans are being perfected for another meeting to be held by E. E. Violett.

—Thomas J. Nance, pastor of the church at Plainview, Texas, reports that the building there has been sold and a new one will be erected some time before spring. The present population is about 1,000, but as a railroad will enter the town, the number of residents is constantly increasing.

—It is a little late to hear from the church extension offering, but California is a long way off, and one lone report has just reached us; but as it is a good one we make it public now: The apportionment of the church at Orange was $50, and the offering was $106. A. N. Glover is the minister.

—A veteran minister writes: "I have read your book on 'Christian Union' with great pleasure. It ought to have a wide circulation, especially among our own people, and more especially among our preachers." This veteran is not alone in thinking that we need to make a fresh study of the subject of Christian union.

—The interior of the new house at Alexandria, La., is being completed, although the building has been used for three years. L. A. Betcher, the pastor, would like to know if a river scene suitable for a baptistry, can be purchased. There is a space 6 or 7 by 10 feet which can be used for such a purpose.

—G. B. Townsend, of Troy, N. Y., has accepted a call to Hagerstown, Md. Brother Townsend is one of our bright young preachers whom we learned to appreciate on "The Christian-Evangelist Special" going to San Francisco. We are sure that he will take up the work of Brother Kendrick in proper spirit and with great ability.

—A good meeting is under way at Hamburg, Ia., where W. L. Harris and W. F. Lintt are helping Isaac Elder. At the close a number of meetings will be held in the country. The church at Hamburg has been going steadily forward. Their motto is to have in view to more than double their membership by April 1.

—H. A. Northcutt and Frank C. Huston are in a fine meeting at Brazil, Ind., with E. L. Day. This is part of the Indiana simultaneous campaign. Brother Huston is to assist P. H. Welshimer, who, by the way, has one of the largest Sunday-schools, if not the largest, in the brotherhood, in a great campaign at Canton, O., next February.

—John R. Golden won at the election last week at Gibson City, Ill., where he preaches, with a splendid majority, when he was elected by a good plurality to a seat in the state legislature on the Prohibition ticket. Brother Golden early in life worked on a farm and subsequently learned the carpenter's trade before he entered upon the ministry.

—Mr. Thomas Savage, a business man and one of our devoted workers in Sidney, Australia, visited St. Louis last week. Brother Savage started in company with George T. Walden, and was present at the Buffalo convention. He is on his way to San Francisco, whence he will sail for home before Brother Walden, who has several evangelistic meetings to conduct.

—J. H. Coil has just entered upon his fifth year's work with the church at Higginsville, Mo. During his ministry a new building has been erected at the cost of $1,500. All the offerings have been increased and there have been 80 additions to the church during the past three years. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, will hold a meeting in January, and a good singer is required.

—"'Gloria in Excelsis' is all right!" So writes O. C. Bolman, district secretary of Illinois fifth missionary district. Brother Bolman's church has just had the largest Sunday-school rally ever held in Mason City, and he is in a promising meeting with confessions every night. The church is using 200 copies of The Christian-Evangelist in their campaign.

—Leonard Daugherty, of Louisville, Ky., passed through St. Louis on his way to take part with R. R. Hamlin in a meeting with W. W. Burks, at Nevada, Mo. Brother Daugherty made a pleasant visit to the office of The Christian-Evangelist, and sang a solo at the First Christian Church, where Herbert Yeuell is leading one of the simultaneous meetings.

—There is good news from Sedalia, Mo. W. F. Hamann, pastor of the Broadway Christian Church, reports that over $2,100 on the debt has been raised during the past few months and the mortgage burned. Thus the church is free to spend its energy and money on other work and they are now planning for a special meeting in the near future.

—A. Martin planned for evangelistic work, January 1, after three years of pastoral work at Davenport, Ia., during which period 170 persons were received into membership, all the missionary activities doubled, and a beautiful parsonage erected, though the latter is not paid for. The church is at peace. Brother Martin has a good record for field work in twenty states, four Canadian provinces, and he also had several years experience in England. He is in his prime and believes he can yet do his best work. His church feels so, for they will not let him go.

—W. J. Russell, of Frankfort, Ind., has been absent from his church three weeks in a meeting at Rochester, Ky. During his absence his pulpit has been occupied by Professor Coleman, of Butler College. The church building in Frankfort is being remodeled at a cost of $12,000 on the interior and when completed it will be one of the most attractive churches in the state.

Home Missions

IN THE

Sunday School

Don't fail to send your Sunday-School offering of Sunday, Nov. 25th to the American Christian Missionary Society

Y. M. C. A. Bldg.,

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

It is the right thing to do. The schools are lining up joyously. Let us make it the great day of the year.

—O. L. Hull, of Garrett, Ind., writes of the conversion of a young girl who has a standing offer from a concert company, but who desires to devote herself to Christian work, rather than to the theater. She is compelled to support herself, and Brother Hull asks if there is not some one who can help her to thus consecrate herself, either by employing her to sing in meetings, or by sending her to college.

—Have you read the announcement which the Foreign Society has made about the Centennial fund of $250,000? The heathen cause in foreign lands is suffering for equipment in the way of buildings. This Centennial fund is to be divided to provide colleges, homes and hospitals. We have more than one man in the Christian church who could himself give the amount needed, but the appeal is to the brotherhood in general.

A Wonderful Offer.

$25 to $50 per week. Lady or gentleman wanted in every locality for new line of staple goods. No canvassing. Apply quick. Mercantile Import Co., Dept. 43, 8-10-12 west 125th street, New York city, N. Y.

—H. C. Patterson, of Lexington, Ky., has decided to re-enter the evangelistic field. He has been engaged in business during the past two years, but has preached on an average three sermons a week, having filled pulpits for Carey Morgan, Mark Collis, P. H. Welshimer, and other well known brethren. He has had many calls during the past few months and has decided to enter upon this field of work.

—S. W. Elam has just closed his work at West Point and Fandon, Ill. During eleven months at the former place, fifteen were added to the church and the work is left in good condition. C. F. Pierce succeeded Brother Elan in leading this excellent little band of brethren. At Fandon forty-five were added, thirty-nine of them being by confession and baptism. This is a fine field and the congregation has not yet secured a pastor.

—J. W. Reynolds, who has been pastor at Saunemin, Ill., for the past sixteen months, has accepted a call to the First Church at Clinton, Ill., and is already on his new field, which is one of the strongest churches of the state. E. A. Gilliland recently resigned this pastorate, after nine years of service, in order to enter the evangelistic field. A reception was given the new pastor and his wife, when a large number of the membership greeted them.

—A. F. Reiter has closed a year's pastorate with the Calhoun Street Church, Baltimore, Md. He reports 91 additions, being an increase in membership from 71 to 153. For all purposes more than $1,700 was raised. Brother Reiter was handicapped by a siege of typhoid fever in the spring, and is just now recovering from an operation performed early in September. He is now available for meetings or other work, and may be addressed at Bluffton, Ohio.

—John S. Zeran and wife, who have been working with H. A. Northcutt as his singing evangelists, have given up this work to enter upon a settled pastorate at Gurney, Ill., where the brethren are building a parsonage for them and intend to rally round their new minister. There is scope for a good work at Gurney, and while Brother Zeran has not had much preaching experience, we feel confident that he will meet the expectations of those who have put their trust in him.

—H. A. Pearce has taken charge of the work at Larned, Kan., where we have a new $10,000 building. There are about 200 members in this church and there has just been inaugurated a "Twenty-five Club," one of the aims being twenty-five new subscribers to Christian papers before January 1. Brother Pearce writes us: "As I had edited secular papers for years before entering the ministry I can appreciate the power of so able and sweet spirited a publication as THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

—There has been a corn shucking down in Kentucky. The church at Richmond has one of the most enterprising women's missionary societies in the state. Brother Elmer Deatheridge, one of the deacons, gave the society a load of corn, and nine of the members promptly repaired to the field and shucked six barrels which was sold as missionary corn at $3.10 per barrel. It will appear from a report from Edwin Brown that higher education does not interfere with manual labor, for on this occasion it was two school teachers, Miss Lela Harris and Miss Dorsey Stickton, who carried off the honors.

—J. P. Lichtenberger has been delivering three sermons on "The Disciples of Christ." He recently spoke at the Madison Avenue Baptist Church for Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper, a noted preacher of the Baptists, on "The Contribution of the Disciples to Religious Progress." This was the theme of Brother Litchenberger in his own pulpit in the morning. The other subjects were: "The Disciples: The Philosophy of Their History," and "The Disciples: Their Message to the Church of the Twentieth Century."

—For a period of more than six years the advisability of a new church on the west side of the river at Warren, O., has been under consideration. It remained for the Central Church, under the pastorate of J. E. Lynn, who built a church building at each of his former pastorates, to make a definite move in the matter, and the corner stone of a West Side Christian Church has just been laid. This new congregation will not be formed until the building is completed. Brother Lynn's church has entered upon a ten-weeks campaign of preparation for the decision meetings to be held in January, when he will be assisted by A. W. Taylor and Ida Mae Hanna.

—The sixtieth anniversary of the organization of the Hyde Park Christian Church, Kansas City, is to be celebrated on November 25. Incidentally an effort will be made to wipe out a $5,000 debt on that day. On the Friday night before a banquet for men will be given at the church, and on Lord's day afternoon a pioneers' meeting will be held. It will doubtless be a very enjoyable as well as a great occasion in the life of this congregation, to which Louis S. Cupp now ministers so faithfully. The Sunday-school of this church is now in competition with the South Side school. Hyde Park seems to be leading, which, of course, is a satisfaction to them, but should not, by any means, be a discouragement to the South Side school.

—There are signs of progress at Kankakee, Ill. We like to receive such a report as this: "The church is not large or wealthy but we have a number of godly men and women who know what it means to sacrifice for the sake of Christ." Bro. M. G. O'Brien is the pastor, and he has just entered upon his second year's work. During his ministry forty-seven persons have united with the church, nearly all of them by confession and baptism. There has been a steady growth in the various departments of the church work. We are sure that with the spirit that is manifested under the leadership of the present pastor the coming year will show great progress.

—Austin Perry Finley has just entered upon his ministry at the Highland Street Church of Christ, Worcester, Mass. About a half column report of his sermon appeared in the daily paper of the city. None of the brethren at Worcester had ever seen Brother Finley until his arrival in New England, before entering upon the pastorate, but he was accepted because of his consecrated life and special training. In explaining the interpretation of the call to become a minister of that church Brother Finley said that his understanding of the mission of a minister "is primarily to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ by which the thoughts of the church and community are elevated, their visions broadened and their lives made nobler as they flow into channels of Christianity and usefulness."

—Robert Stewart, who has been pastor of the Park Avenue church, Knoxville, Tenn., for eight years and three months, will close his work there at the end of the year. The membership was 80 when he took charge of the work and 264 have been added to the fellowship, 37 in protracted meeings. Quite a number were lost by removal, death, etc., so that the present membership is 186. The current expenses have been kept up and the minister's salary doubled, the church repaired at considerable cost and a debt of $2,250 almost wiped out. The missionary offerings have increased from $150 to $400 per year. The separation will be with the kindest of feelings on all sides.

—Bro. J. W. Hopwood, of Springfield, Mo., who came to St. Louis a few weeks ago to visit his son here and undergo an operation for a long-standing disease, departed this life Thursday morning of last week. Brother Hopwood was a brother of Josephus Hopwood, president of Virginia Christian College, and both of them were students at Abingdon College with the Editor of this paper. Brother Hopwood has been a teacher and preacher of the Gospel since his graduation, having spent his life in Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma. He removed from the last named place to Springfield about two years ago. From boyhood to the time of his decease he was characterized by his utter sincerity, humility and devotion to duty. All who knew him were impressed by his Christian character. He leaves, besides his widow, three children—two daughters and a married son, whom he was visiting at the time of his death. To his family he bequeaths the priceless legacy of a blameless life. They have our deep sympathy in their great loss. The body was removed to Springfield, Mo., the present home of the family, where the funeral services will be conducted and the body interred.

—The largest number of pulpits ever supplied at one of our national conventions, with one exception, were those placed at the disposal of preachers of Christian churches at Buffalo. There were about 135 services among twelve religious denominations. Bro. B. S. Ferrall deserves great credit for this. For the benefit, however, of future convention goers we wish to emphasize the necessity of having accurate lists of preachers participating. Several of our most widely known speakers were not advertised at all at some of our recent conventions. Of course we understand that preachers appointed sometimes fail to be at the convention. But when there are substitutes a supplementary list should be published. "The saloons are not five cents better off because of this great gathering," says Benjamin S. Ferrall, writing of the convention in his church paper.

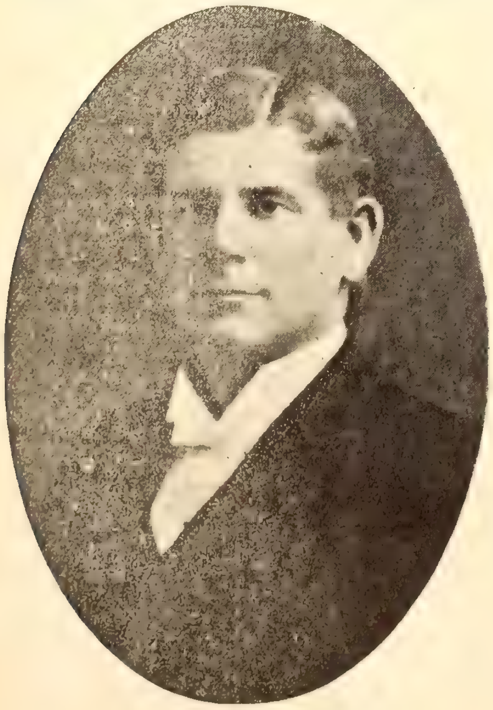
—The new building of the School of Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., was dedicated with appropriate exercises Sunday, November 3, President Ashley Johnson presiding. It was erected at a cost of $30,000, and is said to be an imposing structure 86 feet front by 150 feet deep. The address was delivered by W. J. Wright, corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. This building, with the dormitories, including in the basement the machinery for heating and lighting the building, also a bakery, laundry, etc., are supplemented by a farm of 175 acres, which is cultivated by the students. The energy and enterprise manifested by President Johnson and his wife, in the founding of this school and in rebuilding after the fire, are worthy of all commendation. The design of this institution is well expressed by the inscription on the plate at the door, which reads as follows: "School of the Evangelists. Founded 1895—Rebuilt 1905. Open day and night to the poor young man who desires above every other desire to preach the Gospel of Christ. Ashley S. Johnson, Emma E. Johnson. Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., June 22, 1905."

To Missouri Preachers.

My Brethren: We come to each one of you, asking that you will present the C. W. B. M. work to your people on "Our Day," December 2, or as near to that date as possible, whether you minister to one or several congregations.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is a power in the world, in the churches and more than all, in the individual life. All our sisters need its uplifting influences, and their families need the reflex good. If your church is unfortunate enough not to have an auxiliary to the work, all the more should the day be observed in your church. Shall they not learn of it from their pastor and leader? All needed literature will be gladly furnished promptly.

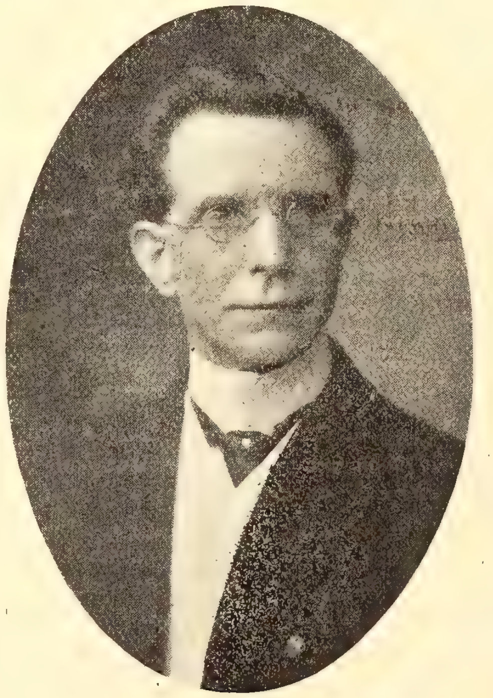
Mrs. L. G. Bantz, Cor. Sec.



E. M. RICHMOND,
Evangelist at Maplewood.

G. L. Wharton, Our First Missionary to the Heathen.

The death of G. L. Wharton at Jubbulpore, India, which was announced by telegram in our last issue, will be felt sorely by a very wide circle of brethren outside those intimately associated with the foreign society's work. His death was wholly unexpected and we have no further information other than it was due to cancer of the stomach. We are not informed whether he had undergone an operation. It may be remembered that Brother Wharton returned some time ago to bring his family, after having spent seventeen years in India as a missionary. His wife and children are now at Hiram, O., where the children are attending school. It was mainly because of his wife's health and his children that Brother Wharton gave up his work in India, but his heart was always on the mission field and he felt compelled to return there. This fact alone is a revelation of the character of the man. He was one of the most consecrated and sincere men we have ever met. He was the first missionary sent out by the foreign society to a heathen field and was, therefore, the pioneer of our work in India. He first went there in 1882.



G. L. WHARTON.

Brother Wharton was born in Monroe county, Ind., in 1847. He lived on a farm till he was 21 years of age. He attended the high school in Terre Haute and later took college work at Carbondale, Ill., after which he taught for two years, finally graduating at Bethany College in 1876. He married a daughter of Dr. R. Richardson. For six years he was minister at Buffalo, and for three years he had charge of the Hiram College church. Brother Wharton's first missionary work was especially along evangelistic lines, but on his return to India this last time he gave more time to the educational features of the work with a view to develop evangelists and preachers among the natives.

Georgia State Convention.

We will meet with the church at Valdosta, November 19-22. It is the first time the state convention has ever met in this immediate section of the state. We are anxious for a large attendance. Adequate provision will be made for the entertainment of all who come. We hope to have a good representation from the churches of

Carried Away in the Reading of a Hymn

Death of D. O. Smart.

Word has just reached us of the sudden death, on Friday evening last, while attending the revival service in his church at Kansas City, Mo., of our widely-known and well-beloved brother, D. O. Smart. He had just risen, the telegram in the paper states, to request that a certain hymn be read as a prayer, and died suddenly with apoplexy. This announcement will bring sorrow to thousands of hearts. As chairman of the Board of Church Extension, as president of the board of trustees of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia, as an elder in the Independence Boulevard Christian Church, of Kansas City, as a friend and supporter of all our missionary, educational and benevolent enterprises, as a fine business man and upright citizen who served his state faithfully one term in the legislature, as a Christian man who exemplified in his daily life the religion of Jesus Christ, he held a high place in the affections and confidence of a large number of the best people of the state and of our brotherhood. Although he was in his sixty-eighth year and his health had been impaired for several years, we had not thought of giving him up so soon. But the Father knoweth best. We do not doubt that our loss is his eternal gain. To the bereaved wife and children, and to the bereaved church our sincere sympathies are extended. To us it seems a personal loss, for he was our friend of many years and we have been associated together in the interests of our cause in Missouri so long that we had come to love him greatly and to trust him implicitly. Thank God for the hope of reunion with such noble spirits in the life that is immortal!

D. O. Smart.

The Circumstances of the Death.

BY JAMES SMALL.

The meeting at the Independence Avenue Church, which has been in progress now nearly three weeks, came to its highest spiritual power Friday evening when ten persons came forward to unite with the church—six by letter and four to make the confession—when an incident, sad, sacred and sweet, took place which will never be forgotten by the 1,500 persons present. Brother Combs, Miss Pearl Denham, the assistant minister, and myself usually are in the corridors of the church half an hour before the service begins, and Friday night was no exception. The people were in an unusually happy and spiritual mood, filled with the spirit of expectancy that we were going to have a great meeting; so much so that Brother Combs remarked, "Brother Small, I feel we are going to have a number of additions to-night." The services began at 7:45 p. m. with rousing songs led by LeRoy St. John and sung heartily by the congregation. Song after song led the audience into a spirit of praise and prayer and blessed fellowship. The writer then stepped to the front and led in prayer fixing the thought on the rich provision of God in Christ for all men. Another song, and Brother Combs read the story of the jailer's conversion with wonderful effect. While the minister was reading Brother St. John whispered to the writer, "Let the audience stand and sing one verse of 'In the Sweet Bye and Bye.'" I announced the verse, but remarked that it made me think of the comrades that are now over there, and how blessed the rest for the weary workers after a while. I went on to speak of heaven and remarked that if we like the country, why heaven would be a paradise and every desire in that direction would be gratified. If we loved the city, why heaven was the city with lights and commotion and companionship. Heaven, in a word, was all that was good and delightful; but far beyond golden streets in a city, far beyond harps and crowns and white robes, is the companionship of loved ones who developed the Christlike life here through "faith, hope and love." We will take all these with us.

Then I talked about enduring as good soldiers here and serving God faithfully while we live, and quoted James Whitcomb Riley's poem on, "There, Little Girl, Don't Cry." Then we sang the song, "Just As I Am." Seven persons responded, and another exhortation on "Life's Greatest Question," with several illustrations for the young people present with candles and chemicals, brought three others to the front.

While we were singing the invitation Brother Smart waved his hand for me to come over to where he was standing in the midst of his class. He said, "Brother Small, I have found a beautiful song in this book which ought to be a prayer for all the teachers and officers in the school to repeat together so that we may do all we can in this service to save some mother's boy—some mother's daughter; will you give us a few moments at the close of this song?" I answered in the affirmative. Going to the front again, I remarked that I did not think the superintendent and officers of the school had had an opportunity in this service to do all they wished to do, and on this Brother Smart rose to his feet and made, in substance, the little talk he had made to me. His voice was tender but strong, and all could see he was full of subdued emotion and earnestness. "Let me read the song, and then I will ask all the teachers to read it as a prayer with me." He began: "My Scholars All for Jesus—" He only read this far when he sat down heavily on the seat. He grew pale and seemed to be at a loss for breath. I called on Dr. Forrester to attend him, but before he could reach him, the brave man had fallen in the strong arms of I. W. Gill, of Wichita, Kan., who was in the audience and sitting near Brother Smart. Brother Gill said afterwards that he could hear him say, as he fell, "It's over." It was but a few seconds when Dr. Forrester, Dr. Coffin, Dr. Thompson and Dr. Berry, who were in the audience, were around our stricken brother, aiding in every way possible, but all to no avail, as he died when they were carrying him across the street to his beautiful home.

It is useless to say that when we learned of the worst, the audience was terribly shaken, fully a thousand people bursting into tears.

So ended the life of a good man full of faith and the Holy Spirit. Some one else who has known him for many years will no doubt write you of his virtues that we might all do well to imitate. Brother Smart was a kind, honest, hospitable, liberal-hearted Christian gentleman. The hope we have in his death is without a cloud. He was not without some faults, to be sure; none of us are. But he was a Christian through principle and many are even saying now, "I have lost my best friend, the church and the world will feel lonelier without Brother Smart."

Our hearts are sore, sore. D. O. Smart is dead. This is loss to a host of friends, loss to a loving family, loss to a stricken church of which he was an honored and beloved elder, loss to the Church Extension Society of which he was the trusted president—loss, loss to the brotherhood. To me he was almost a father. To all men he was a brother. Yet his death was gloriously triumphant.

In sorrow,

November 10, 1906. Geo. H. Combs.

Why Not United?

It was our privilege, on a recent trip from Detroit to Buffalo through Lake Erie, to fall in with a company of some two hundred delegates en route to the great gathering of Disciples of Christ at Buffalo. This body of saints far outnumbered the other passengers on the great vessel that bore us, and in the evening literally took possession of the ship. Assembling at eight o'clock in the main saloon, they held an impromptu conference meeting, at which there were offhand addresses, singing, prayers, and testimonies, making up an evening of real spiritual delight and profit.

These brethren spoke, as Bunyan says, "the language of Canaan." Their hearts seemed charged and their lips overflowed with love for the Lord and Master of us all. It would have been impossible, but for the badges they wore, and an occasional allusion to the denomination they represented, to distinguish them from a similar body of Baptist men and women going on pilgrimage to their own anniversaries. Nor could the writer discover, in conversation after the meeting with a number of their leading men, in what essential respects they differed from their fellow-immersionists of the Baptist household. There were delegates from Canada, from the West and Southwest, from the extreme South, and from Australia, and all were, so far as we could discover, of one mind, and likeminded with us, to the great fundamentals of the faith. So impressed were we with this likemindedness, and with their fervid loyalty to Christ and to the Word of God, that we requested one of their number to favor the readers of "The Examiner" with a concise and precise statement of the fundamental doctrines held by them—a statement to the reading of which we look forward, as we are sure our readers will also, with great interest. If it shall appear that there are to-day no greater differences between these Christian brethren and us than were manifested in the addresses and conversations aboard the good ship Western States, we see no serious obstacle in the way of an essential union between the two bodies, at least in missionary work, at home and abroad. There may be—there certainly have been in the past—wider doctrinal differences between us than came to the surface at the gathering referred to; but it may be that they are not greater than is allowable under the law of Christian liberty, or than do actually exist both in the Baptist and the Disciples fold. It is well, it seems to us, that we should look carefully and with open mind into this matter, lest we thwart the desire of our common Lord that his loyal and obedient followers should be one not only in sympathy and in service, but in fellowship.—The Examiner.

A Word of Approval.

BY PROF. ALVAH S. HOBART, D. D.

Editors "Examiner:" Allow me to speak a word of approval of the editorial of October 25 headed "Why Not United?" The closing sentence is full of serious suggestion. "It is well that we look carefully and with open mind into this matter lest we thwart the desire of our common Lord that his loyal and obedient followers should be one in sympathy, service and fellowship."

All the signs of the times indicate that a spirit of fellowship and an increase of sympathy is at work in the hearts of the Christian world. In all denominations, in all parts of Christendom, among all classes of Christians, there is an uneasiness about these many distinctions and sects. It is not too strong a statement to say that every good man deplores the divisions. But what is to be done about it? Continually to admit the wrong and yet make no move to stop it is not the highest kind of conduct. Why should Baptists, for example, be slow to propose and earnestly seek union both with Disciples and Free Baptists? They were once in the same connection: why not again? Why should there be hesitation and fears? "Ye can discern the face of the skies," said Jesus, "but ye can not discern the signs of the times." Does not this apply to some of this day as well? I confess that it grows upon me that we, the larger denomination, the older denomination, not only can secure the union, but we ought to seek it earnestly until it is accomplished.—The Examiner.

West Virginia.

The report of our special correspondent sent on Friday afternoon indicates that eleven churches in the West Virginia campaign had an average attendance of 201, with 36 new additions, bringing the total up to 284 at that time. We expect Brother Hanes to send us a telegram giving the latest figures up to the time of our going to press. Several of the churches have closed their meetings, some of them feeling that it was a mistake to do this, but special conditions demanded it. The interest is reported as growing in many quarters, and from nearly every source comes word that the churches have been strengthened and much good done even where there have not been large accessions.

St. Louis.

The simultaneous campaign in St. Louis has been in progress for a week, though the meeting at the First Church has run for two weeks. Weather conditions have been favorable and in most of the churches there has been a good attendance, with an increasing interest. The difficulty of advertising the meeting in a great city has been experienced and the chief reliance has been on personal work. There was reported at the minister's meeting at the office of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on Monday morning the following additions: First Church, 119; Union Avenue, 38; Compton Heights, 42; Fourth Church, 19; Hamilton Avenue, 16; Hammett Place, 6; Maplewood, 9; East St. Louis, 5; making a total of 254 up to and including Sunday night's service. On last Lord's day the First Church had the largest number of additions, 30 by confession and 9 otherwise; Union Avenue had 12 confessions and 11 otherwise; Compton Heights 15 by confession and 2 otherwise. At the Fourth there was one confession and 2 otherwise, while at Hammett Place 4 confessions are reported.

A great union meeting of all our churches was held at the First Christian Church on Lord's day afternoon, addressed by C. M. Chilton and Herbert Yeuell. Every member of the Christian Church in St. Louis is expected to be present next Lord's day, at 3 p. m., at the Odeon, when another great mass meeting will be addressed by W. E. Harlow. All the choirs of the different churches are invited to be present, and it is hoped that their numbers will be augmented by other good singers. The singing evangelists in the city will take part. At Indianapolis and other cities hundreds of people are being turned away from the Sunday afternoon meetings, and it is hoped that the St. Louis Disciples will come out in force and give a demonstration to the city next Lord's day by their numbers and their enthusiasm. Brother Harlow, who will make the chief address, held with Brother Turner at Joplin, Mo., what is perhaps the greatest evangelistic meeting ever held in the state of Missouri. Last week was a week of disciplining. Most of the evangelists laid their emphasis on teaching and sowing the seed. It is expected that this week will produce some of the fruits of their faithful work.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois Notes.

The church at Pontiac has taken on new life since entering its beautiful new house. Everybody seems happy and ready for any task. Is it not the rule that those who work and sacrifice are happy? Wonder if the idea that religion makes people long-faced did not come from people of much profession but no work? If so, it is no wonder that a little church, mostly of poor people, after a half century of struggle in a little old church, is happy and joyful after spending nearly $16,000 for a new Christian home. W. G. McColey is the able, industrious and much-loved minister. The church now numbers 250, Sunday-school, 160; Christian Endeavor, 40; and all departments growing. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary was just beginning an institute guided by Misses Lura V. Thompson, state organizer, and Mary Monehan. These special institutes are of great value to the church as well as to the auxiliaries, when the members are wise enough to attend.

Flanagan is another royal church and it is especially happy because, although having but 150 members and all departments of home work to support it, gave to outside work the past year nearly $900. R. E. Thomas is the large-hearted and loyal minister.

The Rutland church, under the ministry of R. B. Doan, is properous and happy. He is in hearty sympathy with all our great enterprises and keeps his congregation well taught and informed, consequently the church is liberal and useful. No great cause appeals to it in vain. A splendid meeting was in progress, in which C. L. Organ, a former Eureka student, but now state evangelist of Iowa, was assisting the pastor.

I was happy, by invitation of several month's to enjoy the generous hospitality by S. G. Macartney and wife during the Buffalo Convention. He was one whom I had the pleasure of baptizing, among more than a hundred who obeyed the gospel while I was in Buffalo. It is clearly in the province of Illinois Notes to mention the contribution which Illinois made to the convention. I regret that the reports of the treasurers of all departments were not distributed so we could see how Illinois compares with other states in its offerings. Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, and Missouri figure usually about the same.

The church has great colleges, considering the small investment in them and the small attention given them, their work is almost miraculous in the production of great men. Had it not been for the guiding and blessing hand of the unseen Partner we would to-day be desperately embarrassed for want of men, ministers. W. J. Wright, secretary of home board, said "We ought to graduate 4,000 preachers from our colleges by 1909." We will need that many preachers by that time or sooner. Shall we give attention to their production? Our own college in Illinois has great reasons for joy and gratitude in the many strong men she has given to the world. Fifteen of the sermons delivered in the pulpits of Buffalo, October 14, were by men formerly connected with Eureka College. They were gathered from six states of the Union, Cuba, China and Africa, and the representatives of Eureka College on the general program acquitted themselves most honorably. Mrs. W. W. Wharton's address before the C. W. B. M. is characterized by a great journal as "Chaste in diction, poetic in conception and tender in pathos." Other good speeches were made by W. F. Richardson, W. W. Sniff, J. P. Lichtenberger, C. S. Medbury, and Pres. J. Hopwood. The delightful reception to former Eureka students and alumni, by Mr. C. J. Phillips and wife, has already been reported in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

There seem to be some good stayers among the Eureka men. W. F. Richardson has been with the first church, Kansas City, for twelve years. G. A. Miller the same length of time at Covington, Ky., and H. O. Breeden, twenty-one years in Des Moines, Iowa. When we face the great results of the college efforts, made in our great state, it ought to furnish inspiration for larger patronage, greater gifts, and a holy zeal to multiply the power and usefulness of Eureka College. Shall we do it?

A Way to Law and Order.

A victory for law and order was recorded at the ballot box in St. Francois county, Mo., last week. St. Francois is one of the most wide open, lawless counties in the state. When the writer came to Farmington seventeen months ago, there were five murderers in the county jail waiting for trial. The eight saloons were, and are still open 365 days in the year, with all their attendant evils. Our first appeal was to the county officers, without effect. Then the county court was visited to ascertain, on what ground the saloon license was granted. We then attended the circuit court, and discovered the farce in dealing with cases brought before that body, under the liquor law. We then interviewed the judge of the court, to inquire from him the cause of this strange proceeding, and learned that he was acting under instruction from the governor to the prosecuting attorney. Not being satisfied with this, a letter was written to Governor Folk asking him if he had given such instructions. With his denial in hand, and many other facts, the case was presented to the people of the county, who decided in favor of law and order by defeating the prosecuting attorney by over 300 votes, and a general shake up in the political situation.

The writer conducted a single handed fight, with the exception of the good people who said, "Good, go on."

EDWARD OWERS.

Farmington, Mo.

North Carolina.

From October 8 to 18 I preached in a meeting with the church in Rural Hall, a village twelve miles from Winston-Salem and a point of vantage. It is also the station for Moore's Springs, a summer resort. Sister Moore and her family are Disciples and hundreds of people go there every summer to drink the healing waters. Our meeting was one of joy. There were two confessions and one Baptist brother took his stand under the broader name Disciple.——Lord's day, October 28, was a happy day with the church in Winston-Salem, the debt owed the Church Extension Board having been paid. We burned the mortgage. H. C. Bowen, who was minister when the house was built, was present and preached. The reports showed 50 members added from September 1, 1905, to September 1, 1906. Money expended for evangelistic meeting, $924.19, local preaching, $625; missions and benevolences, about $70; church debt, $928.35; the total was $2,863.37. The amount on the missionary side is too small to satisfy us. We have already increased our offering for state missions over three fold and hope to make a better showing in other departments. We are considering the plan of making the first Lord's day in each month a day for a missionary or benevolent offering.

J. A. HOPKINS.

A Trip to Southeast Missouri.

This included a day at Libertyville at the St. Francois County Convention, and thirteen days at Poplar Bluff in a meeting. The convention was marred by the rains, but gave me a better acquaintance with the difficulties of the field and the faithfulness of some of these men of God. Owers and Judge Nations, of Farmington, Rogers of Fredericktown, Fenstermacher, of Poplar Bluff, G. T. Smith, of Dexter College, and several other ministers were in attendance. Here are some strong men, in one of the greatest missionary sections of the middle west. Eastern capital by the tens of thousands is pouring into this part of the state. Here are devout souls, but the ungodly are doubtless in the majority. Many of the devout have had the culture of the non-progressive, but from a personal touch with these ministers and people I commend them to the brotherhood of the stronger sections of our state. They need sympathy, encouragement, prayer. They need greater concern on the part of our state boards.

At Poplar Bluff, we found a loyal few in town of 8,000 or more, with sixteen saloons and total protestant membership of perhaps less than one thousand. In the thirteen days there were three confessions, and two added by letter. Brother Fenstermacher continued one week longer, reaching a total of sixteen. Ten of these were by confession. This splendid result is to the praise of the pastor and the people.

Jasper County (Mo.) Convention.

The Jasper county meeting was held this year with the church in Carterville. It was the best yet, sixty-four delegates being present. The sessions of the convention were held in the M. E. church, owing to the improvements being made on the Christian church. It will, when completed, be the most commodious and elegant church in that city.

The report of the work done by J. W. Baker, county evangelist, was enthusiastically received as it deserved to be. It showed, number of days, 303; sermons and addresses, 298; additions, 156; money raised, $5,140.98; one church organized, a house built and dedicated without debt; three dying churches revived, and four pastors located. This is a splendid showing, and one of which Jasper county is proud. Brother Baker enters the general evangelistic work, beginning at Granby November 8. The specific work of the county for the coming year will be to assist Purcell to have regular preaching and to organize a church at Oronogo and build a house of worship, and looking to the accomplishment of this, the convention adjourned to meet with the church in Oronogo the last Wednesday in October, 1907. The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, W. F. Turner, Joplin; vice-president, N. L. Simms, Carthage; secretary, W. E. Reavis, Webb City; treasurer, Geo. L. Peters, South Joplin.

Before leaving the church at Caldwell I had begun a work at Emmett, Star and Wilson, Idaho, and Arcadia, Oregon. We have now at Star 63 members, and one who confessed yet to be baptized. Star is one of the oldest churches in this region and has been held together by a few faithful followers, among whom we find Brother and Sister O. W. L. Hall, Bro. J. S. Lankford and his good wife, Brother and Sister Palmer. Gilman, Neff, Bullock, Gray, Hart, Fry, Simon and other families have held together for a real live church at Star.——Last week two young ladies baptized in the Boise river at Star; this week one in Snake river at Wilson. At Emmett we have 15 members and one to be baptized. At Wilson we have 15 confessions ready for baptism in the Snake. There we have a little mission band of 20 believers united for work. At Arcadia we have 19 believers organized into a working band, and there, too, we have four or five confessions getting ready to put on Christ. At Caldwell there are two confessions arranging for further obedience in the way of putting on Christ in baptism. At Star and Emmett we are hoping for stationed ministers by spring or summer, and there are no better regions or healthier in Idaho than Emmett and Star.

CLOSING THEM OUT
We have Twenty-Five Sets Only
—OF THE—
COMPLETE WORKS OF LORD LYTTON
IN 15 VOLUMES, LARGE 12MO, HALF LEATHER, GILT TOP AND BACK.

These books are of the very best quality in every way. We not only say it, but we guarantee it.

The publishers have used fine paper, splendid and numerous illustrations, and the best, most durable and attractive binding in preparing this work. The set consists of 15 volumes, each containing (on an average) 370 pages. Each volume measures 8¼ inches long, 5½ inches wide, 1⅝ inches thick and weighs about 2 pounds.

If they do not meet your expectation when you receive and examine them, you have the privilege of returning them to us. We want you to understand that you take no chances.

Everybody knows of Bulwer Lytton's writings. They have an acknowledged place in the very front rank of literature. No one's library is anything near complete without them. For originality, for an intimate knowledge of humanity with its moods and fancies, for ability to portray ideas in energetic yet elegant and artistic language, it is doubtful if Lord Lytton has ever been equalled.

THEY ARE A FINE AND HANDSOME LIBRARY OF THE VERY BEST WRITINGS IN THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Do not confuse these books with so-called "cheap" editions. They are of the very highest type of first-class publishers' work. There is nothing poor or undesirable in their construction. Any book case or library, no matter how fine, is not too good for them.

Remember that our guarantee goes with them, and if you are not pleased, you need not keep them.

What a Magnificent Christmas Gift these 15 Splendid Volumes Would Make!

Meeting at Odessa, Mo.

We had large audiences all week prior to the coming of Brother Fenstermacher, and the interest was unusually satisfactory. He joined us the first of the week. The chorus, led by Mr. Charles Gross, has been furnishing a song service that is inspiring. We held a union meeting for young men in our church at which the Rev. E. J. Hunt, presiding elder of the Sedalia district of the Methodist Episcopal church, who has been in a meeting with the Odessa M. E. church, delivered an inspiring address. This was followed by a sermon by the Rev. A. H. Kelso, pastor of the Presbyterian church, U. S. A. The service was unusually good in spirit and the attendance was large. Our prospects are splendid for the best evangelistic campaign in the history of the Odessa Christian church. F. W. Allen, pastor.

Kentucky Mission Work and Workers.

The Beattyville work is reported by the minister, J. Stuart Mill, as progressing satisfactorily. He expects the congregation to give more for support of local work than ever before.——Four additions at Latonia. H. C. Runyon and P. H. Duncan began in a meeting first Sunday in November. The house and lot adjoining the church lot has been deeded by Mrs. Whipps on the annuity plan to the congregation. She gave the lot on which the house of worship stands. The property just given is worth $1,600. This means more room on which to enlarge, or build houses of worship and a parsonage.——The veteran evangelist of Eastern Kentucky, D. G. Combs, had the best month of the year—58 baptisms and 117 added altogether; a house assured in Bath county, at Kendall Springs and $397.25 raised for this purpose. At time of report he was in a meeting in Rockcastle county.——W. J. Cocke reports 28 days in the field at Erlanger and Kirksville. Thirty added. He is to help at South Louisville. Arrangements are not made for filling his time with meetings after January first.——J. W. Masters says that the house at Harlan is progressing well. He has baptized 24 in a community where we have never been heard until now. A number of heads of families added and an organization and the building of a house of worship is assured. This will be our first house in the county outside of Pineyville and Middlesborough.——Walter E. Mill has begun the work at Bromley with prospect of growth.——Earl B. Barr has undertaken the Worthville work since the volunteer meeting of J. F. Mahoney. Prospects are favorable.——H. L. Atkinson began work with the Hazel Green and West Liberty congregations as special missionary of the church at Winchester. H. J. Derthick thinks he will do a fine work.——At Edmonson T. S. Buck has resigned to work under the auspices of the Anti-Saloon League. A good man is needed for Burksville and contiguous field, paying about $600——Jellico, Tenn., is beginning to lift its head from the awful calamity caused by the explosion of a carload of dynamite. Our church building will have to be rebuilt; but the Sunday-school room can be repaired at a cost of about $50 so that it can be used until spring. The brethren are heroic and entitled to the help of the brotherhood.——H. W. Elliott was prevented from being away two Sundays during October on account of the sickness and death of his father-in-law. Much work was done in the way of sending out letters and literature relative to the November offering. About 25 per cent of the preachers or congregations replied and as about fifty per cent of those on the apportionment list give this is a very fair response at the present date. Many that have not replied can be as safely relied on to co-operate as those that have agreed in written statement to do so. The amount collected for October was $187.35—a gain of $148.90 over last October.——We urge all our churches and preachers to give all possible diligence to the matter of prime importance for November, namely, taking the offering for Kentucky missions. Remit as early as possible. The treasury is empty. H. W. Elliott, Sec. and Treas.

South Carolina State Convention.

The twenty-seventh annual convention of the Churches of Christ in South Carolina is to be held at Ellenton November 22-25. Ellenton is twenty miles from Augusta, Ga., on the C. & W. C. railway. An attractive provisional program has been made out. It is earnestly desired that every church be represented. Let all delegates go prepared to make pledges for ensuing year. Any church not able to send a delegation, should be represented by letter, and if practicable by a contribution for the "state work;" also by pledges for ensuing year. Churches in arrears should send in their dues at once to Dr. C. W. Erwin, Allendale, S. C. We are expecting A. McLean, Geo. B. Ranshaw, G. W. Muckley and others from a distance. The public is cordially invited, and especially the ministers of Georgia, and brethren and sisters connected with any of the departments of church work. Brethren, let us unite and have the grandest convention in our history. Visitors coming by rail will be met at depot. Prospective delegates will please write to Capt. G. H. Bush, Ellenton, S. C., giving names and addresses who will provide for entertainment upon arrival. Watch Christian-Evangelist for special rates. By order of J. C. Richardson, president; C. W. Erwin, corresponding secretary.

ALL WILL WANT

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIRT TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme.

Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan, the surprises that worked out of that break.
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

American Standard Bible
Edited by the American Revision Committee

Why Was It Made?

This new translation of the Bible was needed because many parts of the older translations, made hundreds of years ago, were not easily understood by the people of today. Words and phrases are used in the old versions which are not even in the dictionaries of the present age.

There were also many inaccuracies in translation in the older versions of the Scriptures, which have been corrected in the American Standard Bible.

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE LESSON. —Isa. 5:11-23.

Memory Verse, 11.

Golden Text.—I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection. 1 Cor. 9:27.

The prophets of Israel were all preachers of temperance. It was only rarely that they—or any other Biblical writers or speakers—had anything to say about the evils of strong drink, for that particular sort of intemperance had not assumed the proportions that it has to-day.

One may imagine, with but slight effort, how Amos or Isaiah would have poured out the vials of their holy wrath upon the saloon as an institution corrupting public life, controlling elections, serving as the rallying point for all the vicious, dangerous and destructive elements in social and political life.

The little wine shop of Isaiah's day sold wine and people who drank too much of it were rebuked. But the wine shop has grown into the saloon, which sells a dozen things worse than wine and has, besides, reared itself into a political institution and a great vested interest which must be protected.

In the early chapters of Isaiah, the prophet is reproaching Israel for her faithlessness and corruption. Although the chosen of the Lord, she has become as an unfruitful vineyard (5:1-7). Therefore destruction shall come, and the vineyard shall be rooted up.

Some classes of people who had so lowered the moral and religious level of Israel are mentioned. There are the grasping and covetous who would increase their possessions even to crowding the poor from the very face of the earth. Woe to them! (5:8) There are those whose energies are all spent in revelry. Early and late they are at the wine. They have time and strength to spend in any debauch by day or by night, but they can spare no attention for the worship of God, the observation of his law, or even for attention to his handiwork in nature. Woe unto such! (5:11-12)

There are other classes of sinners also against whom the woe is pronounced: those given to falsehood (v. 18); those in whom falsehood has so far perfected itself that their moral judgments are wholly perverted and reversed, as Satan is made by Milton to say, "Evil, be thou my good" (v. 20); the self-righteous and self-satisfied (v. 21); again the drunken and riotous (v. 22); and finally those who pervert justice for a bribe. (v. 23).

"My people are gone into captivity for lack of knowledge." Vice usually originates in ignorance. Sin is a great mistake. It is not on that account the less sinful, but it is the more pitiable. And that fact gives us a method for fighting it, not by scolding but by teaching. There is no captivity worse than that of intemperance, and those who are going into it are doing so from lack of knowledge. Let the church teach.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

November 21, 1906.

GOD'S PROVIDENT CARE. 1 Peter 5:7; Matt. 6:25-34.

"Yes, for me, for me he careth
With a brother's tender care;
Yes, with me, with me he snareth
Every burden, every fear.

"Yes, o'er me, o'er me he watcheth,
Ceaseless watcheth, night and day;
Yes, e'en me, e'en me he snatcheth
From the perils of the way.

"Yes, for me he standeth pleading
At the mercy seat above;
Ever for me interceding,
Constant in untiring love."

With all God's care for us he can not appear in our stead in the day of judgment. There amid its awful sublimities each man must appear for himself. But while God can not appear for us he will appear with us if through righteousness we have secured the advocacy of his Son.

Seeking first and exclusively the kingdom of God and his righteousness we become strangely exempt from the cares of life. Whether heretofore we have suffered from them on account of our fears (and out of mind, free from fear) or because God miraculously shields us from them, we know not, but we are free and full of peace and joy.

The same infinite love that prepared water for the fin, air for the wing, bread for hunger, beauty for the aesthetic taste within, has also prepared a glorious eternity in response to the soul's deathless longings for holiness and immortality. Yes, from the grave he will call his every child and in heaven invest him with the white robe and scepter and harp and the glad new song.

God's care does not fail when storm clouds lower and friends and good fortune flee. While he brings none of the sorrows of life upon us yet he does at times so utilize these apparent calamities as to bring us into nearer relationships to him and consequently into greater usefulness and happiness than we could otherwise have attained unto. If thoroughly committed unto God let us welcome the rain as well as the shine.

It does not in the least detract from our idea of the augustness of God that in his provident care the lower orders of life have share. The furs of polar fauna, the enlarged perspiratory glands of animals near the equator, the unfailing instinct that forewarns them of storm or drouth and that leads them to abstinence, to springs, or medical plants shows that the superabundance of loving care for all to which he has given breath is kindly conducted to those lower orders as physically sensitive as we. No one is like unto God who is unkind to any of the animal life beneath us.

Three great Bible texts are (1) For every man shall bear his own burden (2) Bear ye one another's burden and so fulfill the law. (3) Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he will sustain thee. These teach that there are some burdens each must bear for himself, others we may and ought to help each other bear, and others that will utterly crush us unless we commit them unto the Lord. Our Father solicitously pleads with us to let him help us. Let us enter into that joyous estate possible only when self-reliant to the limit of our strength, fraternally disposed toward a needy world, and having our Father for our great burden bearer.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Costs Nothing to Try.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

If not for America and Americans for what land and race will missionary martyrdom crown the cross with glory?

The San Francisco convention recommended that Idaho be made the special field for the missionary enterprise of our Endeavorers. Secretaries Wright and Ranshaw have referred the gathering of these special funds to Sarah Bird Dorman, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati. Five thousand dollars are requested for this year. Let every society have at least a little part in this great ministry.

We need not seek arguments in justification of home missions. All we need is to open our eyes to the saloons and breweries, race tracks and gambling dens, the worship of mammon and the votaries of fashion, the unequal distribution of wealth and the heartlessness of the acquisitive, the desecration of the Lord's day, the neglect of Jehovah and the lost consciousness of eternity everywhere manifest and we see the necessity of more thoroughly evangelizing America.

We Disciples are said to have four frontiers in America. More than 1,000,000 of our one and one-quarter million members live between Buffalo and Topeka, Kan., east and west, and between Chicago and Memphis, north and south. In the great regions lying on all sides of these bounds Disciples were long as rare as was the Word of the Lord in the days of Eli. Even as the love of God surged against the cross in Christ's time to enter into the larger life of Israel should we press against all these lines in order to bear the precious truths committed unto us to all our countrymen.

Our frontiers are not only geographical but moral as well. Custom, the sentiments of an age, our own disposition toward God, set bounds to Christian activity, to our consecration and visions of the higher life. When we scale some of these boundary walls, break through these limitations, struggle into larger liberty, we find other frontiers toward and through which the nobler will make their way in ceaseless endeavor to attain unto the liberty there is in Christ and to make all free. The last boundary line we cross will be the threshhold of the throne room of the eternal.

What Livingstone was to darkest Africa, Marcus Whitman was to wildest and most inaccessible America. In 1838 he established the first mission in the great northwest when there were but about fifty Americans in all that great empire now comprising Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming. In 1847 he was massacred by those red savages to whom he went to tell the story of the true happy hunting ground. Whitman College, at Walla Walla, was built over his grave and helps commemorate one of the noblest lives in American history.

The home missionary is essentially a patriot. Whitman was notably so. When England was plotting to loop her border line beneath the imperial Oregon domain he rode horseback through the trackless wilds from the Pacific to the national capital to acquaint President Tyler, Daniel Webster and other statesmen of Britain's designs and of the natural resources of that great land many were disposed to surrender to England as the price of ignoble peace. While he added to the geographical and political puissance of our country other missionaries are adding to the wealth of American character, exalting its manhood, and making of it the noblest land that ere the sun shone on.

deavor to understand the most mystic passages of Browning in "Sordello," or the most sonorous pages of Carlyle's "Sartor Resartus," or some of the meanderings into philosophy of the Rev. R. J. Campbell in his fine but sublimated city temple sermons. All attempts to fathom such lucubrations are vain, for me at any rate; but to reconcile the extreme opposites of this Diggleism beats all other difficulties of the kind. It is encouraging, however, to note that the aspiration after Christian unity is everywhere in the air, although the majority of those who are thus longing for the consummation seem unable to see the only way to achieve it. The fact seems to be that they carefully shun the path of self-sacrifice which alone would lead them to it. They have no thought of surrendering their attachment to exclusive and privileged traditional ecclesiasticism. They would enjoy freedom while hugging the shackles of custom. How futile all the talk therefore is! Yet it may lead some who listen to it to the right reflections and put them in the path of candid inquiry. As to the Anglican bishops, there is only one real radical amongst them all—only one real progressive. He is that splendid liberal, Dr. Percival, Bishop of Hereford.

W. B. CREWDSON.

PIPER.

Our dearly beloved brother, C. H. Piper, was called to the higher life Wednesday October 31, after a short illness with pneumonia. The neighborhood loses a genial friend, the church at Garden City a wise counsellor, and the family a devoted husband and father. The sincerest sympathy of all is with the stricken wife and family.

Garden City, Minn.

VAUGHN.

Alie E. Vaughn (nee Camplin) was born May 1, 1855, in Monroe county, Mo. She confessed Christ, and was baptized by Elder Rice when nearly 14 years old, and at her death, October 12, 1906, rounded out a true, beautiful Christian life and character. She married C. F. Vaughn January 22, 1880, and left, grieving over their loss, but rejoicing in heaven's gain, a husband, three sons, one sister, two brothers and her aged father. The funeral was held October 13, by the writer.

H. CAMPBELL CLARK, minister.

Ingersoll, Okla.

ROBERTSON.

Mrs. Sarah E. Mingle Robertson was born November 18, 1906, and, obedient to the gospel at the age of 21, has been faithful to the Master since. She was married to R. S. Robertson October 24, 1877, and of this union were born nine children, two having died in infancy. Brother Robertson had just moved from Malden, Mo., to Osborne, Kan, to take charge of the church where everything seemed so promising, when his wife was taken ill. She leaves a faithful husband, seven grown children, five grandchildren, a loving father and seven brothers to mourn her loss. She was always faithful to her family, and consecrated to her Master. Her spirit departed September 26, 1906, and the funeral was conducted by F. T. Roy, of Downs, in the Christian church.

HAYNES.

Miss Maria Frances Haynes, sister of our veteran preacher, N. S. Haynes, died on October 12, 1906, at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Lucinda Rogers, Maysville, Ky., whither she had gone from Eureka, Ill., a few weeks before. Miss Haynes was born and raised at Eureka, where she was active in both church and college circles for many years. At fourteen years of age she became a member of the Christian church and in recognition of her active and helpful service in the church, a beautiful testimonial from the members of the Young Ladies' Auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions of Eureka, Ill., was requested to be read at the funeral, which was held at the residence of her sister, Mrs. A. A. Major, on October 15, 1906, the remains having been brought to Eureka.

B. J. RADFORD.

FINCH,

One of our Sunday-school scholar, Mamie Finch, 12 years of age, went home to be with her Heavenly Father, Oct. 30. Through a long and painful illness she manifested a patient, loving spirit, and was most thoughtful of those who cared for her. She leaves a mother, brother, aged grandmother and stepfather of the immediate family; also a friend of the family, Mr. M. H. Selby, who deeply mourn her loss. Mr. Selby has loved her as his own. He has lived for her. His every thought has been for her welfare and his loss seems now irreparable. But she is now with One that will do everything that is for her best welfare annd we may be with her in that home where there is no more pain. She cannot return to us to brighten our way with her presence, but we can go to her. DAVID N. WETZEL.

Mattoon, Ill.

HEROD.

William Erastus Herod was born in Boone county, Ky., September 30, 1821, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. W. D. Mowry in Kansas City, Kan., October 19, 1906, aged 85 years and 19 days. When ten years of age his parents located near Columbus, Ind. He was twice married. Brother Herod had been a liberal and devoted Christian for 68 years. He was a man of warm friendships and generous hospitality. His house was always the preacher's home. One brother, Robert Herod, of Chanute, Kan., three sons, Prof. E. A. Herod, of Alva, Okla.; A. L. Herod, of Thayer, Kan., and Dorcy Herod of Chanute, Kan; and one daughter, Mrs. W. D. Mowry, of Kansas City, Kan. Several grandchildren and a host of brethren and friends were present at the funeral at the Christian church in Thayer, Kan., his late home. C. W. YARD.

Baxter Springs, Kan.

REGAL.

Mrs. Annie McGowan Regal was born October 29, 1841, and died October 20, 1906, aged 64 years, 11 months and 21 days. United in marriage to Miller McGowan in May 1861; of this union were born seven children, two sons and five daughters. One son and three daughters survive. Her husband, Miller McGowan, died December 18, 1876. She became the wife of Mark B. Regal on March 28, 1878. She has been a sufferer since 1881, and for the past four years she has been helpless. She was a niece of the well beloved Elder Jonas Hartzell. A faithful Christian for many years, and one of the most patient in her serious suffering the writer has ever known; she died strong in her faith that all is well. Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. E. G. Laughlin, on October 22, at North Benton, Ohio. CHARLES E. TAYLOR.

Deerfield, Ohio.

PITNEY.

Drusilla Pitney was born in Coshocton county, Ohio, March 6, 1830. With her parents she went to Missouri where she grew to womanhood. In 1852 she returned to Ohio and on June 28, 1853, was married to John McElroy, who passed away February 9, 1869. They were the parents of eight children, but two of whom survive her, Mrs. Emma White, of Trenton, Mo., whose husband is pastor of the church there, and Mrs. Ada Fox, of Millersburg, who with her husband nursed and cared for her during her last illness. Early in life she became a Christian and for more than half a century she has been a member of the Christian church in Millersburg, O. She departed this life September 4, 1906, at the age of 76 years, 5 months and 28 days. Funeral services, conducted by the writer, were held at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. C. Fox at Millersburg on Thursday, September 6.

Canton, O. P. H. WELSHIMER.

CROWE.

Our much beloved brother, Eld. J. T. Crowe, departed this life on October 22, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. B. F. Sapp, of Joplin, Mo., of paralysis. John T. Crowe, was born at Bellaire, Ohio, on June 20, 1838; served through the rebellion with the Ohio Volunteer Infantry; was married October 22 (same date of his death) 1865, to Miss Maria Louise Davis, of which union were born five children, all being dead except the twins, James and Edna. His wife died April 23, 1883, and soon after he moved to Gravette, Ark., where he was largely instrumental in building and promoting the Church of Christ, and in it his labors never were irksome. He served five consecutive times as superintendent of the Sunday-school, and the brethren regretted to have him withdraw from that office which he did on account of poor health; but he was ever ready to occupy a vacancy. We are grieved at his death, but knowing his life here realize that his departure means his eternal gain; for there certainly is a glittering crown in store for our good old Brother Crowe. He was married to Mrs. Anna C. Dunning in 1895. His wife dying in 1904, Brother Crowe has since lived with his daughter. HERB LEWIS.

Gravette, Ark.

McCLUNG.

Mary Ellen Scott McClung was born February 11, 1816, in Jefferson county, Ind. She was the second of seven children born to James and Mary Scott. Of these only one, J. M., now past eighty years of age, and living at Portland, Oregon, survives her. Mrs. McClung spent her early childhood on the farm in Jefferson county. While still a young girl her parents moved to Crawfordsville, Montgomery county. Here she lived until her marriage, May 16, 1837, to James C. McClung, when they settled on a farm three miles from Crawfordsville. Living there until 1847, they moved to Iowa, buying a claim near Dahlonega, Wapello county, upon which they lived until the death of Mr. McClung, July 23, 1892. Since his death Mrs. McClung has made her home with her children. The marriage of Mrs. and Mr. McClung proved to be a very happy one. Seven children were born to them, of whom five are living; Jno. S., of Dahlonega, Ia.; Susan Frances, living three miles south of Hedrick, Ia.; Martha M., of Hedrick, Ia.; Millard H. and Ryland, both of Portland, Oregon; Rebecca Ellen Kitterman, deceased December 28, 1860, and James Scott, deceased July 3, 1889. There were two step-children, by husband's former marriage: Mary Jane, deceased December, 1854, and Samuel McClung, deceased October 2, 1903. There are twenty-one grandchildren and twenty-four great grandchildren surviving her. Mrs. McClung confessed her Savior while yet in her teens, uniting with the Church of Christ. She was a devoted Christian, ever happy in the work of her Master. For many months before her death she had been unable to attend church, which was a source of much regret to her. However, in word and thought and deed she constantly held up to the world her Risen Savior as the world's model and at every opportunity expressed her confident expectation of meeting her Savior in heaven. About three weeks before her death, while visiting at the home of her grand-daughter, Mrs. Smith, of Linby, Ia., she experienced a severe fall which confined her to her bed and was the probable cause of her death. Sinking very rapidly she died on Sunday, October 21, at 9 a. m. The funeral services were conducted from the house at 10 a. m. by Rudolph Heicke, pastor of the Church of Christ at Hedrick, assisted by Elder Jasper Smith, of Abbington, Ia. The remains were laid to rest by the side of her husband in Dahlonega cemetery.

BAPTISMAL DOGMA AND THE GREAT COMMISSION

By J. S. HUGHES.

The words, "Baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit" (Matt. 28:19) are words that Christ never used. Look and see. We have a number of baptisms occurring in the New Testament, in the Acts and elsewhere related, and in not a single instance are the words, "Into the name of the Father and Son and Holy Spirit" used. That is the plain truth and ought of itself to settle it. But I am asked how I know it was not used. They did not use it because where any form of words was used it was another and not this form, as, "in the name of the Lord," and to have used the former they would have had to use both, and so have doubled, which we can not receive. To affirm they used such form is to speak where the Bible does not speak. And not only so, but it is bad form for those who have rejected infant baptism on the ground that no case is recorded of infants being present at household baptisms and who have said to the practicer of infant baptism, "It is your place to show, since you practice it, that there were infants in the families that were baptized," to now put themselves on this same ground of defense and with even less show, for not only is the formula of Matthew absent in every recorded instance, but other forms take its place, and so exclude it. That Christ never spoke these words will further appear, if they are needed, by noting well the following facts:

1. Matthew's gospel is alone in using these words, no other book has them. Neither Luke nor John mention baptism in the commission.

2. "Baptizing the nations," is an idea entirely foreign to Christ's teaching which was so strictly personal. He never hinted at anything of the kind being done to nations as such.

3. How could Christ at that time speak of the Holy Spirit in such official way, the Holy Spirit not yet having come into his office!

The disciples had not yet even asked anything in his name and he had kept them in the Father's name.

This commission in Matthew, like that in Mark, has the appearance of having been tacked on at the end, and Matthew's commission as having been given in Galilee, while Luke and John refer to it as having been given at Jerusalem. But those long accustomed to regarding baptism not only as authorized by Christ, but as the one thing in which his authority was most centralized and expressed in the Great Commission, we go even further. There never existed, in fact, the thing we call "The Great Commission." There is nothing called a commission either great or small, and what we mean by it was not known to Christ's apostles, in fact.

We admit at once that Paul did not come under the same commission with the others and as he was more abundant in labors than they all the greater part of the work done had not baptism in its commission. There is no doubt that Christ said something very important to the apostles after his resurrection, to be noticed later; but we who have made "the Great Commission" our formal authoritative text for all great occasions and the beginning place for all great undertakings are a little surprised to learn that it was not at all so with the Christian church of the apostolic times. In not a solitary instance was this so-called "Great Commission" ever quoted or cited as the authority, or motive or incentive for any great movement of the church. On the other hand every one of its great beginnings and undertakings was started from a special, personal commission. I have just instanced Paul, who had never seen or heard Christ in the flesh, and who claimed no such authority in a common call with the other apostles. When he stood in the presence of King Agrippa to account for his ministry, he said, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." Beginning with the day of Pentecost we have the first occasion where the "Great Commission" should have been set forth. It was after the disciples had been speaking to one another in tongues "as the Spirit gave them utterance," and after this had been rumored outside among the people, and after they had gathered to the place to witness the spectacle, and after they had begun to mock and to accuse them who spake as the Spirit gave them utterance, of being drunk, that Peter rose to his feet to explain. Here was an occasion to cite "The Great Commission," for there were present people of all nations, but instead, Peter quotes Joel and gives the keyword to the heavenly campaign, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saidth God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams, and on my servants and on my handmaids I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy."

The "Great Commission" was not cited at all. As Peter is singled out as the one person above all others who was to be given this centralized authority, let us follow him to the next great occasion and beginning place. It was at the household of Cornelius. On his return to Jerusalem from this new step, the apostles and brethren said to him, "thou went'st in to men uncircumcised and didst eat with them." Peter rehearsed his experience and told of a vision that had been given to Cornelius to send for him, and instead of citing the "Great Commission" as any disciple preacher would have done, and which would have settled it with any church, Peter cited instead his own commission, his own personal commission to the exclusion of all other authority and all other apostles, and said, "What was I that I could withstand God?"

Neither Peter nor the "apostles and brethren" knew any other authority for settling it. If they had it would have been forthcoming on such demand. In fact the demand never could have been made. But again comes a test occasion, more decisive and far-reaching yet. It was the general council of the churches in Jerusalem. When the delegates from all the churches were met to consider the Gentile question with the apostles and elders, here Peter arose and again instead of quoting that "Great Commission" to all the world, and to every creature, and which placed the human family on equal grounds before God, and which would have at once settled it with every one who had ever hear of it, Peter entirely failed, and cited again his own personal and especial commission, saying, "Men and brethren, you know how that a good while ago God made choice among us that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the Gospel and believe." It is the same kind of answer he gave before when questioned for his authority. A commission to preach to the Gentiles could not have been given to all the apostles or Peter could not have singled himself out as God's especial agent for this purpose. James being present arose and confirmed Peter's words, "Simon hath declared how God did at the first visit of the Gentiles." The notion that the so-called "Great Commission" was to be as the written will of a dead man to be carried out by administrators as in a court of law, or as the commission of a plenipotentiary in a foreign court to be carried out under a legal code of agreement, is a mistaken one, is grotesque, is a shallow and misleading fake, is a sophisticated propaganda of pitfalls to the unthinking and unsaved. Let us see, it is a question not of textual criticism, nor of interpretation of texts, but at bottom a question of method. Let us take Jesus Christ as our highest authority on method. He said, "You shall know a tree by its fruits," not by the tag which comes on it from the nursery, nor by the name the vender may give it to sell in the market. Is the tree what it seemed to be and what it was declared would be? or what we have found it to be in fact, by seeing, handling and tasting its fruit? Christ said the latter; so say I. Now we find here what, by some means or other, got itself tagged as the "Great Commission," and there was imported into it all authority in heaven and on earth (really in the Roman church) and it placed all men for all time on equal grounds before God in a universal message of amnesty, and it enjoined baptism "into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," for the remission of sins, and it alone was clothed with these names. We first discover that baptism was not so administered in the New Testament examples, and then still more evident that neither the apostles nor the brethren knew of the existence of any such authoritative declaration; but from Jerusalem where it began onward to the end the great movements followed the keynote given by Peter quoting from Joel. These last days were to be characterized by visions and prophesies among all classes. Hence Cornelius and Ananias and others received such visions. In fact every great movement of the Christian church was begun in personal visions and special mandates. The case of Philip follows Peter. By special revelation he went towards Gaza and by another joined himself to the chariot of the queen's treasurer, and through him sent the tidings into Ethiopia. Peter by special and personal vision is ordered to go to Cornelius who has also seen a vision.

Paul on his way to Damascus is hailed by a vision and sent henceforth to the Gentiles, and to go to Ananias, who had also been given a vision.

Again, a second time while he is hunting a missionary field and is forbidden by the Spirit to enter this port and that and the other, Paul is given the vision of the man of Macedonia and being "not disobedient unto the heavenly vision" "goes to Philip, and there preaches Christ first in the western world, under the new special and personal commission.

Thus it stands in fact that the gospel was sent into Asia, into Africa and into Europe by personal special mandates given to individuals in visions, and last of all the highest, holiest and greatest of them was given to John in the Isle of Patmos, saying to him "Thou must prophesy again concerning many peoples and nations and tongues and kings."

Cleaning House.

Dolly's clothes are on the line,
Dolly's dishes fairly shine;
Dolly's home is swept all through,
Chairs and table look like new—
Dolly's little mother, May,
Has been cleaning house to-day.
Picture books, a goodly row,
Such a pretty order show;
Games and blocks, ball put in place;
Pencils in the drawing case.
"I'm so tired," says little May;
"I've been cleaning house to-day."

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART IV.

CHAPTER V.

For awhile, Raymund did not reply to the elegantly dressed man of the high silk hat. He was thinking busily. According to this promoter, Mr. Horace Bridgewaite, the name on the bronze vase was "Raymund," and this same Raymund was the heir to the White millions. But according to his mother's letter, the child whose name was on the bronze vase, was not a White, but a Revore. Therefore if "Raymund" was on the vase, Rhoda must be the heiress. Raymund turned suddenly to Mr. Bridgewaite. "Where is that bronze vase buried?" he asked.

"At your mother's former boarding-house, my dear young sir. I can take you to the very spot."

"You will take me to that spot?"

"I will, good sir, when you have paid me down one thousand dollars."

"How can it be that you have never dug up that vase for private keeping, since you are so interested in other people's affairs?"

"Would I dig up property that does not belong to me?" cried the promoter indignantly. Then he added gently, "Besides, had it ever been disturbed, the proof would be gone. You might say I had had a vase made and engraved for my purpose. No, young sir, I will take you, with witnesses, to the spot which will show that it has remained undisturbed for years. Now, my friend, look at this." He thrust into Raymund's hands the morning paper. It contained an account of old Mr. White's recent death in New York and of his will which bequeathed all his property in case his grandchild was not found, to a hospital and a private school. The account stated that since the old widower's death, a letter dated eighteen years ago had been found among a bundle of private papers. The envelope was gone and the writer had neglected to give the name of the place from which it had been sent. The letter was given in the paper, as follows:

"Dear Father: Our little one is now one year old. If you can not forgive us, will you not have pity upon your innocent grandchild? Your son has been ill and we are partly depending upon the charity and kindness of a family of fellow-boarders. You returned my former letter unread. I pray you to treat this one more kindly.
Your daughter in need,
NELLIE RENNOLDS WHITE."

The newspaper went on to tell about the elopement of Mr. White's son with Miss Nellie Rennolds some twenty years ago. Nothing was known of them, except that they had gone west and that the son had died in Missouri.

"Now," said the promoter, as Raymund handed back the paper, I have only to prove your identity, and that hospital and private school can whistle for their money!" The train had stopped at a station and general attention was attracted by the entrance of an officer and deputies, who had two prisoners in charge. The prisoners were chained together, but a hand of each had been left free. They were smoking cigarettes, for on the small accommodation train, there was no private smoking car, and the entire forward coach was dedicated to tobacco fumes. Raymund instantly recognized one of the prisoners as Boggs. After four years, he had finally been sentenced to the state prison; but Mrs. Van Estry had been acquitted. As Bogg's mean, shifty eyes caught sight of Raymund, a sickly smile passed over his face. He moistened his lips with the tip of his tongue and inhaled his cigarette deeply. The next moment he saw Horace Bridgewaite. His countenance became livid and furious. He pointed his finger at the promoter and said in a husky voice, "There is the feller that was at the bottom of all my crookedness. I was low down, and he was high up. He moved with high-toners and I was a kid of the streets."

"Hush!" said one of the deputies.

"Let the man talk," retorted the sheriff. In fact, Horace Bridgewaite had pretended to promote a scheme of the sheriff's, and remembering what he had paid down in advance, the officer enjoyed Mr. Bridgewaite's discomfiture.

Boggs thus encouraged, raised his voice. "That white-livered promoter took me off the streets and made terms with me. I was to do business among the slums. He was to hoodwink the upper-tendums. We went halvers on what I made, and I got a bare pittance of what he made. I stood all the blame. I got all the kicks and curses. He sat at his ease. Did he come to me during my trial? Did he get me a good lawyer? He never did anything."

"This is insufferable!" cried the promoter, rising. "I shall retire to the other coach. Remember, Mr. Revore, if you want to clinch with my offer, I am at my office in the Junction building."

"Stand your ground!" cried the sheriff. "Why not demand protection from the railroad company?" The promoter left the coach followed by laughter and hisses.

"I'd serve two extra year in the pen, if it would put that villain in there with me," snarled Boggs.

"Never mind," said the sheriff, soothingly, "I think he will presently put himself in there."

Raymund felt that those on the car looked at him either sneeringly as a friend of the promoter, or pityingly as one of the promoter's victims. That, however, was not the reason of his suddenly changing his destination. When he left the train long before it reached Frog Bend, it was that he might make quick connection for St. Louis. He had resolved to go at once to the boarding-house on Washington avenue and exhume the bronze vase. The Union Station looked pretty much the same as when he and Rhoda had left it to obey Mr. Willby's telegram. The Four Courts were as grimy and forbidding, the sounds from the elevated railroad threatened, as formerly, to descend upon his head. On reaching the boarding-house in question, he found that it was now a residence. When he explained that the bronze vase was buried in the coal cellar, without, of course, saying a word about the engraving upon it, or its connection with the mystery of Mr. White's heir, he was given sympathetic assistance. With a rapidly-beating heart the young man, obeying the directions of the letter of his dead mother, went to the northeast corner of the second cellar-chamber. Just as in his mother's time, coal stood in a pyramid as it had been cast through the narrow oblong pavement-window. Raymund locked overhead for the second beam from the north. Directly under it, the coal was half way on its pyramidal career. It was necessary to scoop away a great quantity, before the bare ground was revealed. The earth was very hard, but a spade was not long in discovering one spot where its blade preferred to go in. Raymund encouraged the blade, and although the weight of the coal had pressed the once loosened earth scraped suddenly against a hard object. Raymund dug around it, then resting upon his knees, groped in the semi-gloom. It was the bronze vase. Having deposited it in the bag which he had brought for that purpose, he gratefully acknowledged the kindness of the family, and departed to his hotel. Having locked himself in the bathroom, his first care was to wash the vase clean. The vase was two feet high, ornamented with two embossed cupids who were peering over the edge with smiles of delight at the flowers that should have been within. When the vase was clean and dry, Raymund carried it to a shop where he had the long slender stem cut half in two, with orders that the bowl should be wrapped up in one parcel and the pedestal in another. When these were given him, he left the shop and stood upon the pavement uncertain whether to go back at once, or to visit his uncle William.

As yet, he did not know what name was upon the pedestal of the bronze vase. It seemed an unfair advantage to examine it away from Rhoda. Why not carry it to her and unwrap it in her presence? In that way, both of them would learn at the same time which one of them was a Revore, and which one was a millionaire.

Raymund's heart was beating violently. His head seemed dizzy. He had not yet become used to the truth that Rhoda was not really his sister; that she was of no kin to him; that she was just like any other girl—say like Nelsie Loraine, with just that little claim upon him. And she had known that all this time, and had not hinted the fact. She had grown to regard him as a young man beyond the tie of blood—young man in the same class with Jack Bellfield. That was why she had drawn away from him whenever he sought to give her a brotherly embrace; for she knew he was not her brother. That was why she had refused to kiss him. As he recalled how she had torn herself away from his detaining hand, he felt a sudden resentment. Why had she not told him all? But he knew why well enough. She had not wanted to crush his spirit with the secret. Poor Rhoda! She knew they were not brother and sister, but she did not know which of them was the child of Mrs. Revore. The bronze vase would tell the story. If the name Raymund was upon it, that would mean that Raymund was Mrs. Revore's only child and that Rhoda was an heiress. If Rhoda was upon the vase then Raymund was not Mrs. Revore's son.

Impatient as he was to learn the truth, Raymund decided that it would be most magnanimous not to look at the vase until Rhoda was by his side. Until time for the train to leave for Frog Bend, a day must be spent in the city. It seemed something like a duty to go to see his uncle William. It was a painful pilgrimage to the narrow dark streets of the second-hand clothes. It was with no rapid or loving tread that he entered the long, dingy thoroughfare. He felt no ill will toward Mr. Hodges, but he could not but censure the old man for having cast him and Rhoda, helpless orphans but for the goodness of friends, out upon the mercy of a world that has little taste for orphans.

He paused, at last, before the familiar pawnshop, and summoned up the resolution to once more face Miss Pinns. The three golden balls seemed each a yellow eye of jealousy, gleaming unfriendly recognition. At last he grasped the iron handle his younger hand had so often felt, and pushed open the door. A Jew stood behind the counter, polishing the face of a silver-mounted clock with a red silk cloth. There was the stove near which the young man had studied on winter nights while its iron sides grew dull and cold, and the night air crept in from under the door.

"I would like to see Mr. Hodges," said Raymund diffidently.

"I can't show him to you," said the Jew. "Is there something else you would like to see?"

"Perhaps you can tell me where Mr. Hodges is," suggested Raymund.

"Dead," said the man, rubbing violently and no longer looking up.

Raymund felt a shock of cold surprise. "Dead!" he repeated.

"Yes," said the new proprietor, "he married and then he died. What's the odds? That's pretty much all they is to life, as I look at it. He married late, and he died later. That was the end of him."

"Could you tell me where I could find Miss Pinns—I mean the woman he married?"

"You must have known 'em pretty good," said the other glancing up with more interest. "Yes, Miss Pinns, as you call her, is living on Vandeventer street, in handsome flats. She's set up an automobile and she's living at the top notch of luxury, spending as fast as she can all the old man left her. That black tooth—you remember it, hey?"

"Quite well," said Raymund.

"Well, she's carrying that black tooth to all the free festivities, and she's hovering on the outskirts of tony society waiting for a chance to dash in." The Jew chuckled. "And I bet you she gets in by hook or crook," he added in admiration. "Let me tell you, Miss Pinns that was, is a genius. She ain't over particular, but she's a genius. Look how she come here as a plain, poor servant, and Mr. Hodges working his fingers to the bone laying up wealth. She married him out of hand. And now he's in his grave and she's in her automobile. That's what I call genius. Say, if you want to go to see her, I think I have the number here in my drawer."

He started to pull open the little drawer in which Rhoda used to keep her gloves, ribbons and the blank paper devoted to poetical purposes.

"No," said Raymund with decision, "I don't care to see her. Thank you. Good morning."

The Funny Story Cure.

A case that came under my direction a few years ago was that of a professional man of middle age—conscientious, a hard worker and worrier . . . much the hardest thing to get at was his mental condition. I knew that he couldn't be cured until that was changed. Finally I directed him to tell a funny story at each meal, with an extra two at dinner. That was because it was entirely impossible for him to control his own state of mind by will-power. A man can say to himself, "I will be optimistic" several hundred times a day and yet remain sad. He needs a handle—some objective way of getting at it. This man rebelled violently at the new orders, but finally consented to make the attempt. It was such a terrible undertaking for him that for the first few days he could not open his mouth. He forgot his stories completely. Then I made him write them down on a piece of paper and keep them in his lap for reference. When a pause in the conversation arrived he would become restless, look anxiously about, glance at his lap, clear his throat and begin. The prescription was a bitter one for him, but he had promised to make the attempt, and before a week was out the humor of the situation struck him, and he began to enjoy the fun. After that his recovery was sure. He became cheerful, light-hearted, approachable. The whole current of his life was changed.

The Breakfast Table.

Even in families called intelligent the breakfast table is usually interrupted by a mad rush for the cars or for school. But if we want wholesome, beautiful children, we will follow the breakfast with a short period of leisure, and then go serenely about the day's work. One of the first needs in the child's day is for general bodily exercise, and this can better be given in the home than in the school; for in the home the exercise can be purposeful, some household service which will be of real use. Here, again, the service can be made a joy or a task, according to the spirit we put into it. It must be remembered that the childish will to do is rather fitful and uncertain, given to taking up occupations with enthusiasm and then dropping them before completion. The remedy is to fill out and complete the will, and this, it seems to me, can best be done by working merrily and joyfully with the child.

A small boy will help you make his bed and "tidy up" his room with the greatest pleasure if you give him your good company at the same time—the only sort of company you ought ever to give any one—while he would find it a very dull and distasteful task if he had to do it alone. Tell him a story, sing a duet with him, try to outwhistle him—in short, see to it that you are merry workers in this merry, charming world. But do not rob him of the service, with its measure of health and good spirit, and do not teach him to look down on women while he is stil in knickerbockers by forcing him to think that these homely, necessary tasks are unsuitable for him, but none too good for his mother or sisters, or the women servants. In no case, however, may this service be paid for in other coin than loving appreciation, for that is to turn the child into a miserable little trader, and quite rob the service of value.

A day is well begun which has in it these wholesome elements of home life, this serenity and good comradeship and service. The home life is the primary thing and the school life quite secondary.—Henderson in "Education and the Larger Life."

REV. J. W. BLOSSER, M. D.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., is Meeting with Wonderful Success.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package and an illustrated book.

A little kingdom I possess,
  Where thoughts and feelings dwell,
And very hard I find the task
  Of governing it well;
For passion tempts and troubles me,
  A wayward will misleads,
And selfishness its shadow casts
  On all my words and deeds

I do not ask for any crown
  But that which all may win,
Nor seek to conquer any world
  Except the one within.
Be Thou my guide until I find,
  Led by a tender hand,
Thy happy kingdom in myself
  And dare to take command.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS

The photographer has not yet finished up that new picture of Felix. He thinks he will do so to-day; I am still hoping we may have it in time to hang upon Drusie's Christmas Tree. Do our new readers know who Drusie is, and what we mean by her Tree? I will explain. A few years ago, the Courier-Journal had a department called "The Young Folks," and Drusie, just a girl, then, used to write letters for the page, as, for instance, Gerald Dever and the Per Lees used to write for this. I read her letters, and became interested in her. Two years ago she was fired with the sudden but overwhelming desire to be a missionary, and to be it right away. The church board at that time had no means to supply another vacancy, and Drusie decided to start for China, trusting to the Lord to see that she got there, since she was going for him.

Now listen at this: She left her Sunday-school class which she was teaching in a Christian church in Louisville, and asking them to pray for her work, bade her mother a hasty farewell, took the train for Chicago, told the passengers what she wanted to do, received enough on the car to pay for her ticket, reached Chicago with 75 cents, was taken care of by some kind woman till she received enough money to take her to the seacoast. Here she joined a band of men and women, all older than herself, people who had been Methodists and Presbyterians and Baptists and twelve other kinds, but who in going to China had resolved to all be of one and the same kind, to give up all differences, to take simply the requisites of the Bible and be for Christ instead of some particular party. People heard about this band who were waiting in faith at Los Angeles until means should come. Contributions began to roll in, and finally they lifted the ship off shore and carried her to China. That is what money will do; and that is what faith will do. I was particularly interested when I found out that one of that band was the little girl Drusie who used to write for the papers. I told the Advance Society about it; and you thought you could send her $5 a month. Of course $5 a month is not munificent, but we are hoping it goes farther in China than it does in Arkansas. And it is a good deal, when you stop to think about it, or whether you stop or not, I say, it is a good deal to expect of the dimes and nickels and stamps that come to me from little children. It is a good thing the old folks help us along. But at the same time, every one who ever contributed a penny should feel that he has done a certain part in this great work of sending the Gospel to the heathen; a great work indeed, if pennies are scarce; and a mighty stingy thing if they are scattered all about the house. Still, I had rather you'd be stingy than nothing. My point is this—and I hope it will stick nobody; when you are not able to give much for God, give a little in confidence and boldness; he will increase it. Do you know of anything bigger than those two mites of the poor widow? They are so big that millionaires have been able to hide behind them, ever since they heard of them. Christmas I am going to have a Tree for Drusie, right here in Arkansas. Don't you want to hang something on it for Drusie? not literal gingerbread and popcorn, but the price of any present you would like to send. For instance, if you would like to present her with a souvenir-spoon or a needle-case, send the price of that object, and all you send will go to help Christianize the heathen. How much better that will be than giving the heathen the identical souvenir-spoon and needle-case. And how happy you will make Drusie, thus enabling her to spread the Word. Thing how many people you will make happy by such a gift: Drusie, the readers of this page, ME (what a consideration!) the heathen to be converted, you who send it, and God, for Whom all this labor is expended. Did you ever give a Christmas present and get so much out of it? I am not going to urge this matter, so please don't skip this page 'till Christmas is over. But send in your gift along about the middle of December and let's have a big time.

I told you that S. A. Seat, of Hematite, Mo., suggested a box-supper for Drusie on Thanksgiving, and I altered his suggestion to the Christmas Tree. Now there are some people who, if you don't take their suggestion, won't play. Ever notice that? You must do like they think and speak, or they are out of it. You can just go along and do the best you can. They told you how to do it, and you thought you knew better than they, and now you can simply manage it without their help. You ventured to have an opinion of your own; very well, then, have it, and do all the work yourself, and see how you like it! Did you ever know anybody like that in the church? Almost everybody is like that out of the church, but if you know any one in the church like that, why not take this and read it to 'em, for of course it isn't you. Nobody can accuse S. A. Seat of being that way, at all events, for just read his letter: "Yes, brother, have a Christmas tree. There's a heap more fun going to, and helping with, a Christmas Tree than an old box supper where they eat and eat and talk spoony. Sure, a Chrdistmas Tree is ffiust the thing. We can have a splendid time, and such a variety of presents and pretty candies, oranges, nuts—a thousand things! Get a large tree and hang my two boxes of candy at the top. Somebody send us Christmas candles so we can see the presents; yes, and some ribbon to tie the presents on with." The Fourth of July is rather late, as a matter of news, but I would like for you to compare the ordinary firecrackers display with Drusie's method of celebrating, as found in this extract from her letter: "We had a happy time in North China, on the Fourth; we celebrated our liberty in Christ Jesus. We had a picnic supper on the grass at the east end of our mission Farm. One of our number had prepared napkins, drawing with colored chalks the emblems of our national flags. The 'adopted children' of Uncle Sam had two flags side by side—in our band are two from Norway, one from Sweden, one from England and one from Ireland. Before eating, our General Director prayed for America, the President, Legislature and People, that they might glorify our God and Savior. Then we sung our national hymn, Columbia and Star Spangled Banner. One sees his country in a new light when he hears what foreigners have to say about it. May our United States never dishonor her glorious name by bringing dishonor upon our fathers' God, and our great Captain." Our orphan Charlie has recently written to my mother; I don't think he'll obiect if I give an extract: "I have been sick with malarial fever for a week, but am up now. I received a letter from Drusie, Monday." (Bessie is his sister who has been adopted by a farmer and his wife; the Av. S. paid Charlie's way there last summer on a visit; Charlie had not seen her for three years; the Av. S. never took more satisfaction in any one of its acts, than the gift of this reunion for more than a week.) "I am studying hard. I hope to make the man that all the Av. S. members are wishing for. I received the underclothes. I thank Mr. Breck—was it he?—for sending them." No, it was the Av. S. These three heavy suits of undearwear were procured at a great bargain for $1.50, so I bought them and forwarded same to Charlie, paying the bill out of Charlie's general expense fund—not the education fund, of course.) "I pass away my time reading. Since I came back from the summer vacation, I have read from 10 to 15 books which I get from the Public Free Library. You can have all the turkey you want, just so I get the same amount of chicken. That ice cream was a beautiful success. Just think, $146.55! I guess the people will stop buying, though, for the weather is cooler. I am going down to the depot this morning to take a little boy from here" (the orphan home). "I enjoyed my vacation ever so much while at your house and with Bessie, and with Mrs. Skinner and her friends and relations, and I am very thankful. . . . The bell has rung for breakfast so I will close." Here is a note from Charlie's matron, Mrs. B. R. Brown, St. Louis: "Enclosed find $1 to add to Charlie's education fund, from Mrs. Arnold, Shamrock, Mo. Charlie is sick, but hope he will soon be well. He was so pleased with the underwear. I am so glad for him to have the woolen underwear for this winter, as he feels the cold forcibly." Here are tardy guests: Mrs. Flora Schenck, Basin, Wyo.: "My sister, Anna Seward, and I send a dime each for ice cream and as it is in one piece, we add a nickel to get it there. We should be glad to have Charlie visit us in the Big Horn Basin. We live on Shell creek, where there are lots of trout. We have no Church of Christ. Brother Banta is leading us in trying to build up the cause. I have not heard one of our preachers since coming to the Basin, six years ago, but all that time THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been a great comfort to me. There are lots of good sermons in it besides the Easy Chair, which seem like letters from home. Av. S. letters have been a great help. We will eat our part of the ice cream at home, this evening." dron, Mo.: "I send $1 for orphan Charlie and one for Drusie, also my prayers and best wishes." There is nothing like giving to teach the joy of giving; you can't get it out of books; you first give, then you know. Now comes our friend E. E. Herriman, Mooresville, Mo., who has already sent Charlie and Drusie $20 that I remember, and possibly by looking at my accounts I would find more to his credit. But does he feel, "Now I've done my part, let the others work?" Or does he say, "So-and so gave only a quarter; if he gives only a quarter, I'll make mine 10 cents?" Does he say that? No, somebody else says that, but not E. E. Herriman, for here he comes promptly to date with $5 more for Charlie, and $10 for Drusie. Of course, this goes on the education fund, but is not counted in the ice cream social, because that was not expressly stipulated.

In the meantime it must not be supposed that the regular Av. S. work is suffering—the daily reading and quotation-learning. Dorothy Brown, Medaryville, Ind.: "I have finished my seventh quarter and had done four weeks on the 8th, when I forgot a rule and had to begin all over again. I have some more S. S. cards for Drusie, if if she wants them." (I have written to ask her if she needs more, and will report on this page, later). Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga (who sends a beautiful post card illustrating Bluffs of Tennessee river): "Forgot my Bible verse last Sunday, but heard the Bible read. It is a miss?" (Hearing the Bible read would not meet the requirements if you had taken advantage of that to purposely save yourself the trouble of reading for yourself; but because you forgot to read, hearing it read makes it all right, and I am glad you were at a place Sunday where you could hear it.) Harry A. Stevens, Akita, Japan: "My reports are all right, if you think as I do about them. One day I was reading the history of a dog—Beautiful Joe—and that day I forgot to read in the Life of Lincoln. Now I do not call that a miss, do you? If you don't then please put me on the honor roll. It is pretty hard to keep the rules in summer time." (While the history of a dog is, strictly speaking, hardly a suitable substitute for Lincoln, yet, since you really forgot. I decide that it is all right to count it one time, in Japan; however, I do not think even in Japan that this ought to occur too often). Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.: This is the third time—and this attempt a charm—on my eleventh quarter. After keeping the rules ten weeks, sickness prevented my reading the Scriptures, so recommenced right away and kept the rules nine weeks and owing to sickness missed my Scripture reading again; so I did not become discouraged, but recommenced again, and here I am with my report. You speak of having a Christmas tree for our missionary Drusie. I think that a wise suggestion. If all respond as readily as they did to Charlie's ice cream social, the tree will be paid for. May the Lord bless our orphan and missionary and every one interested in their welfare. I enclose my mite for each." Fannie A. Kellogg, Fairview, Mo.: "Here is Aunt Fannie Kellogg and her Sunday-school class for a share in Charlie's ice cream social. We think it the finest social we ever helped and send good wishes for Charlie's success and happiness; and we will not forget Drusie's Christmas tree. God bless the Av. S. and their work. Enclosed, draft for $1.50." (In two weeks we will print our new honor list, of which we are proud. We also have a batch of Drusie's letters to present. You will also be informed how the photographer is getting along. I think we may say definitely that the ice cream supper is over. When last reported, the receipts amounted to $159.80. That sum has now been increased to $162.55. Felix is still shedding hair.)

SUNDAY SICKNESS.

BY C. M. AKERS.

The most insiduous of all ailments to which mortal flesh is heir, is the common disease known as "Morbus Sabbaticus," or Sunday Sickness. It is peculiar to church members and is periodic in its attacks. It is found in all stages from a slight indisposition to a dull, dead stupor of lethargy. Medical men so little understand the real nature of this disease that they are never sent for or consulted.

Symptoms.—Generally the patient arises on Sunday morning feeling as well as usual. After a hearty meal of beefsteak and biscuit he takes a stroll about the premises, or the depot, news stand, hotel or postoffice, as the case may be. He returns home about 9 or 10 a. m. so fatigued that he must seek the sofa or easy rocking chair. He feels the disease coming gradually upon him. He calls for the morning paper which is brought in post haste. He proceeds to devour it. He steadily grows worse until he sees his wife and children disappear on their way to church. This is the first relief he gets. The first attack begins to wear off, he gets easy and usually drops into a deep, sweet sleep, only to be aroused an hour or two later by the rattle of the dinner dishes and the appetizing odor of the kitchen. He arises to find his fever gone, his pulse normal and his appetite good. But this only indicates the treachery of the disease. Such contrasts in so short a space of time is experienced in no other disease known to the medical profession. He goes to the dinner table with a crocodillian appetite. After being served sumptuously to several courses of meats, vegetables, pastries, etc., he arises from the table feeling edified and strengthened for a long drive in the afternoon. He returns from his drive much fatigued but able to eat a hearty meal of cold hash and salad. After the repast he again feels that old disease tightening its grip upon him. Try hard as he may to ward off the soporific feeling of this dread disease, it finally gets complete possession of him and at exactly 7 p. m. he is in the same condition he was at 11 a. m. Feeling that sleep is nature's great restorative, he takes his bed and is not able to be about again until 6 a. m. Monday, when he arises ready for business. He is now free from another attack of "Morbus Sabbaticus" until the following Sunday, when the disease returns with augmented force and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

Prescription.—"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."—The Great Physician.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

His Savior.

John Newton tells of a night that he lay in his hammock on the Adriatic Sea after a fearful spell of wild debauchery. In a lurid dream, he saw himself throwing away his soul into the sea like a precious jewel at the daring of Satan, and as it sank beneath the waves, a fiendish shout went up from the pit and a flash of angry fire seemed to light up the mountain tops along the shore. His spirit sank within him and he felt that he had lost his soul, buried forever a treasure more precious than all the world.

Then, in his dream, his Savior seemed to stand before him and asked him if he wished to have that jewel recovered once more. He threw himself at his feet and earnestly pleaded for him to save it if he could. Then the Redeemer leaped into the flood, battled with the waves, sank beneath the surges and at last, wearied and panting, rose and reached the deck, holding in his hand the precious gem. Eagerly the sailor reached out his hand to grasp it, but the Master held back and said, "No, I will keep it now for you. If I gave it to you, you would but sacrifice it again and when life is done I will have it for you at the gates of heaven safe forevermore."

And from that vision that drunken sailor went forth to become the sweetest of the saints of God, to write the hallowed hymns that have been singing men and women to glory for a century, and to leave behind him the lustre of a life more precious than earth's fairest gems.

Oh, men and women, each of you has such a treasure. Have you truly found it and are you letting God keep it, polish it and prepare it for the highest possibilities of earth and the richest glories of heaven?

TRAVELS IN CLASSIC AND BIBLE LANDS

By THOMAS WALLACE, A. M.

beautifully illustrated and contains nearly 850 pages, bound in heavy cloth with pictorial designs, and gold letters on back and side. Postpaid, $3.00.

ARTS AND INDUSTRIES

ancient and modern historic sites, ancient land marks, decisive battlefields in the world's greatest wars are described as seen. Many out of the way places are also described where there are no laws to protect, people without intelligence to direct and religion founded on fatalism without power to reform.

LIVING AND DEAD CITIES,

are also described including Paris, Rome, Naples, Alexander, Cairo, Constantinople, Athens, Corinth, Jaffa and Jerusalem. Troy, Carthage, Ephesus, Memphis, Pompeii, Herculaneum, Jericho and other cities renowned in history.

FINE ARTS AND ARCHITECTURE

In this field the most renowned paintings, statues, pyramids, tombs, catacombs, cathedrals, temples and the mightiest monuments of the Old World are fully described.

IN NATURAL SCENERY

The grandeur of the Alps, the desolate wilds of Sahara, the devastating eruption of Vesuvius, the fertile valley of the Nile, the almost enchanted lands along the Bosphorus and among the fabled isles of the Aegean sea with the sacred hills, plains, seas, and prophetic places of Palestine are all included, together with the trials of travel met with in the sand storms of the desert, the monsoon of the orient and the sirocco of the Mediterranean sea.

—A stereoscope will make an acceptable Christmas gift. For two new subscriptions and the $3.00 we will send you a good one and 50 scenic cards.

—It would be nearly as reasonable to expect to make Disciples of your children by sending them to denominational churches, as to expect it while using interdenominational Bible school literature.

—No other book published by brother J. H. Garrison called out such immediate and numerous and heartfelt congratulations as his "Christian Union." The tribute by Brother Robert Moffett is only one of a multitude like unto it.

—"John Doe, Sept. 06" on the yellow label of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST means that John's time for his favorite paper expired Sept. 1, 06, and that he will enjoy his paper a great deal more by sending us $1.50 and having the label changed to "John Doe, Sept. 07."

—We deeply regret that our new "Southern Evangelist" readers were delayed in getting last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS. They have now been fully adopted into THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family, their names enrolled, and they will be served at the first table.

—According to the usual computations more than 150.000 people will read each issue of this paper hereafter. No wonder our editors are so often known to be in Bible study and silent prayer. The responsibility of addressing such an audience is almost staggering.

—The Garrison Library.—A reconstructive theology: "Helps to Faith," "The Holy Spirit," "Christian Union." Most helpful of devotionals: "Alone with God," "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," "The Heavenward Way." These great books by a great Christian man for $5.00.

—Great interest is expressed in our forthcoming Pioneer Number. The time of this is not determined, but the keenest anticipation will no more be disappointed in this than in our imperial Campbell Number. Here Scott, Stone, Smith, Henderson, the Haydens and others will be made to live and preach again.

—"Gloria in Excelsis" is our best hymnal. It is arranged to meet the needs of the entire church under all varying conditions. The order of arrangement is logical and comprehensive in its scope. It should have a great sale and have an influence thereby to unify our worship in the best hymns of the church. The hymns on Holy Spirit and Christian Union are the best ever produced.—Prof. W. B. Taylor, Bethany College.

—We never will be a "disappearing brotherhood," but to continue as a rapidly growing brotherhood we are dependent on Bible schools for recruits. Interdenominational Bible school literature does not contribute to our zeal for this Restoration that has no creed but the Bible. To experiment with this class of Bible helps is like playing with fire; it is dangerous. Among the most scholarly and loyal disciples is W. W. Dowling, editor of our Sunday school literature, and the best of schoolmasters to bring children into churches of Christ.

—Our club lists of new subscribers indicate that many more CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS are being read in the old Kentucky home; along the banks of the Wabash; amidst the green hills of West Virginia; where the Pilgrim fathers lived and wrought; and where rolls the mighty Missouri. In addition to a multitude of new subscriptions coming in by ones and twos, the following new lists were filed last week:

"Christian Union," by J. H. Garrison.

I have been familiar with the many publications of the Disciples for more than a third of a century. I have seen tracts on Christian Union, but the volume just from the press of the Christian Publishing Company on Christian Union, by J. H. Garrison, is the first bound volume I have ever seen, from a Disciple, on this subject. And the reader will find it in the author's best style, and full of interest to all those who have made this subject a study. It will amply repay a careful reading, and specially so since there is an unusual up-to-dateness in the subject, and in the masterly manner of its treatment. Our preachers ought to get the book, and study its forceful lessons.

Cleveland, O. R. MOFFETT.

KEEP YOUR WALLET CLOSED

Just Say the Word

Don't spend a cent, just ask us to send it. Don't send any money for it—not a penny. Send for it today, then watch its action for 30 days. Be prompt in sending for it, in trying it—be slow in judging it, in paying for it. Wait until you know, until you see, until you are sure. We give you thirty days to try it, to use it, to test it, to make sure, to see for yourself.

Don't Send a Penny until you are sure—keep your wallet closed until you know. If you are not sure, you do not pay at any time—not a cent, for there is nothing to pay for. You pay for the benefit—not the medicine. You pay for results—not the treatment. If it does not help you, the matter is ended. You have nothing to return, as you use all we send you. Your final judgment, Yes or No, closes the deal. We take all the risk, you have nothing to lose, not a penny. How can you refuse such a fair, plain-spoken, liberal offer? Over a million people in the United States and Canada have already accepted it.

If You Don't Feel Right

If there is something wrong in the workings of your system, something wrong with your sleep, your digestion, your blood, your nerves and your vitality, you cannot afford to suffer another day, when the thing that has set thousands right is offered you without a penny's risk, when it takes but a letter to start you on the treatment which has won international reputation by the work it has done for thousands. You cannot lose a penny—you win back health or pay nothing. Read our 30-day trial offer and judge for yourself. Then send today for that which thousands have used and are using with the success denied them in other treatments.

A WONDERFUL RESTORATION

Doctor Exhausted Medical Skill.

HAMBURG, IOWA—I feel that I cannot praise V.-O. enough, as it has restored me after having been a helpless and hopeless invalid for three long years. I had Rheumatism and Paralysis, and my Kidneys and Liver had been very much deranged for years. There seemed no limit to my nervousness. I was reduced from 165 to 75 pounds in fact was called a total wreck. I could not feed myself, could not rest and much of the time I could not speak. We tried many physicians and patent medicines and also sanitariums. My last doctor said he had never seen anything to compare with my case and that he had exhausted his medical skill upon me. I have now been using Vitæ-Ore for six months and can say that I enjoy life and my work. My weight has been increased to 144 pounds. I can do all of my own work and go when and where I please. The doctor now tells me to recommend it. MRS. W. G. VANDERPOOL.

Our Trial Offer

If You Are Sick we want to send you a full sized $1.00 package of Vitæ-Ore, enough for 30 days' continuous treatment, by mail, postpaid, and we want to send it to you on 30 days' trial. We don't want a penny—we just want you to try it, just want a letter from you asking for it, and will be glad to send it to you. We take absolutely all the risk—we take all chances. You don't risk a penny! All we ask is that you use V.-O. for 30 days and pay us $1.00 if it has helped you, if you are satisfied that it has done you more than $1.00 worth of positive, actual, visible good. Otherwise you pay nothing, we ask nothing, we want nothing. Can you not spare 100 minutes during the next 30 days to try it? Can you not give 5 minutes to write for it, 5 minutes to properly prepare it upon its arrival, and 3 minutes each day for 30 days to use it. That is all it takes. Cannot you give 100 minutes time if it means new health, new strength, new blood, new force, new energy, vigor, life and happiness? You are to be the judge. We are satisfied with your decision, are perfectly willing to trust to your honor, to your judgment, as to whether or not V.-O. has benefited you. Read what V.-O. is, and write today for a dollar package on this most liberal trial offer.

WHAT VITÆ-ORE IS.

Vitæ-Ore is a mineral remedy, a combination of substances from which many world's noted curative springs derive medicinal power and healing virtue. These properties of the springs come from the natural deposits of mineral in the earth through which water forces its way, only a very small proportion of the medicinal substances in these mineral deposits being thus taken up by the liquid. Vitæ-Ore consists of compounds of Iron, Sulphur and Magnesium, elements which are among the chief curative agents in nearly every healing mineral spring, and are necessary for the creation and retention of health. One package of this mineral-substance, mixed with a quart of water, equals in medicinal strength and curative, healing value, many gallons of the world's powerful mineral waters, drunk fresh at the springs.

Thousands of People

In all parts of the United States and Canada have testified to the efficacy of Vitæ-Ore in relieving and curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Kidney, Bladder and Liver Diseases, Dropsy, Stomach Disorders, Female Ailments, Functional Heart Trouble, Catarrh of any part, Nervous Prostration, Anæmia, Old Sores, and worn out conditions.

Out of the Jaws of Death

Permanently Cured in One Month's Time of a Serious Kidney and Rheumatic Trouble—Was Broken Down, Disheartened and Almost Helpless.

ATLANTA, GA.—When I look back on my condition and suffering during recent years, and think of the herbs, roots, barks, tinctures, powders and linaments I have taken and rubbed with, all to no purpose, and think that I was cured at last in one month with Vitæ-Ore, I stand dazed and amazed at the result. I feel that I have in truth been drawn out of the jaws of death.

Thirty years ago I contracted a disease of the kidneys and commenced passing gravel from them, the pain often throwing me into spasms, though only those who have passed through this ordeal can give an idea of the suffering connected with it. These spells continued at irregular but frequent intervals down to a month ago. During all this time my urine was highly colored, sometimes profuse and sometimes scant, but at all times charged with a yellowish, albuminous brick-dust deposit.

About three years ago I was attacked with Rheumatism in my right hip joint, knees and the muscles all over my body. Physicians told me I had Diabetes and marked symptoms of Bright's Disease and commenced to dope me with mercury, soda, lithia, salicylic acid, potash, etc., all of which were constantly constipating me, and nearly everything I ate disagreed with me. You can well imagine my condition and state of mind. I was broken down, disheartened and helpless.

By chance I had placed in my hand a paper containing an advertisement of Vitæ-Ore, and, like a drowning man, caught at it, sent for it, and it has proved to be the "Oar" that enabled me to paddle my frail barque into the haven of Health. I used it in hot water and it commenced to benefit from the first dose. In four days I saw a marked charge for the better. My urine became cleared up and natural in color. In six days the brick-dust deposit was gone. My bowels became regular, I could eat what I wanted, and what I did eat did not hurt me and was perfectly digested. I slept soundly at night without those terrible hallucinations that had haunted my slumbers so long; but best of all, the pain was leaving my limbs. I could walk without crutch or stick.

Now, after taking a dollar package of Vitæ-Ore, I say I am better in health than I have been in thirty years. All this wonderful change in my condition is due to the virtue contained in one ounce of substance from Mother Earth. Would that I could impress on every one suffering with Kidneys, Stomach and Rheumatic Troubles, what I know of the virtues of Vitæ-Ore. Take it according to directions and you will not be long in joining with me in singing the praises of Vitæ-Ore and praising Theo. Noel for his efforts in introducing this grand boon to suffering humanity.

M. V. Estes

Re-affirmed Over One Year Later

ATLANTA, GA.—My faith in Vitæ-Ore grows stronger every day. I suffered with Kidney Trouble for years and never got any relief until I used Vitæ-Ore, more than a year ago. That did the work, and I am still well, Can get insurance on my life in any company that accepts men of my age. M. V. ESTES.

A TRIAL OF VITAE-ORE WILL TELL YOU ITS OWN PLAIN STORY, A STORY THAT HAS MEANT COMFORT, PEACE, AND HAPPINESS TO THOUSANDS.

READ THE TESTIMONY. Read it again and again. No stronger words have ever been written about any other medicine; no better expressions are truthfully commanded by any other treatment. Vitæ-Ore is as different from other remedies as is pure milk from chalk and water, or the sunlight from a tallow candle. It does not take FAITH, does not take CONFIDENCE, does not take BELIEF, does not take even HOPE to cure with Vitæ-Ore. It takes only a trial—all we ask. This medicine enters the veins of the sick and suffering person and cures, whether the sufferer believes in it or not, even whether he wants it or no. Its substances enter the blood, the vital organs, and work, work, work—a work that cures.

THE GAUGE OF LIFE.

THEY err who measure life by years,
With false or thoughtless tongue;
Some hearts grow old before their time;
Others are always young.
'Tis not the number of the lines,
On life's fast filling page;
'Tis not the pulse's added throbs
Which constitute their age.
Some souls are serfs among the free,
While others nobly thrive;
They stand just where their fathers stood;
Dead even while they live!
Others, all spirit, heart and sense;
Theirs the mysterious power
To live in thrills of joy or woe,
A twelvemonth in an hour!
Seize, then, the minutes as they pass;
The woof of life is thought!
Warm up the colors; let them glow
With fire and fancy fraught.
Live to some purpose; make thy life
A gift of use to thee:
A joy, a good, a golden hope,
A heavenly argosy!

THAT CENTENNIAL FUND.

The proposed CENTENNIAL FUND of $250,000 by 1909, in personal gifts, for land and buildings on our foreign mission fields, is growing. We are receiving daily additions in cash and pledges. One gift of $1,500 has come in; another of $800, and a large number of smaller amounts. The money should pour in by an ever increasing stream.

GREAT NEED OF MISSION HOMES.

When our missionaries turn their backs upon home and native land, the least we can do for them is to provide comparatively comfortable homes in which to live. To compel them to occupy century-old, vermin-infected, unventilated buildings is to handicap them in their work and to endanger their health and their very lives. A modest home in the midst of heathen squalor and filth is a signboard to heaven for the natives and a means of grace to the missionary. With such homes they will have more faith and hope and be far more useful.

WHAT THE MISSIONARIES SAY.

Native buildings in China are absolutely useless as dwelling houses.—Mrs. Lily W. Molland, Nankin, China.

Shall the missionaries be asked to make brick without straw? If so, ask them to live in native houses.—A. E. Cory, Wuhu, China.

Suitable buildings are necessary to successful mission work.—Dr. C. C. Drummond, Harda, India.

Missionary homes preserve from foul streets and pestilence.—Dr. W. E. Macklin, Nankin, China.

TIME TO ACT.

We are able to provide the necessary homes. We are a rich people and growing in wealth at a marvelous rate. If we would be guiltless, homes for our missionaries must be furnished. Will you not send cash or a pledge today? We mean you, You! Give a large amount if you can. Send only a small pledge if you must, but do something, and thus have fellowship with the men and women on the firing line.

Fill out the pledge herewith and return to-day.

Getting Ready for Business

Many schools are making arrangements for their winter's work along lines that help for all future work by organizing Normal Classes, and for which is just the help desired. It is in seven parts, as follows:

The Normal Instructor

I. The Book, a general view and analysis of the books of the Bible, with numerous helpful diagrams and review questions.
II. The Christ, has general view of Names, Offices, Symbols, Types, with analytical view of the Prophecies concerning him, and a series of lessons covering his ministry.
III. The Church is considered in all its phases: The Church in Prophecy; The Church in Type; The Church's Name, Head, Foundation, Beginning, Membership, Ministry, Mission, Unity, and Future Glory.
IV. The Land treats of Bible Geography under "The Old Testament Land" and "The New Testament Lands." Has numerous maps and diagrams.
V. The Institutions are given close and careful study in clear and simple style, classified as Patriarchal, Jewish and Christian, definitions of each.
VI. The History gives full and succinct views of the "Chosen People" of Bible Times, as also, the Nations coming into contact with them.
VII. The People includes all those brought into prominence in Bible History and the Nations about them and dealing with them.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

—Did we excell all other religious bodies in personal devoutness as we do in our ability to unfold the scheme of redemption very soon indeed could our statisticians announce our having passed the 2,000,000 mark. Brother Ryan's earnest appeal for the reinstitution of the family altar is timely and will receive hearty amens from all who realize that homes fragrant with the incense of adoration are the real resources of Centennial victory and all greatness.

—Never was it more necessary to preach all the Word and for all to preach the Word than now. Never has there been a time when faithful preaching was more generously rewarded by a harvest of souls than now. Let us preachers more highly magnify our office and wherever and whenever opportunity can be found, with all the unction possible to one who believes he is throwing the life line to men engulfed in ruin, preach. To this Brother Warren's following article will help us:

Preaching and the Centennial.

BY CENTENNIAL SECRETARY.

Only one thing is needed in order to attain the principal Centennial goals, and that is, more preaching of the gospel. But there are several ways in which this may be secured. First—by putting more of the Gospel and less of other things into the sermons that are preached. Second—by having all preachers engaged in preaching rather than in the pursuit of some secular calling. Third—by having those who are preaching give full time to the work. Fourth—by increasing the number of preachers.

Just now there seems to be occasion to strongly emphasize the third item. Few preachers are putting their entire strength unto preaching. Most of them are cumbered with much serving that ought to be done by the deacons and women of the churches. So exacting are these pastoral cares that strength is scarcely left for the preparation and delivery of two sermons on Lord's day. Would Paul have counted himself "instant in season, out of season," if preaching only twice a week? The world can never be saved by a one-day-in-seven Gospel. Instead of relapsing into material service the preacher should evermore be lifting other members to spiritual ministry.

If it seems desirable to hold a protracted meeting in the local church the preacher feels that it is absolutely necessary to call in an evangelist from the outside to assist him. Two men are not too many to conduct a revival in an important field. But if the church at A requires the full time of two men for a month, in justice to the general cause it should at least surrender the time of its one preacher for some other month in the year. Otherwise, when the balance is struck at the end of the year it will be found that this particular church has required more than one preacher for its work and that some other field has been left desolate for a part of the year on its account.

There ought to rest on the conscience of every preacher the duty of holding one meeting a year away from his own church. He owes it to himself. It will broaden his vision, quicken his pulse and intensify his zeal. It will give him a larger share of soul-saving joy. He owes it to the needy fields that are unable to secure one of our regular evangelists. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." The loss of souls rests upon the messengers who will not respond to the call. What if Peter had not obeyed the summons of Cornelius? He owes it to his own church. This will save it from the selfishness through which it is liable to degenerate into a mere club. By sparing the preacher it will develop self-reliance and become a stronger church. There should be members able to lead the prayer-meeting. They are robbed of their privilege by the preacher. The problem of the country church is partially due to the regular tendency of the stronger churches to absolutely monopolize the time and strength of all the better preachers. No man of God has a right to sell himself to one church. Christ has sealed his bonds for wider, nobler, manlier service.

Family Prayers and the Centennial.

BY WILLIAM D. RYAN.

It may be true that the family altar is not so common as it once was. It is fact indisputable that it is not so common as it should be. Prayer can not be regulated by mathematics, nor can worshipping families be easily tabulated by the statistician, but visit the homes of the people of any congregation and you will long remember for their rarity those in which the family regularly, each day, listened to the Word, and together, on bended knee, communed with the Father.

For this dearth of family devotions reasons are adduced in sufficient profusion. In many homes time is at a premium. The old simplicity is gone. Every adult member of the family has engagements that fill the day more than full. Yet a man usually finds time to eat his breakfast. People usually find time to do the things they regard as necessary or even as really desirable. There are homes in which the husband is not a Christian. Yet, the wife proves herself thoroughly competent to direct the affairs of the family except in religion, which she professes to regard as most important of all.

There are men, a vast host of them, to-day, who look back upon the hour of worship in the old childhood home as the most sacred and precious that memory recalls, and their lives are nightly influenced by those prayers of long ago. Is it not the right of our boys and girls to-day to have a heritage like that? Shall they, thirty years from now, look back upon homes Christian only nominally, from which rose no incense of prayer, in which was found no time to worship God?

Alexander Campbell's boyhood was spent in an atmosphere of devotion. Richardson furnishes this glimpse of the home at Rich Hill: "While carefully superintending the literary education of his son, Thomas Campbell was by no means negligent of his religious training. It was made an essential part of his ministerial duty, as it was no less the dictate of his parental affection, to bring up his children 'in the nurture and instruction of the Lord,' in order that his family might be a pattern to others. To this end it was prescribed by the synod that the minister should worship God in his family by singing, reading and prayer, morning and evening. Of these obligations Thomas Campbell was carefully observant, and in all his regulations and efforts for the improvement and welfare of his family he was earnestly and ably seconded by the estimable woman he had married. It was their rule that every member of the family should memorize, each day, some portion of the Bible to be recited at evening worship. Long passages were often thus recited, but if only a single verse was correctly repeated by the smaller children, it was received with encouraging approbation. * * * * When Mr. Campbell was called away, as he often was, to assist other ministers at a distance, his pious wife constantly labored to keep up the regular order of religious worship and instruction in the family. It was in such influences, in the domestic circle, that Alexander Campbell passed his early years, and it can not be doubted that they had a most important bearing on his future life. To this fact he himself bore testimony in his declining years."

It is perhaps conservative to say that in 250,000 American homes there are Disciples of Christ. If the spirit of devotion and daily worship of the home in which this great movement had its inception were, even in some degree, reproduced in all these households of to-day, can any one conceive of blessedness half so great as that which would result? Back of vast missionary undertakings and church-building enterprises, and evangelistic ideals is the supreme need of deeply spiritual and truly consecrated Christians. And these will come from homes pervaded by the incense of daily prayer as naturally as fragrance comes from flower.

It is too much to expect that in all our homes the family altar will be established before our Centennial. Let our task be very much more humble. Let us try to double the present number of families with daily worship, in that time. This can be done. Through the influence of pulpit and press and personal endeavor it is quite possible. No Centennial enterprise could be of greater significance and value.

Getting His Rights.

An Englishman traveling on an express train in Italy, according to a recent story, pulled the bell cord and stopped the train to complain to the conductor that there was no light in his compartment. The conductor explained that the rule was not to turn on the lights until 6 o'clock. That was satisfactory, but promptly at 6:01 the bell cord was pulled and the train was stopped again. He'd have his lights now or, by jove! he'd know the reason why. He got them. The philosophy of all English history is wrapped up in the incident, whether it happens to be true or not. Your Englishman demands his rights. It may be some trivial right which he will waive out of mere politeness when he gets it, but so long as it is a matter of principle he will stop every train in Europe, if necessary, to get it. He'll write to the "Times" about it. He will stay red-hot with righteous indignation over it long after most Americans would have cooled off with a laugh over their own annoyance. It took a people of that sort to work out the principles of popular political liberty and successfully assert the right of self-government. You can't keep in slavery a nation made up of men who would stop a fast train to get a light.

Phelps on Kipling.

Professor Phelps, of Yale, has lately said in a lecture that, for the sake of his artistic reputation, Kipling ought to have died when he had pneumonia six or seven years ago, and that the performance of his maturity has not fulfilled the promise of his youth. The latter statement may, in some sense, be true, because when the exceptional and early maturing intellect puts forth the first fruits of its genius, we commonly but mistakenly assume that added years will bring to the genius the same ratio of improvement that the normal mind exhibits. It is an unreasonable demand. If Professor Phelps meant only to say that some of Kipling's recent output is not up to the best of his earlier poems and stories, he is saying only what every one knows. But there are some of the later compositions that need no apologist. The "Recessional" was worth waiting for. "Kim" is not the work of a man who ought to have died before he wrote it. "The White Man's Burden" not only gave a phrase to the language but was a first-rate poem. For our part, in spite of some of the bad Boer war poetry, which was motived by the patriotic desire to write something rather than by an internal and artistic necessity to write just what he did write, we are willing to give Mr. Kipling as many more years of grace as the Lord gives him years of life and take our chances that he will in the long run justify our indulgence.

The Countess Castellane has gotten her divorce from Count Boni, together with custody of the children. The count asked for an allowance of $50,000 a year and his creditors hoped he would get it. This is the first case on record, so far as we remember, where the offending husband seriously tried to get alimony as a part of a divorce settlement. Count Boni's great ambition has been to become president of France. The loss of public esteem which he has suffered in connection with this divorce episode will set him back several kilometers on his journey to the Palace of the Elysee.

The Insurance Campaign.

Not less important than the recent political campaign is the campaign now being waged for the control of the great life insurance companies. The election will occur early in December. Most of the policy-holders will vote by mail. In each of the great companies there are two tickets, one representing the present directorate and the other the international policy-holders' committee. The "administration ticket" claims support on the ground that it represents experience and expert knowledge of the life insurance business and that the persons who were responsible for the bad management formerly prevailing in the companies have already been removed from them. The policy-holders' committee ticket is the result of the crusade started by Thomas W. Lawson. The thousands of proxies which Mr. Lawson obtained from policy-holders in the New York Life and the Mutual Life were invalidated by an act of the New York legislature postponing the elections and declaring void all proxies already given. At that time we advised against giving proxies to Mr. Lawson. It did not, and does not, seem wise to put into the hands of one man the control of interests so important and wide-spread. After the annulling of his proxies, Mr. Lawson organized a policy-holders' committee composed of eminent and trustworthy men. This committee has nominated a ticket of directors for each of the companies and has conducted a campaign of education to convince the policy-holders of the necessity of a complete change in the personnel of the directorates. They claim that men who were directors in the old days of mismanagement and who could not or dared not or, for any reason, did not oppose those methods, then, are poor material for directors now; and that the election of the administration tickets means the preparation of Wall street control. On this issue we are not at present disposed to take sides further than to say that the reasons which moved us to advise against giving proxies to Mr. Lawson obviously have no application to the question of voting for a group of directors nominated by a committee which was nominated by Lawson. The policy-holders' committee derives its standing not from the fact that Lawson nominated it but from the known integrity and ability of its members. Whatever one may think of Mr. Lawson—whether he is a hero or a fakir, a champion or a charlatan—and whether his motives be philanthropy, revenge, patriotism or greed, the fact is that he has gotten together a most estimable body of committeemen and they, in turn, have nominated an excellent body of directors. The policy-holder will choose his ticket according as he believes that the danger of experience with the new directorate would be greater or less than the danger of graft with the old.

Restless Cuba.

Cuba is restless again. The majority, believing that President Palma was reelected by fraud, could not wait for the next election to right the wrong, but started a revolution. The result was that Palma resigned and the United States has to set up a provisional and temporary government to tide over until quiet should be restored sufficiently for another election to be held. One might have supposed that that would have satisfied even the impatient. But not so, Palma is gone, but many of his appointees remain in office. The insurgents are unhappy because these can not be legally removed before the election next June. They want Governor Magoon to take their side and put out Palma's appointees. Governor Magoon refuses to do so and, since he is a man of much force and stability and of some experience with Latin-Americans, the matter will probably end right where it began.

Richard Harding Davis, who professes that he was once an ardent admirer of the Cubans, has visited Cuba again since the recent American occupation and says that his admiration is turned to disgust by the ingratitude of the Cubans and their lack of self-control and capacity for self-government. But it is possible that even a brilliant writer of short stories, while seeing the dramatic, picturesque and humorous elements of the situation, may fail to make sufficient allowance for the frailties of a people in their political infancy. "Single men in barracks don't grow into plaster saints," and we still claim the liberty of believing that Cuba's case is not quite hopeless although we are driven to admit that the average Cuban patriot is no fit candidate for canonization.

Secretary Hitchcock.

Several cabinet changes have recently been made or will soon be made. One of the most important is the retirement of Secretary Hitchcock from the department of the interior. The secretary of the interior has a large position and Mr. Hitchcock in filling it has shown himself to be a large man. In no other department is eternal vigilance more necessary to prevent the robbing of the government. The public domain has always presented itself to the unscrupulous as an enticing object for speculation. There is land to be stolen by more or less subtle devices, which sometimes need and command the services of congressmen for their successful application, and there is timber to be stolen. Against all manner of crooks, whether in congress or out, who attempted to prey upon the public domain, Secretary Hitchcock has waged constant and successful war. His retirement will be hailed with joy by all such, on the chance that his successor, Garfield, will be less energetic and efficient. In that expectation, it is just possible that they may be disappointed.

In Kentucky they are fighting the trusts with dynamite. Three trust-owned snuff warehouses were recently blown up by "night riders." It is reported that bloodhounds were put on the trail of the culprits. We should think that a bloodhound would labor under some disadvantages in attempting to follow a cold scent through the wreckage of a snuff warehouse.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—XIII.

The Coming and Work of the Holy Spirit.

It is in harmony with the order of development of the doctrine of Jesus that we come now to the teaching concerning the Holy Spirit. It was not until the closing part of his ministry, and when he had practically retired from the world, and was teaching his disciples the great principles of his kingdom, that he disclosed to them the meaning and mission of the Holy Spirit. The occasion of his teaching was most natural. The hearts of his disciples were very sad at the thought of his going away from the world, and they felt themselves wholly unequal to the task of carrying forward his work in the world without his presence and aid. His promise, hitherto made, that he would be with them always even unto the end of the world, was not, of course, clearly grasped. It is easy to imagine, under these conditions, with what consternation they must have received his announcement of his approaching death and departure from the world. It was to meet a situation like that, that he gave to his disciples his great doctrine concerning the Holy Spirit, for the record of which we are chiefly indebted to the Fourth Gospel.

After assuring his disciples that the Father was in him and he in the Father, and that he was going now unto his Father, and they were to ask of the Father what they needed in his name, he adds to them this precious promise: "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may be with you forever, even the Spirit of truth: whom the world can not receive; for it beholdeth him not, neither knoweth him: ye know him; for he abideth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you desolate: I come unto you." (John 14:15-18).

Was ever promise better adapted to comfort the hearts to which it was made? "Another Comforter?" That was exactly what they needed. What a comfort Jesus had been to them in solving all their problems and in leading them into an ever deepening and widening knowledge of the truth! Now that he was to leave them what they needed above everything else was "another Comforter," and one, too, who would be with them "forever,"and who was none other than the "Spirit of truth," who would still be their Monitor and Teacher. The promise, "I will not leave you desolate: I come unto you," makes it clear that Jesus' promise to be with his disciples alway even unto the end of the world, was to find its fulfillment in the coming of the Holy Spirit whose mission would be to reveal Christ more fully to the disciples, especially as a divine force working within them.

Concerning the mission of this Comforter Jesus further said, "But the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you." (John 14:26). Again, "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall bear witness of me." (John 15:26). Once more: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth: It is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I go, I will send him unto you. And he, when he is come, will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment. * * * I have yet many things to say unto you but ye can not bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all the truth: for he shall not speak from himself; but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak: and he shall declare unto you the things that are to come. He shall glorify me, for he shall take of mine and shall declare it unto you (John 16:7, 8,12-14.)

It would be impossible to exaggerate the value of this teaching. The church has not yet risen to a full appreciation of its vast significance and value. It is clear from this that the coming of the Holy Spirit was as essential to the completion of the work of human redemption as was the coming of Christ to the inauguration of that work. God had a great work to do for men from without, which he did in the personal ministry of Christ and in his sacrificial death and resurrection from the dead. But he has a great work to do in men in bringing these great fundamental truths and facts to bear in the transforming of human lives to the likeness of God, and that is the work of the Holy Spirit.

In harmony with this promise of Jesus the Holy Spirit came on the Pentecost following Christ's resurrection, and began his mighty work which has continued even to the present day. To this fact we are indebted for the church and for all that it has accomplished in the world. Often the Holy Spirit has been grieved, his methods antagonized, his plans perverted, by human perverseness and ignorance. But he has never deserted the church. He has always found a dwelling-place in the humble, contrite hearts of those who were willing to know the truth and to obey the truth. He is the Spirit of unity, and how our divisions must have grieved him! And yet he has never wholly forsaken us, and is to-day seeking to breathe the spirit of unity and love into the hearts of Christ's disciples.

The question has often been raised as to the limitation of this promise of Christ concerning the Holy Spirit to his apostles. No doubt the apostles had some tasks to perform which do not need to be duplicated and for these tasks they received such measure of the Holy Spirit as would enable them to perform them. There is no reason to doubt that for all the tasks which the church as a whole, or which each individual member, may be called upon to perform, sufficient measure of the Holy Spirit will be given to-day just as in the apostolic age. Moreover we are fully justified by the teaching of Christ, supplemented by that of his apostles, in seeking the largest possible measure of the Holy Spirit by a loyal, trusting, obedient faith, by purity of heart and life, by prayer and communion with God, and by striving to do the will of God faithfully in all things. Just in proportion as we are "filled with the Spirit" will we come to the deepest knowledge of Christ, to the deepest experiences of Christian life, and exhibit the noblest type of Christian character. This is why our heavenly Father will, as Jesus taught, "give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him."

Nothing, we believe, is more needed among us to-day than greater emphasis upon the work of the Holy Spirit, as Comforter, as Teacher, giving to us a deeper knowledge of Christ, and as a life-giving agency, enabling us to bring forth the fruit of the Spirit in our lives, and to be channels of his convicting power in bringing others to the salvation which is in Christ.

Lengthening Cords and Strengthening Stakes.

The general revival of interest in evangelistic work among all evangelical religious bodies is a matter for devout thanksgiving. This increased interest in the work of recruiting the army of the Lord is probably due as much to the success of the Disciples of Christ and their zeal in that work as to any other cause. We have always been an evangelistic people, and we, too, of late are experiencing a deepening interest in the work of evangelization which is manifesting itself in many hopeful ways.

There are those who scoff at the idea of a "new evangelism." It is a matter of small moment what name we call it, but there are some changes for the better for which we can not be too thankful. Not to speak now of the new evangelism, born with our reformatory movement, in contrast with the now outgrown forms of evangelism which prevailed at the time our movement began, we prefer to notice here some recent changes in our own evangelism which promise better and more enduring results. First of all, there is that wider view of evangelism which emphasizes the duty of each Christian to win others to the love and service of Christ. The new emphasis that is being laid upon our individual responsibility in this matter, and the training and development of a class of personal workers in all our churches, is a most helpful feature of present-day evangelistic work. No longer does an intelligent pastor or successful evangelist rely upon his own efforts to hold a successful meeting. He expects the active co-operation of all the members of the church, not merely in the way of attendance or contribution, but in direct personal work with their friends and others, with a view of bringing them to Christ. "Let him that heareth say come," is the phase of evangelism that is just now having great prominence.

In the next place, the work of evangelization is being better organized and systematized than ever before. In addition to an increasing corps of successful evangelists, many pastors are studying the methods of evangelism, and the singing evangelist, a development of modern times, is proving a most useful adjunct in this field of labor.

Again, it is no reflection on the past to say that a broader and sweeter spirit is entering into our evangelism. The evangelist that is in demand to-day preaches a full-orbed gospel, and seeks to do it in the spirit of brotherly love. He no longer feels it his duty to denounce those who hold different religious views, but is content to teach the whole gospel "speaking the truth in love" and beseeching men to be reconciled to God.

Finally, there is a change of emphasis, necessitated by the change of conditions and by a deeper and broader knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ. The hobbyist to-day, whether the hobby be baptism in water or "Holy Ghost baptism," is not in favor. Men want a fuller and richer gospel, that lays due emphasis upon the fundamental things of our common Christianity.

All this is well, but our evangelistic zeal and ardor must be supplemented by better methods of caring for and developing the converts, if we are to reap permanent benefits from our evangelism. The realization of this truth by many of our best evangelists, and by our pastors and church officials, is another most helpful feature of the new evangelism. Here has been our greatest weakness. We have been more successful in recruiting soldiers for Jesus Christ than in training and developing them for actual service. Now plans are being formulated for organizing, looking after and training, those who are brought into the church, that they may become active workers in saving others. This is the work that just now needs special emphasis. In vain do we add large numbers to our churches unless we retain them, and develop them, so that they shall be helps rather than hindrances. We do well in lengthening our cords, but we must also, in the same degree, strengthen our stakes, if we are to hold the ground gained and so make permanent progress.

The Anti-Saloon League of America has been holding its national convention and conference in St. Louis. To-day, Thursday, in the forenoon, there will be an address on "The Pastor's Relation to the League," and the evening session will be turned over to the Young People's Societies of St. Louis, to be addressed by John G. Woolley. The work of the league is a very important one and is now thoroughly organized in forty-four states and territories, and it is rapidly becoming a strong factor in state and national politics. It works through all parties and all sects, its one main purport being to destroy the evil influence of the liquor interests.

Notes and Comments.

The trustees of the Andover Theological Seminary are discussing the advisability of relocating that institution, which, having a million dollars of endowment, had only eleven students at the opening of the present year, with an entering class of only three. President Edward J. James, of the University of Illinois, has sent an open letter to the trustees of the seminary, urging them to relocate the institution contiguous to Urbana-Champaign, Ill., where its students may have the benefit of the courses offered by the State University, and where, in the great Mississippi valley, it would have a much wider field of usefulness than in its present isolated location. In this open letter President James says: "I can not help feeling that the church, using that term in a large sense, is losing one of the greatest opportunities in the present day in not planting itself in the form of an educational institution firmly and positively in the closest proximity to these great aggregations of students, with the idea of winning over to its service at least its fair proportion of this young and promising material." Concluding his letter the president says to the trustees: "You may set an example here and now in this field of education, which other boards may follow and thus lead to that readjustment of our educational system to the conditions of modern life which is demanded alike by the interests of church and state." It is not likely, however, that local interests, and New England pride in the institution, will permit its removal to the Mississippi valley. Removal somewhere, however, would seem to be a necessity unless this great foundation shall be allowed to remain practically useless.

In another place we print an article by William Shaw, Treasurer of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, written at our request, concerning the Quarter-Century Christian Endeavor Memorial, to which we invite the attention of our readers. The movement to memorialize the twenty-fifth anniversary of Christian Endeavor by the establishment of an International Headquarters Building in the interests of world-wide Christian Endeavor, has had from the beginning our hearty approval. Christian Endeavor has done enough for the churches in breaking down the spirit of exclusiveness and in cultivating the spirit of Christian union, to say nothing of its special aim to develop the spiritual life of the young people and training them for Christian service, to entitle it to this recognition from the young people in all the churches. We are a little surprised to learn, from a private note from Mr. Shaw, that less than 2 per cent of the societies among the Disciples of Christ have as yet made any response to this splendid enterprise. We call the attention of our new superintendent of Christian Endeavor, and of all our young people, to this fact and suggest a more hearty co-operation in this worthy undertaking. The people who have recognized so quickly the value of Christian Endeavor and have given it so hearty co-operation ought to be among the first in the number of its societies at least, contributing to this Quarter-Century Memorial.

Day by Day.

Charge not thyself with the weight of a year,
Child of the Master faithful and dear.
Choose not the cross for the coming week,
For that is more than he bids thee seek.

Bend not thine arms for to-morrow's load—
Thou may'st leave that to thy gracious God.
Daily only he saith to thee,
"Take up thy cross, and follow me."

The effort of our foreign society for a special Centennial Fund of $250,000 in personal gifts by the Centennial, 1909, for land and buildings on our Foreign Mission fields, is a most commendable piece of missionary enterprise. We are gratified to learn that the secretaries are meeting with a very generous response to the appeal which they have sent out. Whoever reads carefully the statement in their circular, calling attention to the needs of buildings and lands for schools and hospitals, and homes for our missionaries in Cuba, in the Philippine Islands, in Japan, and in Africa, cannot fail to realize the pressing need for this special fund for these buildings. No worthier form of signalizing our Centennial in our foreign work could be devised than in the purchase of lands, and in the erection of suitable buildings in the foreign fields in order to the successful carrying on of our foreign work. This movement has been undertaken with the approval of our national convention and should meet with universal encouragement.

In our last issue we published the first part of an article by J. S. Hughes on "Baptismal Dogma and the Great Commission." In looking over the second part of the article, we find that there is little advanced in it that has not already been stated in the first part, and in view of its great length and the crowded state of our columns, we do not see our way to print this second installment, for we could not do it in its entirety, and as it does not easily bear condensation, we would have to eliminate a great deal Brother Hughes has written. We feel that what we printed last week is a fair statement of his position, which can be judged by that.

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is something very suggestive in the first snow of the season. It is nearly always unexpected. It breaks in on Indian summer with a suddenness which often finds us unprepared for it. We go to bed at night with the stars shimmering through fleecy clouds, and wake in the morning to find the earth carpeted in white, and all the trees bejeweled with the snowy crystals, presenting a scene of fairy-land. We are startled into the realization that winter is upon us. Other fair and bright days will come, but the earth has swung into that place in its orbit which makes possible snow, sleet and cold, any day. It is like the first gray hair which we discover on our heads, which is a premonition and prophecy of the time when they will all be gray, and old age shall have crowned us with its glory. There is something pathetic in the care with which that first gray hair is extracted, as if that would stop the flight of the years or stay the progress of age! Others come to take its place and soon they become so numerous that we cease all efforts to remove them, and seek to be reconciled to our lot. But let the first snow admonish us to complete our preparations for the winter, and the first gray hair remind us of the brief number of our days and lead on to a heart of wisdom.

What is the "heart of wisdom" which the Psalmist hoped he might be led to secure through the realization of the brevity of life? Is it not a heart that views time in its relation to eternity? A heart that regards human conduct in its relation to God and the life beyond? A heart that recognizes that life on earth is fraught with eternal consequences, and that in the field of destiny we reap as we sow? Surely nothing can be more unwise or reckless than to think and plan and act to-day, without any reference to to-morrow, or to live our present life regardless of its effect upon the great hereafter. This is to ignore the universal law of cause and effect, which is the essence of folly. Whoso has a "heart of wisdom" will ponder well his steps, will look deep and with honest search into the motives which prompt his action, and bring his daily life to the supreme test of God's approval. If this, indeed, be the result of a "heart of wisdom," how many there are, alas, who have hearts of folly, living their lives here heedless of any divine standard of approval or of any eternal consequences! Oh, that all our Easy Chair readers may seek for a heart of wisdom, that their lives here on earth may be lived in the light which shines down upon them from the eternal world!

These Easy Chair musings are written amid the deepening interest and pressure of our simultaneous evangelistic services, and naturally our thoughts center about the great problem of turning men to God. It is one of the strange things in a world full of mysteries, that any thoughtful human being can be content to live without God. As a matter of fact, no one does so live, for God is the sustaining power of every life, and in him we live, and move, and have our being. But the strange thing is that men will live without any recognition of the Being who sustains them and gives them all they have, and who has infinite blessings to bestow upon those who will open their hearts to him that he may bestow them. It is the glamour of this world, with its appeal to our lower natures, that holds men in its thralldom and blinds them to the realities of the spiritual world. To break the power of this strange spell and bring men to the recognition of God, of duty, and of destiny, is the task of the church through all its manifold agencies. But who is equal to this task? We cannot too often remind ourselves of the truth that Paul may plant, Apollos water, but that it is God that giveth the increase. The recognition of this fact should bring us all to our knees, and clothe us with the deepest humility. There can be no really successful evangelistic campaign that does not abound in prayer—real, vital prayer, that brings the workers into union with God, so that his divine power acting through them, shall reach the unsaved and bring them to repentance and to life.

We speak of failures and successes in these special religious services held with a view of winning men to Christ. It is well, however, for us to have a clear understanding of what is a successful meeting, and what is a failure in evangelistic effort. That meeting, we should say, is a failure in which unworthy motives prompt either the church or its evangelists, or in which wrong motives are urged upon men, as reasons for their uniting with the church. That meeting is a failure which does not make it clear to all who attend upon its services that baptism and church membership are unavailing and worse than useless unless preceded by a conviction of sin, by a genuine repentance, and by the sincere purpose to live the Christian life. No matter how many additions may be reported in a meeting of this kind, it is none the less a failure. That is a successful meeting which brings the message of God's love in Christ for a sinning world to the hearts of men; that makes known the will of God, as revealed in Christ, to sinful men; that makes plain the way of salvation through Christ to those who earnestly desire to be Christians. That is a successful meeting which, in addition to the foregoing, draws together, by the earnestness, energy, enterprise, and spiritual magnetism of the church and its evangelist, a large number of people to hear the divine message, from day to day. God will give the increase to such faithful presentation of the gospel. The immediate results may be large or apparently small, but God's word will not return unto him void. Where the "visible results" are small, we must believe that a necessary work of preparation has been accomplished, and that results must inevitably follow. There is no failure where Christ's gospel is preached in Christ's spirit.

These lines are written on the eve of starting south where we hope to attend two of our southern state conventions; namely, that of Alabama at Mobile, and of Georgia at Valdosta. It is with regret that we leave for a week this evangelistic campaign in our own city, which is proving to be so fruitful a source of blessing to all our churches. And yet we of the stronger states owe something to our brethren in the south where our cause is weaker, and it is in the hope of contributing something, if it be but little, to the encouragement of our loyal and heroic brethren in the south, that we have agreed to make this visit. Our cause is one, north, south, east, west, and we are one people in spite of any little differences of opinion that may exist which do not at all impair our common faith nor sever the bonds of love. The exaltation of opinionism into bars to fellowship and co-operation has been the one evil that has beset our cause from the beginning, and it is the one evil against which we must be upon our guard continually. More and more let us emphasize the great cardinal principles of our movement which have made us one, and which have given us our success in the past, and discountenance every tendency to produce alienation and disaffection by magnifying differences of method or of opinion which do not affect Christian faith or character. So shall we transmit to those coming after us the priceless heritage we have received from those who have gone before us.

Yesterday.

BY H. T. BAIRD.

O. God, I pray, that for this day
  I will not stray from Thee away;
And on the morrow have cause for sorrow,
  For any deed of yesterday.

O, Spirit sweet, guide Thou my feet,
  Keep Thou my heart from sin apart;
That on the morrow I'll have no sorrow
  For any deed of yesterday.

O, Christ, my king, speed the inbring
  Of Thy glad day of righteous sway;
When each bright morrow is free from sorrow
  For any deed of yesterday.

Father, Spirit, Son—wondrous Three in One—
  All earth acclaim Thy glorious name;
For pledge of morrow bereft of sorrow
  For any deed of yesterday.

To God, my stay—through Christ—the way,
  In faith I'll pray each blessed day;
'Till comes that morrow "surcease of sorrow,"
  For deeds of all the yesterday.

Our Beloved Missionary, G. L. Wharton*

"For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord." Acts 11:23.

Another name must now be added to the long list of missionary heroes. Another hero has fallen at his post of duty joyfully bearing testimony for Jesus Christ. The Church of Christ at home has been exalted, and the cause of Christ in India has been advanced by the death, no less than by the life, of our beloved missionary, Bro. G. L. Wharton. He was one of the pioneer missionaries of our brotherhood. For four years he has been the "living-link" missionary of this congregation. The loftiness of his faith, the purity of his character, the closeness of his walk with Christ have blessed our churches as a whole and this congregation in particular. He has fought the good fight of faith; he has laid hold on eternal life.

I cannot help associating his name with that of that grand apostolic missionary, Barnabas, "the son of consolation." Many noble names adorn the pages of the Book of Acts, but none nobler than that of Barnabas. Could anything grander be said of a man than that "he was a good man, and full of the Holy Spirit and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord"? Yet all this may be said of our beloved Brother Wharton whose earthly life has so recently closed.

Brother Wharton was a man of faith. Only a man of faith could labor for the redemption of India. Only a man of faith could leave wife and children to give his life to the uplift of that sad and oppressed people. He knew that his life and work, humanly speaking, could only be a small contribution to the ultimate redemption of India. He knew that weary years must pass, that his body must mingle with the dust, before India would be won to Christ. As he stood in the presence of the appalling need of India, his soul was wrung and his heart pierced by the indifference of the church at home. Yet he never complained, upbraided, or grew discouraged. Why? Because he was a man of faith. Faith always begets optimism. He saw with certain vision the rising tide of missionary enthusiasm in the home church, and he patiently waited; he looked beneath the repulsive exterior of the Hindu and saw the divine possibilities of his heart; his eyes pierced the thick clouds of heathenism that hung above the land, and he beheld God surely working out the redemption of that sad country; he looked into the future, and he beheld the temples crumbling and falling, he saw the land to which he had given his life dotted with churches and schools and inhabited by a happy, Christian people. With such a faith as that he waited patiently and labored hopefully. His was a strong faith that gripped firmly the throne of grace, that would not let go until he was blessed, and that led him to carry that blessing as a trust to the benighted sons of dark India.

There can be only one result to such a life, viz: "and much people was added unto the Lord." In this country and in India many under his personal ministry have turned to Christ for salvation, but the full harvest has not yet been gathered. The Word that he so faithfully preached shall not return unto God void, the life that he so patiently lived shall bear its fruitage throughout time, the sacrifices of his life shall touch the heart of the church at home, and she shall answer with her noblest sons and daughters, with ever increasing liberality, that the work to dear to his heart, the work for which he gave his life, may be carried on, that the people whom he loved may be "added unto the Lord!" He had the Christ-passion for souls. It was his greatest joy to see men and women turning unto Christ. God granted him many souls, but in the years to come, through the influence of his gentle spirit and pure life, through the instrumentality of the young men he has trained for the native ministry, through the generation and growth of the seed he has sown, God will grant him many more souls. His is truly a crown of rejoicing, for God has honored him, and the world is better for his life and labors.

Now the man who is "full of the Holy Spirit and of faith" will be willing to make any sacrifice for the sake of Christ and his Gospel. Sacrifice will become the law of his being. He looks upon the world with the vision of Christ, feels for the world with the heart of Christ, and enters into the work of human redemption with the zeal of Christ. Everything is held subservient to Christ. For the sake of the kingdom of God (if Christ cares) he will leave father and mother, wife and children, houses and lands. The one passion of his heart will be to be good in the name of Jesus.

Such a man was G. L. Wharton. At first we stood appalled when we learned that it was his purpose to go to India without his wife and family. But when we came to know the man intimately we discovered that he was one of those rare souls to whom sacrifice is a holy passion. To our protestations that such a sacrifice was not demanded of a man of his age and physical weakness, he had but one reply: "English army officers go to India, and for years are separated from their families for the sake of their King. Can I do less for my King?" To our earnest entreaties that he spend the rest of his life in this country stirring up missionary interest among our home churches, he had but one reply: "I long to join my comrades at the front." To our efforts to convince him that he should settle at Hiram, and there with wife and children enjoy well-earned years of peaceful labor, he had but one reply: "India needs me more than Ohio does!" He made this sacrifice at great cost to himself. Never did a man love wife and children more than Brother Wharton loved his. Step into his room quietly and nearly always you would find him upon his knees in prayer. What it cost him you and I will never know. It did seem that he had already given to India a mighty service. He had already spent over twenty years there as a missionary. He and his noble wife had passed through two of those awful famines. At the close of the second famine they were both so weak from overwork that they had to be carried on stretchers onto the ship. In the early "nineties" he had spent two years there without his wife and children. Yet he was not satisfied. He must do more for Christ yet. And so at fifty-six years of age he made the supreme earthly sacrifice: he left wife, children and native land for India.

Ah, friends, he was not the only one who made the sacrifice in this matter. Last February a year ago I spent two days and a night in that home at Hiram, Ohio. Would that I could tell you of the beautiful faith, the sweet resignation, the sublime courage of his noble wife. That woman's heart is the cruse of precious ointment over the feet of Jesus; the fragrance of her devotion must fill the "whole house" above. She had gladly yielded up the treasure of her own heart; she could make no greater sacrifice. She loved him as only a true woman can love a true man. Can you wonder if sometimes, when we talked of him, her eyes would fill with tears and she would leave the room? In a minute she would return with complete self-control to tell you how glad she and the children were to give him to such a noble work. O husband and father, what would it cost you to leave wife and children, and go alone to India as a missionary? O wife and mother, what would it cost you to have your husband, the father of your children, leave you for years that he might be a missionary? All that love can suffer when separated from the one loved Brother and Sister Wharton suffered in their separation. Yet they suffered gladly for Christ's sake.

In 1891 or 1892 they were in this country on furlough. They were living at Lexington, Ky. When the time of furlough was out the question of returning to India was considered. Mrs. Wharton could not then go. If he went he must go alone. While this battle was being fought out in his soul, one night as they talked it over, as he looked into the eyes of her whom he loved better than life and into the eyes of Grace and Lawrence whom he loved with the love of true fatherhood, and as he thought of the joy that would soon come to him with the child yet unborn, his eyes filled with tears, he turned to his wife and said: "I can not go." Little Grace's voice was heard as she said: "Papa, can not you do it for Jesus' sake?" Clasping Grace in his arms he said: "Yes, my child, for Jesus' sake I can and will go." Ah, there's the secret. "For Jesus' sake." Not for gain or pleasure, but for "Jesus' sake." Does it seem to you that they have made sacrifices you could not, or would not, make? The explanation is not that they love their loved ones less than you love yours, but that they are willing to do more "for Jesus' sake" than you are willing to do. With them nothing, even life itself, was too good to yield up for Jesus' sake. They had made the complete surrender, "had left all" to follow him. God help you and me to thus completely surrender ourselves to him.

But, now, what of the work to which he gave his strength, and for which he gave his life? I would not for a moment underestimate the value of the labors of Bro. Wharton for the redemption of India, but the whole history of the church proves that God takes care of. his own cause. The work in India will go on. In life Brother Wharton did all he could for the elevation of that people; in death he has sealed his testimony with the sacrifices of his life. The conversion of India must be hastened by the life, labors, and the death of our beloved missionary. God will raise up others to take his place. Brother Wharton's example will inspire unnumbered hearts with the holy purpose that throbbed in his own noble soul. No, no, fear not for the future of missionary work in India. India shall be redeemed; her sadness turned to gladness, her darkness turned to light. The day will surely come when the temples shall crumble, the idols fall, the heathen worship cease and when all from the least unto the greatest, shall know the Lord. Only God knows how much to this grand consummation our beloved missionary, who has "burned out for Christ," contributed. So fear not for the missionary cause in India. God will not allow the efforts of his martyr-servants to come to naught. Upon the soil sanctified by their labors and enriched by their blood, the cause of Christ shall go forth conquering and to conquer. India has had many of God's noblemen upon her soil. The roll is too long to call. But she has never had a nobler man, a more faithful Christian, nor a more zealous missionary than him whose death we mourn to-day.

But what shall the attitude of THIS CHURCH—the church of which he was the "Living-Link Missionary"—towards the work so dear to his heart? This is a time of test. It will prove whether our missionary zeal has been devotion to a man or to God. We have committed no sin in loving Brother Wharton as we do (who could help loving such a Godlike man?), but we shall commit sin if we cease our missionary work because he has departed this life. Let us ever hold him in grateful remembrance. Never let that portrait of him be removed from the wall of this church. If spirits departed can hover around earthly scenes this is one spot where the spirit of our brother will frequently be. When the foreign society assigns us another misssionary (it matters not whether his field be in India or elsewhere) it does not mean that we are to forget our beloved Brother Wharton. What would he have us do if he could speak to us to-day? There is but one answer to that question, viz: become more missionary than ever. I know not whether his body will finally rest in far-off India or in the soil of his native state. But wherever it does rest I hope that this congregation will erect above it a monument worthy of such a man. Brethren, place above his head a stone that shall faintly express your debt of gratitude to him. But there is another monument that will be dearer to his heart than will be a marble or granite shaft above his grave. His quiet, humble soul yearns not for a costly headstone, but his soul was in travail for the salvation of the world. He labored for India, but he prayed for the whole world. The best monument that we can erect is that of increased liberality and increased prayerfulness and increased sacrifice for the conversion of the world. So far as we are concerned, Brother Wharton has lived in vain if in the days to come we do not do greater things for Christ than we have ever done in the past. Forget him not; think of him often; pray for his dear ones constantly; but the best evidence of your love for him and your devotion to his Christ will be increased missionary activity and liberality in the days to come.

It is said that during the battle of Waterloo one of Napoleon's Old Guard was brought to the hospital sorely wounded in the breast. It was before the days of the anaesthetic. As the doctor probed for the bullet the old soldier stoically endured untold suffering. At last he hissed between his teeth: "Probe deeper, Doctor, probe deeper, and upon my heart you will find the image of the Emperor." As our beloved missionary, far from native land and loved ones, lay in that hospital at Calcutta, if we could have probed to the very center of his great soul we would thereon have found the image of Christ; nay, therein we would have found Christ. If we could probe to the heart of that noble wife, who to-day is most of all bereaved, we should thereon and therein find the image of Christ. I know not if Brother Wharton left a farewell message for this church. I have received no direct communication from his noble wife. But if a message from either or both were to come to us to-day it would be: "Do more than ever for the conversion of the world." Christ was in his heart; Christ is in her heart. If Christ be in our hearts we shall do his will, and in fulfilling the will of our Christ we shall do the will of our beloved missionary and his no less loved wife.

For him to live was Christ; therefore for him to die was gain. The mystery we can not solve, nor should we try. Let us thank God that we have for four years been in such intimate contact with such a noble life. "He was a good man, full of the Holy Spirit, and of faith." Let us follow him, even as he followed Christ. He left all for Jesus' sake. Let us devote our all to Christ. Let us not mourn for him as for one who went empty-handed into the presence of his Maker. Mourn not for him whose life was so pure, whose labor was so faithful, whose death was so triumphal. Let us rather rejoice that a saintly life has reecived its reward in heaven. Let us rather pray that a double portion of his noble spirit may rest upon each one of us. And, O friends, forget not to pray constantly for his wife and children. In the years to come—weary years to her—forget not to pray for them.

I am going to ask you to sing that familiar, yet beautiful hymn, "Asleep in Jesus." Please notice how appropriate to this occasion is the last stanza:

> "Asleep in Jesus! far from thee
> Thy kindred and their graves may be,
> But thine is still a blessed sleep,
> From which none ever wakes to weep."

BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION

Lady of Fifty Looks Like Sixteen.

A Nashville lady found a way to beautify her complexion without the use of drugs or face creams.

"Before I began the use of Grape-Nuts," she writes, "I was convinced I could not live long. I was sick all the time; heart trouble, kidneys seriously affected, eyesight bad, sense of smell was gone and hearing very poor.

"My family thought I had dropsy and could not get well, and I only ate Grape-Nuts because I slept better afterwards—did not dream I could be entirely cured, had quit all treatment and given up hope.

"After spending a large sum of money, and being under the best physicians for three years without relief, I commenced eating Grape-Nuts food three times a day and now I am sound as a dollar, am in perfect health, fifty years old and my complexion is better than some girls at sixteen.

"I never have headache, nerves are strong, sight so much improved I need no glasses, heart and kidneys in perfect condition.

"Your Grape-Nuts alone cured me and I cannot find words to express my thanks to the Postum Co. I have told hundreds of people what cured me. It was simple food that I could digest."

"There's a reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

It sometimes amazes persons what damage has been done by improper eating, not knowing any better way. A change to Grape-Nuts soon tells the story. Read the famous book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis*

By W. H. Bagby

(Concluded from Last Week.)

II. Jesus Placed the Emphasis on the Mission of the Church and Not on Its Method of Accomplishing It.

A number of years ago when that most intrepid explorer and missionary, David Livingstone, had been for many months lost to the world in the depths of Darkest Africa, the elder Bennett, then editor of the "New York Herald," cabled Henry M. Stanley at Cairo, Egypt, this brief message: "Find Livingstone!" The man who was capable of making that marvelous march of 999 days through the trackless jungles of the Dark Continent, on that memorable and most important mission could be trusted to devise the ways and means of its successful accomplishment. The splendid results that attended his effort more than justified the confidence of Mr. Bennett in the man he had chosen for the mission. Because he had been left absolutely free to choose his own methods in carrying out his great undertaking, Stanley emerged from the African wilderness a larger man, and bearing the map of a larger world.

In the beginning, God faced potentially perfect but wholly undeveloped man toward a potentially perfect but wholly undeveloped world and said: "Subdue it!" In the performance of this stupendous task man was left free to devise his own methods. It was manifestly the design of the Creator that through the effort to subdue the world man should attain to actual perfection. Out of the world's subjugation was to come man's sublimation. It is God's unwritten fiat that man's development shall be in direct ratio to his achievement. The Anglo-Saxon is what he is because of what he has done in the direction of subduing the earth. The Digger Indian is what he is because of his failure to do anything in this direction. To deprive man of this task, and to relieve him from the necessity to devise his own methods of operation, is to rob him of his only hope of development. This task of subduing the world was assigned to man, not as an end, but as a means to an end—the great end of human development. Out of the struggle to solve the world's problems and to subdue its forces has come the perfection of the race.

Nearly two thousand years ago, Jesus Christ faced the little group of men that formed the nucleus of the Christian church, toward a world spiritually unsubdued, and said: "Go, make disciples of all the nations!" As Stanley was left free to suit his methods to his ever varying circumstances, and as man was left free to devise the ways and means by which to accomplish his stupendous task, so the disciples of our Lord were left unhampered in the matter of the choice of methods for the carrying out of the great commission. And why should they not have been? If Stanley could be trusted to devise right methods for carrying out the commission of Mr. Bennett; if man could be trusted to devise wise and successful methods for carrying on to completion the task assigned him of God, could not the Spirit-filled, consecrated, Christ-enlightened church be entrusted with the freedom to choose her own methods in the prosecution of the great work she was commissioned to do? Are men free agents as citizens of the world and mere automatons as citizens of the kingdom of God? "Where the Spirit of Christ is there is liberty."

If Stanley, because of the privilege to use this liberty, came out of Africa a larger man and bearing the map of a larger world, and if man, in the enjoyment of this freedom, has subdued the world and sublimated himself, why may not a larger spiritual growth come to the Christian church out of the freedom to exercise this same blessed privilege? Out of the struggle that commenced with the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock have come the ingenuity, resourcefulness, vigor and virility of this American nation. If the Christian church is strong, vigorous and virile to-day, it is because, in the exercise of her blood-bought liberty, she has grappled with the problems that have confronted her, not asking "How would God have us do it?" but "How can it best be done?" knowing that the best way is always God's way. If world problems were designed to induce mental struggle that would result in intellectual development, are not spiritual problems designed to induce a struggle that will result in spiritual enlargement? Is the law of spiritual development diametrically opposed to the law of intellectual development? Upon him who affirms that it is rests the burden of proof.

III. Jesus Placed the Emphasis on the Spirit and Not on the Letter.

And this he did because of what they are and what they do. The letter is the form, the spirit the substance; the letter is the external, the spirit the internal; the letter is the shell, the spirit the kernel; the letter is the casket, the spirit the precious jewel in the casket. "The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

The letter of the worship is the time, the place, the order, the accessories. The spirit of worship is the sincerity and spirituality of it. "True worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth." Zeal for the letter of worship is apt to blind the eyes to the spirit of it. Oft has the pearl of true piety been trampled under foot in an unseemly scramble over the casket of form.

The letter of the Lord's supper is the order, the attitude, the administration, the emblems, the physical acts of eating and drinking. The spirit of it is the discernment of its deep spiritual meaning and the appropriation by faith of the grace symbolized. As the corner is a thing apart from the corner-stone, so the spirit of the supper is a thing apart from the letter of it. That symbolized is a thing apart from the symbols. Not he who partakes only of the symbols communes with God, but he who partakes of the thing symbolized. When the passover supper was instituted the people were commanded to partake of it standing. With no word of protest, Jesus partook of it reclining. This indicates how much he cared for the letter. The spirit of the feast had been preserved. This was all for which he cared. In the light of this attitude of Jesus, how puerile the discussion over the propriety of using an individual communion service!

The letter of baptism is all connected with it that is merely external. The spirit of baptism is that intellectual and spiritual turning that brings the subject into vital union with Christ. Unaccompanied by this sincere, purposeful turning to God, baptism is an empty, valueless form, whether the subject be one or one hundred years old. The following paraphrase of a familiar passage of Scripture will serve to illustrate the difference between the letter and the spirit of baptism. (Rom. 2:25-29). "Baptism indeed profiteth if thou be a doer of the word; but if thou be a transgressor of the word thy baptism hath become invalid. If therefore the unbaptized keep the ordinances of the Gospel shall not their unbaptism be reckoned for baptism? And shall not the unbaptized who is so from lack of information or opportunity, if he fulfill the Gospel, judge thee, who with the letter and baptism, art a transgressor of the Gospel? For he is not a Christian who is one outwardly; neither is that baptism which is outward and physical; but he is a Christian who is one inwardly; and baptism is that of the heart, in the spirit, not in the letter." That this paraphrase does no violence to the passage is clearly shown by this other passage from the same author: (Col. 2:11-12) "Ye were also circumcised with a circumcision not made with hands, in the putting off the body of the flesh, in the circumcision of Christ; having been buried with him in baptism, wherein ye were also raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised him from the dead."

There is no greater menace to vital Christianity than literalism. It is a veritable Gorgon's head that turns into stone all that comes under the spell of its sinister power. A westerner but recently returned from a visit to the petrified forest in Arizona, was describing to a company of eager listeners, the strange things he had seen at that interesting spot. According to his story, the trees, the grass, the flowers, the stream, were all petrified. Even an eagle that had attempted to fly over the fatal spot had been arrested in its flight and hung suspended in mid-air, an agatized image of its former self. When reminded of the law of gravity he quickly replied, "O, the law of gravity was petrified too!" Thus the atmosphere of literalism turns into stone every vital thing that falls under its baneful influence. Its baleful breath blights and turns into adamant the beau-

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We are now a country without a president. Mr. Roosevelt is on the high seas. Traditions and precedents mean little to our present chief magistrate. He is doing what no president has dared to do before him. From the illustrious father of his country down to William McKinley no occupant of the presidential chair has ever set foot outside the United States. Washington going toward Massachusetts would not enter Rhode Island because it had not subscribed to the constitution, and was therefore not a part of the country. President McKinley would not cross the bridge at El Paso for the same reason, and declined an invitation to be the guest of the city of Vancouver, or to return by the Canadian Pacific, as it would take him beyond our borders. But here is a man who flings such precedents to the winds. He is a law unto himself.

The constitution does not provide for the present situation. We have no arrangement for an acting president. No one can assume the duties and responsibilities of the executive head at this hour. "In case of the removal of the president from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve upon the vice-president," declares the constitution, but its framers meant physical "inability," and absence from the country is not contemplated in any case. To all intents and purposes we are a country without a president, but the machinery of the government moves smoothly enough without him and the prayers of the people go before the throne for a happy journey and a safe return. Mr. Roosevelt gets such thorough enjoyment out of these unusual undertakings, and turns them to such practical and useful ends, that nobody begrudges him either his outing or his adventure. We may say to the good ship Louisiana, in the historic words, "Quid times? Caesarem vehis," and we may rest assured we shall know more about the big ditch than we could possibly have learned from any other source. Mr. Roosevelt will see for himself, and he will speak with authority; and for some reason, when he speaks the country listens. If there is one thing the president possesses that compares with his boldness it is a keen foresight. He is a man of vision. Two imperative needs were emphasized by our scrap with Spain: the possession of the Hawaiian Islands as a naval base, and the canal to make communication between the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards safe and easy. Think of the Oregon's long, expensive, and dangerous voyage from San Francisco by way of Magellan Straits in 1898. The president will see things for the people when he gets to Panama.

The interchange of courtesies between the Baptists and Disciples of Maryland recently deserves more than a passing notice. Dr. Charles H. Dodd of the Eutaw Place Church, Baltimore, made a most fraternal address to our convention, which was heartily received. He was willing to take the position held by us with reference to the name and the Lord's Supper, and felt the two bodies should no longer stand apart. B. A. Abbott, our representative to the Maryland Association was warmly welcomed October 26. The brethren were as much delighted to receive our delegate as we were to greet Dr. Dodd, and Mr. Abbott found a strong sentiment among them for closer relations between us. Mr. Eugene Levering, the most prominent Baptist layman in the city, responded and favored the union of the two bodies, and rejoiced that in Baltimore arrangements had been made to extend the privileges of the communion to each other. Dr. Curtis Lee Laws, in whose church the association met, stated that for all differences existing between Mr. Abbott's church and his own, they might be merged into one. The stumbling-block, however, was which one. Certain it is, such fraternal intercourse between us must be promotive of the union spirit and should be encouraged. A congress of Baptists and Disciples would greatly help on the courtship. From appearances there is much less chance of union with the Free Baptist brethren than the regular Baptist churches of Christ. We would do well to spend our time on the easier problem. We have a freak Baptist brother here who rebaptizes Disciples, but there are freaks in both bodies. Education, information, and a better understanding every way may be reached by such incidents as this in which leading men like Dodd and Abbott have figured. Let us believe in and practice what we have been preaching. It is time. If we act not, others will get ahead of us. Our occupation will be gone. The procession is moving. Are we in the band-wagon?

One of the most distressing events in our recent history is the break-down in our beloved M. E. Harlan. He had done much to promote this cause of which I am writing. His addresses on this subject had a wide circulation, and accomplished much toward a better understanding between the Baptists and our people. He did a fine work in Brooklyn and was esteemed by all as a faithful preacher of the Gospel, and an upright, pure, and forceful man. In June last he had to give up his work; and the physicians tell him he can not resume it for a year. The trial is a sore one. His ministry was full of promise, and to be disabled, even temporarily, is a loss to our cause in the east and a great grief to Brother Harlan and his devoted wife. It is no wonder that the bearing of the heavy burdens and the incessant labors of a city pastorate should sometimes be too much for even the strongest. This has been true of this faithful man; and the heartfelt prayers of his brethren are with him in this hour of affliction. We appreciate his work and worth, and shall look anxiously for his restoration to the ranks where he loved to serve.

The strenuous age shows itself in our ministry. Few know the prodigious labors that are demanded of the man in the pulpit. If he works conscientiously he has cares and responsibilities and mental and physical strain such as no other servant of the public ever dreams of. Here goes Minot Savage, pastor of the Church of the Messiah, N. Y., a strong man of but sixty-five, a wreck in mind and body, and so with many others. It used to be thought preachers were long-lived, but the age is hard on the minister if he be a worker. It is not easy to suggest a remedy. One word of advice may be offered—give others something to do. The most successful pastor is he who can get the most work out of other people. He has burdens enough that are exclusively his without attempting to be the whole thing. Use the brethren. Use the sisters. Use the young people. Use the children. Some of them are longing to be called upon. Others are perishing from disuse. It is an absolute injury often to do yourself what you might as well have another do. Hunt for the buried talents. Dig them up, and send them about like Cromwell's statues of the apostles, doing good.

By the way, that was Houdon's statue of Washington, and not "Hondon's," as I was made to say last week.—"u" and not "n."

COFFEE IMPORTERS

Publish a Book About Coffee.

There has been much discussion as to Coffee and Postum lately, so much in fact that some of the coffee importers and roasters have taken to type to promote the sale of their wares and check if possible the rapid growth of the use of Postum Food Coffee.

In the coffee importers' book a chapter is headed "Coffee as a Medicine" and advocates its use as such.

Here is an admission of the truth, most important to all interested.

Every physician knows, and every thoughtful person should know, that habitual use of any "medicine" of the drug-stimulant type of coffee or whiskey quickly causes irritation of the tissues and organs stimulated and finally sets up disease in the great majority of cases if persisted in. It may show in any one of the many organs of the body and in the great majority of cases can be directly traced to coffee in a most unmistakable way by leaving off the active irritant—coffee—and using Postum Food Coffee for a matter of 10 days. If the result is relief from nervous trouble, dyspepsia, bowel complaint, heart failure, weak eyes, or any other malady set up by a poisoned nervous system, you have your answer with the accuracy of a demonstration in mathematics.

"There's a reason" for Postum.

The Lordship of Jesus

By T. E. Winter

Many people who acknowledge Jesus to be the Son of God do not accept him as their personal Savior; they may even admit that he "came to seek and to save that which was lost," he actually saves men, but still not accept him as their Savior by whole-hearted faith, and entire self-commitment. Others, again, accept him as the Son of God and as their own personal Savior by placing perfect confidence in him, and complying with his requirements, that they may be freed from their past sins, and become sons of God, but still they fail to acknowledge him as Lord. Now "the good confession," when made, is an acceptance of three great truths, viz: (1) The Sonship; (2) The Saviorship; (3) The Lordship of Jesus, the Christ. The last, logically an outgrowth of the two former truths, is equally as important; for while they have to do primarily with faith and doctrine, the latter has to do with the daily life.

Lordship implies both ownership and possession; in the parable of the wicked husbandman, "the lord of the vineyard" was its owner (Matt. 21:33-46.) Paul's teaching in Eph. 6:5-9 shows that the "servant" was owned and held in the possession of the "lord" or "master." As a consequence of this ownership and possession the lord has authority to command and to compel obedience to his commands. God has delegated "all authority in heaven and on earth" to Jesus and Peter said to the Pentecostians, "God hath made this same Jesus, whom ye crucified, both Lord and Christ;" and again he says of Jesus, "He is Lord of all." (Acts 2:36; 10:36.) Since Jesus shed his blood to redeem us, (1 Peter 1:18, 19; 1 Cor. 6:20), and since we have committed ourselves to his service, he both owns and possesses us, and could well say therefore, "Glorify God in your bodies and in your spirits which are his." In harmony with this conception Paul calls himself "the bond-servant of Jesus Christ."

It is comparatively easy for one to acknowledge Jesus as "Lord of all," as "King of kings, and Lord of lords;" that is not sufficient; that does not necessarily affect one's own life. No, more than this is necessary. One must, like Thomas, cry out from the deepest conviction of one's own heart, "My Lord, and my God!" When, on the Damascus road, Saul of Tarsus was convinced that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, recognizing his Lordship he cried out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The Lordship of Jesus always has to do with the practical side of the Christian life, with the doing of things—"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" From the time Saul asked this question, he was Christ's bond-servant; Jesus truly was the Lord of Paul's life. As Jesus "came to seek and to save that which was lost," Paul, as his bond-servant, said of himself, "I am made all things to all men that I might "by all means save some." (1 Cor. 9:22.) So touched by the infinite love of Christ as expressed in the crucifixion, so filled with gratitude to him for this great sacrifice and salvation, was the apostle Paul, that his life was completely under the direction of his Redeemer and Lord; that question he asked on the Damascus road became his life-prayer. Think of what Paul gave up! Social, political and ecclesiastical position; his father's religion, his own faith. Summing it all up he says: "Whatsoever things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ." That is what the Lordship of Christ means.

Paul not only accepted Jesus as Lord, but he "preached Christ Jesus as Lord;" that is for you and me; it is our duty as fully to accept the Lordship of Jesus as did Saul of Tarsus. Oh, that every Christian would whole-heartedly inquire, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" To him would come the answer, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." "The servant is not greater than his lord." Jesus came to seek and to save and that is the chief mission of the church and of each Christian. As Paul says, become "all things to all men that you might by all means save some."

Jesus can not be Lord of a man's life unless he is Lord of his substance. We need to learn that the Lordship of Jesus must affect our use of material wealth committed to us. We ought carefully to consider this question—"How much owest thou unto thy Lord?" As Christians we are not giving as we ought for the spreading of the Gospel. The members of the five principal religious bodies of the United States are giving on an average only one cent per member each week. Think of it! One cent a week!! The population of the United States now is three and one-half times greater than it was in 1850 while our wealth is fourteen times greater. Why should not the finances of the churches increase with a marvelous rapidity? In 1900 the Protestant church communicants were worth $22,066,317,000. During the period 1890-1900 these churches added to their permanent wealth each year on the average $684,754,410. Had they given even one-tenth of this amount, saved out of their net income they would have given 1250 per cent more to foreign missions than they did give. Why, if each member of our own brotherhood would give on the average only fifty cents we would have for foreign missions over $600,000. No one will dare say that amount could not be wisely and effectively used. Only ten packages of chewing gum, or one pound of tea, or a necktie, or ten car fares, denied ourself and the amount would be assured. Oh, my brother, recognize Jesus as Lord of your substance! Let him teach you that "It is more blessed to give than to receive," and be a giver for all our aggressive work. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say unto you?" (Jesus.)

WHERE JESUS PLACED THE EMPHASIS.

tiful tree of life. It arrests in its flight the white dove of peace, and hardens its very heart into stone. Under its dread spell the laws of liberty, love and life become cold, inflexible, dead, "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

IV. Jesus Placed the Emphasis on Inward Transformation and Not on Outward Conformation.

All else that any one may be able to say is in vain if he can not say with Paul: "It is no longer I that live, but Christ that liveth in me." "Christ in you, the hope of glory." This is the sine qua non "Did you receive the Spirit after you were baptized?" is a much more important question than "Have you been baptized?" "And you (too) shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit" was the highest note struck in the sermon on Pentecost. "That times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord" was the climax reached in the sermon in the temple court. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."

It matters not what name is inscribed on the corner-stone of the house of worship if the Spirit of Christ dwells not in the hearts of those who worship within. It matters not what the order and the accessories of our worship may be, if it proceed not from hearts in which the Christ has been formed. It matters not when, nor where, nor how hard, nor by what plan we work, it will count nothing to our credit with God if it be not prompted by the unselfish love of Christ-filled hearts. It matters not when, nor where, nor by whom, nor how, nor what for, nor how often we have been baptized if we have not the Spirit and the love and the life of Christ dwelling within us. These are the vital things. These are the things worthy of emphasis.

Our future as a factor among the religious forces of the world depends upon where we place the emphasis from this time on. If we would not be a "disappearing brotherhood" we must enlarge our field of emphasis. No religious movement can survive that does not learn in time to put first things first. A lady owned an imported canary. It was a beautiful singer, and she prized it very highly. But it began to droop and she feared it would die. With great care and regularity she provided it with the food upon which it had always been fed, but it got no better. One bright, sunny day she took it out into the garden, and removing it from the cage, placed it on the branch of a rose bush. Soon she observed it pecking eagerly at a small spider that hung suspended by its web. This was the food it needed—living food.

Brother ministers! Fellow-workers in the most glorious calling that ever enlisted the hearts and engaged the hands of men and women! The future of this splendid movement is in our hands! It lies with us to determine whether it shall go marching on to glorious victory, or whether it shall droop and die. The time has come when this bird of paradise must have a change of diet or commence to droop and die. We must feed it on the living truths and vital principles as abundantly provided as the other kind, and by the same beneficent hand.

D. O. Smart, Our President

By G. W. Muckley

On Friday evening, November 9, at the evangelistic service held at the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, Mo., David O. Smart, for eighteen years president of our Board of Church Extension, was stricken with heart disease and dropped to his seat, dead. The circumstances have been told in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

D. O. Smart was born in Independence, Mo., February 15, 1843, and would have been 64 years old next February. His parents were of Virginia stock, and, before moving to Missouri, lived in Kentucky. Brother Smart's father assisted in organizing the first Christian church in Jackson county, Mo., and he was early surrounded with Christian influences. He attended Bethany College for a few years. He was in college when the civil war broke out in 1861. As did many other young men he left college and hurrying home enlisted in Shelby's fighting brigade and remained in the confederate army until mustered out of service at the close of the war.

In October, 1866, he married Alice Walrond and moved to Kansas City. Two sons and a daughter, Mrs. Donaldson. were born to them, all workers in the Christian church. His wife has nobly and generously seconded him in all his work for the church. And his services are now fully measured since we miss him at every turn. Mr. Smart led a very busy life. He told the writer that he had no time for vacations. He occupied very many responsible positions both in and out of the church and his judgment in business and church circles was always in demand. As a counselor in the affairs of the church his presence and appropriate words have always been conspicuous. Did you go to the morning or evening service Brother Smart was always there. If you attended prayer-meeting in heat or cold you rarely found him absent. At Sunday-school he always had a class of boys or girls. In the monthly meetings of the officers of the church Brother Smart's seat was rarely vacant. During the eighteen years that he was president of the Board of Church Extension he was at every meeting with but a half dozen exceptions. He was elected president of the Board of Church Extension for the nineteenth year at its meeting on Tuesday of the week he died. In everything he undertook he served as he did in the confederate army, "until he was mustered out." Death laid his cold hand upon him as he was about to make an exhortation to his fellow Sunday-school teachers to bring all their scholars to Jesus.

Here is the hymn he wanted to read with the teachers, after the reading of which by the teachers, on the following Sunday at the close of the Sunday-school, all of Brother Smart's class gave themselves to Christ. The hymn is certainly "beautiful" and is an "earnest prayer," to use Brother Smart's last words.

ALL MY CLASS FOR JESUS.

My scholars all for Jesus!
This be my earnest pray'r,
For they are souls immortal,
Entrusted to my care;
For each the Master careth,
I long, I long for each;
Grant, Lord, the heav'nly wisdom,
These wayward hearts to reach.

Chorus—

All, all my class for Jesus;
O which one could I spare?
All, all my class in heaven,
Let none be missing there!

My girls, light-hearted, tho'tless,
On trifling things intent,
These cost a priceless ransom,
On these my care be spent;
That each, a willing handmaid,
Be brought to own her Lord;
"Whate'er He saith" to "do it,"
Obedient to His word.

My boys I want for Jesus,
My wayward, wand'ring boys,
So full of life and beauty,
So charmed by earthly joys;
For them the Savior suffered,
For them His life was giv'n;
Lord, by that ransom, help me
Bring all my boys to heav'n.

Lord, be in ev'ry lesson,
Bless ev'ry falt'ring word
My trembling lips may utter,
To bring them to the Lord;
So fleeting are the moments
Of opportunity!
O Jesus, Master, help me
Bring all my class to Thee.

This was the man's chief characteristic—he was in dead earnest in everything he did. His words and his work were therefore an inspiration to every one with whom he came in contact. He did not seek to be a counselor, but he was never happier than when his counsel was sought because he loved to serve people. When I came to Kansas City in 1890 to take the secretaryship of Church Extension he was the first man from whom advice and help was solicited. The first meeting we had together he looked upon me as a young man and said: "Do you think you can do it?" I said, "Yes, with help and counsel from men like you." His face fairly glowed as he said, "You shall have it." That counsel never failed through these eighteen years. In the councils of the Board of Church Extension his words always carried great weight. No minister among us, young or old, nor any man on the board, could possibly be more solicitous to realize all the aims of our Church Extension work than he. He was anxious to live and be present at our Centennial in Pittsburg and was in sympathy with all of its aims. He gave liberally but always in the name of the church. His other public office was the presidency of the trustees of our Bible college at Columbia, Mo. His most liberal public gifts were to that institution. He served for years on the state board of Missouri, also.

To our congregations in Kansas City he performed an indispensable service. He was first a deacon in the First Church and afterwards an elder. He was an elder of the Sixth and Prospect Church, now Independence Boulevard Church, from its beginning in 1888. He had a most liberal share in the erection of the Sixth and Prospect Church building and it could not have been built but for his large gifts. Here were laid the foundations deep and strong for the present work on Independence boulevard, now perhaps the greatest local church work in our brotherhood. While our pastor, Brother Combs, was absent on Sunday, October 14, at the national convention at Buffalo, Brother Smart took charge of the service at Independence Boulevard Church, and after an enthusiastic, sensible speech, raised $1,260 for the rebuilding of our stricken churches in San Francisco.

Writers of history tell us that in every decisive battle there have been a few moments of decision—a few moments, when by desperate fighting or skill of strategy the result of the battle is determined. It is so in the life work of men. Few of us realize how often the right word spoken at the proper time turns a man toward a great life work for Christ. Nearly every great and useful man has had words fitly spoken to him just at the moment in life when they counted for the most. It was so in the case of David O. Smart. As the work of the Christian church began to develop in Kansas City, men of the right calibre were needed. Brother Smart was put on boards and building committees and finally the church in the state needed his services on the state board. Just at that time Mr. Smart had taken on new business burdens and as he came into his office one morning he said with great emphasis to his associate and long time friend and adviser, E. P. Graves, "The church is thrusting too many burdens upon me. I can't neglect my growing business and assume these accumulating duties. I am going to resign from all these boards. They take too much of my time." Brother Graves saw that this was not the opportune moment to speak, but about two days later when Brother Smart came into the office in a splendid mood he saw the time had come to speak and he said: "David, I was very sorry to hear you speak as you did the other day about resigning your duties to the church. I don't want you to do it and these are my reasons:

"1. You have the ability to serve the cause.

"2. You have plenty of means to take the time.

"3. There are obligations resting upon you that should compel you.

"4. This will bring you in contact with the best and brightest men of the state among our people.

"5. They need you and you need them as much as they need you. By coming in contact with these men you will become a broader man and your vision of the Christian life will be widened."

Mr. Smart sat in a thoughtful mood for a moment, and, suddenly wheeling round to his desk he went to work and from that moment to the day of his death Brother Graves said he never heard a word of complaint from Brother Smart's lips about work that he was called to do for the church. The right word had been spoken at the critical time in Mr. Smart's life by an elder of the church who saw the moment and did not fail to do his duty and a conspicuously useful man was saved to the cause of Christ. Two years later, in 1888, when the Board of Church Extension was organized and located in Kansas City, he cheerfully accepted the presidency and gave it the wisest and best days of his life.

In all the places where Brother Smart worked his words and influence will linger for good. On Saturday morning after Brother Smart's death, an 11-year-old boy wakened his father at an early hour and said, "Wasn't that a fine death of Brother Smart's? I would like to die that way while I was telling people to do good." The influence of his work in the church and Sunday-school told on Sunday morning after his death, when, after the reading of that song, No. 124, by the teachers, twenty-nine young people made the confession and in the church services thirteen more, making in all forty-two for the day. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord for their works certainly follow them.

Our Budget

—The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist is in the southland attending the Alabama and Georgia state conventions.

—The Christian churches of St. Louis will hold another great rally at the Odeon on Sunday next, at 3 p. m.

—The next issue of The Christian-Evangelist will be a special one. It will consist of 52 pages, or nearly double the usual size. In view of this fact and the Thanksgiving holiday period, we will be compelled to go to press on Saturday of this week and will, therefore, not be able to handle late news or telegrams as usual on Monday morning.

—Among the features of this special number, in addition to other Campbell matter, will be a reproduction of what we believe to be the latest photograph made of Alexander Campbell. The price for this number will be 5 cents per copy, six for 25 cents and $2.00 per hundred. The difficulty in producing so large a paper makes it imperative that we shall know before the edition is run off the press whether extra copies will be required by any of our readers. They should send in notice to the General Superintendent at once, if they wish extra copies.

—F. M. McHale and Marie Brewer are in a meeting at Claflin, Kan.

—J. D. Williams reports that the church at Nebo, Ill., needs a minister.

—"Received a copy of 'Victory of Faith.' It is well worth reading."—F. M. McHale.

—H. A. Northcutt is to hold a meeting at Roswell, N. M., with C. C. Hill next spring.

—Walter S. Willis has received an increase of salary from the church at Clintonville, Ky.

—E. G. Merrill has been extended a unanimous call to preach for the church at Troy, Mo., next year.

—Thomas L. Cooksey has some open time for meetings and may be addressed at 143 Butler avenue, Indianapolis.

—Thomas Wallace has been making a preaching and lecture tour through New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

—J. D. McClure, of Albany, Mo., is starting west with his wife to find some relief from her asthma and heart trouble.

—C. A. Lowe expects "to follow up" what he calls a very good meeting just held by T. H. Capp for him at St. Joseph, Mo.

—S. M. Crutcher's engagements for 1907 will be as this year—two Sundays at Braymer, one at Cowgill, and one at Ludlow, Mo.

—W. T. Moore has gone to Mobile to address the Alabama convention. A bear hunt is also on the program of this 75-year-old youth.

—E. F. Leake closed, on October 28, a ministry of six years at Newton and began with the church at Onawa, Iowa, on November 4.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate the new building at Kellerton, Ia., on Nov. 25. Congregations in the vicinity are cordially invited to attend.

—J. F. Callahan is now on the Pacific Coast. A post card from him, written at Acampo, says the colony east of that place seems to be flourishing.

—F. D. Hobson, pastor at Kearney, Neb., commends the work of Melvin Putman and Miss Emma Egbert who have just assisted him in a meeting.

—C. H. DeVoe writes that the church at Peru, Ind., has just introduced the use of the individual communion set and is very much pleased with it.

—Since the dedication of the church at Lincoln, Ill., two years ago, there have been about 300 additions to the membership. W. H. Cannon is pastor.

—Reports at the annual meeting of the church at Peoria, Ill., where Harry Foster Burns is the minister, showed the work prospering in all departments.

—W. E. Harlow will close his meeting at Compton Heights Church, St. Louis, on Thursday evening with a lecture on "The New Thought: How to Live One Hundred Years."

—William M. Thomas, pastor of the Frederick Avenue Church, St. Joseph, Mo., commends highly Cassius V. Allison, of Mound City, who has just held a meeting for him.

—William Grant Smith reports that a large Young People's Society has just been organized at Rossville, Ill., where every department of the church seems to be successful.

—Thomas L. Cooksey will be at Henderson, Tenn., in a meeting during December. Owing to some churches changing their plans Brother Cooksey will have vacant dates from January to April when he goes to Texas.

—The number received at Niantic, Ill., since March last was 72 instead of 40 as stated in The Christian-Evangelist. Thirty-one of these were added at regular services. J. Will Walters, the pastor, thinks this is the best little church in central Illinois.

—The Chariton Christian Missionary Society will hold the next convention at Sumner, December 29, 30. E. H. Williamson, the secretary, writes us that these fifth Sunday meetings are found to be very helpful to the country churches of this Missouri district.

—The church at California, Pa., is making progress, there being additions, while the Bible schol has more than doubled both in numbers and in collections. There is renewed interest in the Christian Endeavor and a Junior Society has just been started with 35 members. Thomas Martin is the pastor.

—Thomas J. Giddens reports the work at Miami, I. T., as in a prosperous condition. During his year of ministry 48 have been added, 25 during his regular appointments, lacking just two of doubling the membership. He commends John A. Brown, of Moline, who has just held for him a meeting, with 23 additions.

—W. J. Dodge writes us that the work of completing the church building at Jackson, Ky., goes forward and the basement will soon be ready for use. The Sunday-school has a good attendance and the prayer-meetings are full of profit. Brother Dodge has just entered upon his third year, by the unanimous request of the members.

—Charles E. Smith, state evangelist of South Carolina, has just organized a new church at Brunson with twenty-nine charter members. Brother Smith is now having splendid audiences in a tent meeting at Wagoner where, he says, is the greatest combination of Mormons, infidels, Millenialists and other "ites and isms" he has ever seen.

—Walter M. White, who is in the field in the interests of Kentucky University, is making good success also as an evangelistic preacher. His latest meeting was at Norwood, Ohio. Brother Armistead writes us that it accomplished all the most sanguine had hoped for. The church there has outgrown its facilities and will enlarge at once. The entire debt is now paid for.

—Geo. L. Snively, of the Christian Publishing Company, is to be with the Hyde Park Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., on the occasion of their sixty-eighth anniversary which is to be celebrated by a men's banquet on November 23, and all day meetings on the following Sunday, November 25. Brother Snively is glad to render service of this kind when he can.

Home Missions
IN THE Sunday School

Don't fail to send your Sunday-School ffering of Sunday, Nov. 25th to the

American Christian Missionary Society
Y. M. C. A. Bldg., CINCINNATI, OHIO.

It is the right thing to do. The schools are lining up joyously. Let us make it the great day of the year.

—H. James Crockett, who has been with the church at Butler, Mo., for three years will close his ministry there in December. During his pastorate there have been over 150 accessions. The church is united and organized for aggressive work. Brother Crockett has not decided as to his future. He would like to hold a meeting or two before entering upon another pastorate.

—We regret to learn that the condition of Herbert Corwine is such that he has felt compelled to tender his resignation of the pastorate at Bartlesville, I. T., to which place he recently removed. He was only on his new field for about a week and he decided that it would be better to return to his old home at California, Mo. He will return to Bartlesville with his family if he improves to any noticeable extent.

—J. D. Hull has been asked to remain at Kendallville, Ind. The church building there has been much improved during the past year and 125 additions to the membership are reported during the eighteen months pastorate. A mission church has been supplied by Brother Hull during the year and he has acted as corresponding secretary of the First Missionary District of Indiana.

—In writing about "Gloria in Excelsis," R. S. Robertson, pastor at Osborne, Kan.,

says "the entire membership is greatly pleased with this hymn book. It is the only one that does justice to our great work. Brethren, throw away your cheap song books and secure 'Gloria in Excelsis.'" The church at Osborne has ordered new pews. Miss Lizzie Sprowl, of Indiana, is to take charge of the music.

—A very enjoyable union service arranged by all the churches of White City, Kan., has just been addressed by George E. Lyons, the new state secretary. On this occasion the church debt of $500 was pledged and enough more pledges taken to make a good beginning for a parsonage fund. C. E. F. Smith and wife, of Emporia, have been employed to labor with the church the coming year.

—C. H. Mattox, the efficient pastor at Albany, Mo., is being assisted by C. G. Stout, of Des Moines, Ia., in a meeting. Brother Stout has made quite a success in evangelistic work and we look forward to good results at Albany where the brethren will make use of The Christian-Evangelist in their campaign. During the past year Brother Mattox reports about 130 additions.

—H. L. Atkinson, pastor-evangelist at Hazel Green, Ky., writes that this mountain school church is in the midst of some needed repairs, and would like to learn of some richer church which could donate to them their discarded pews, if these be fairly usable. Hazel Green is unable, in view of the other repairs they have to pay for, to secure new pews.

—We regret to record the death of Mrs. Fannie L. Pannell, widow of the late F. Pannell, who was for many years associated with the musical department of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. She was a good woman and beloved by a wide circle of friends. Her pastor, C. H. Winders, conducted the funeral services in Columbia where the body was brought for interment.

—The Editor takes a little personal pleasure in the report elsewhere of the celebration of the twenty-first anniversary of the Society of Christian Endeavor in Boston, Mass., which he had the honor of organizing and which, so far as he knows, is the oldest Christian Endeavor Society among us. It was a pleasant occasion—this celebration, and we regret that we could be present only by a message of greeting and congratulation.

—The Humboldt Street Church, at Brooklyn, N. Y., has just purchased a beautiful brick house of two stories and basement, which adjoins the church property, for a parsonage. J. Keevil and his family are now located there and appreciate a home all to themselves in this crowded section of the city. J. L. Keevil, of Johnson City, Tenn., has just closed a short meeting and three were added to the church. All departments are reported to be making progress.

—J. N. McConnell, who has just been holding a meeting at Pleasant Hill, Ore., speaks highly of the moral condition of that place, which, he says, is the result of the splendid church work that has been done there in days gone by, as well as under the present minister, M. F. Horn. Brother McConnell is now in a meeting at Aumsville, Ore., where Brother Messick is pastor. The latter, however, will go to Starbuck, Wash., to take charge of the church there.

—In another column will be found a report of some of the work of W. F. Richardson at the First Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo. Brother Richardson's church is in the down town district and it speaks well for him that he and his congregation can show such a fine report for the last year under all the difficulties incidental to a church placed as is this one. He has labored faithfully, he has labored intelligently, and he has won a host of friends because he deserves them.

—We hear excellent reports about Brother McKissock's interregnum ministry at Nashville, Tenn., where he has been supplying the Vine street pulpit. He has just commenced a protracted effort and Brother Linn Cave, of the Woodland Street Church, will assist. Bro. W. G. Mershon writes us that Dr. Torrey has just closed a meeting in Nashville which has stirred the city as no other ever has. Some 1,200 conversions are reported, the converts joining the different churches all of which will be helped as a result of this meeting.

—We regret to learn from Bro. Walter Scott Priest, of the Broad Street Church of Christ, Columbus, Ohio, that their building enterprise has sustained a severe loss in the destruction by fire of their splendid pipe organ. The organ was stored in a large dry goods house, on the fifth floor where the fire broke out, resulting in the complete destruction of the organ. It was a splendid instrument and was insured for only half its value. The new building is ready for the roof and the church hopes to be in it by March 1, when Charles Reign Scoville is to begin a meeting with them.

—S. R. Drake, of Columbus Junction, Iowa, would like to have some pastoral or evangelistic work. He would prefer work in the ministry, but if this does not open up wishes to do the next best thing so that he can support himself and family. He has had some experience in general merchandise and would be glad to enter a dry goods or hardware store. His chief desire is to get located in a town where he can have church privileges, for he has a family of four boys and one girl at home, the oldest boy being nineteen, and him he would like to get in some work where he would become a useful man.

—Zealous friends of The Christian-Evangelist should consider that The Christian-Evangelist can not be published in its present form and at the present price unless our great presses and numerous employes are kept busy during the intervals between publications of this paper. During these periods we print books and Bible school literature, and The Christian-Evangelist admirers are helping in its development as they assist us in selling our other publications. One of the best expressions of friendship for The Christian-Evangelist is an order for books and Bible school supplies.

—We very much regret to learn that an unexpected break-down of his health necessitates for H. C. Garrison, pastor of the church at Danville, Ky., a change of climate for awhile. His great-hearted church has given him an indefinite leave of absence and he has started for the mountains of North Carolina. Brother Garrison, who is not in any way related to the Editor of this paper, is one of our brightest young men, and has done an excellent work in his present field. It is sad to see such promising leaders as he, Burrus Jenkins, and others who could be mentioned, laid aside, at least temporarily, from active duties, largely, perhaps, through the great strain and incessant demands that are made upon them.

—The southwestern Minnesota convention, which recently closed, was an excellent one. The speeches and conferences were helpful. Among the resolutions adopted was one calling for closer co-operation among the churches of the district to advance the cause in so fruitful a field. The excellent work of District Evangelist Childs was endorsed, and a protest against the liquor traffic was made, while the people of the district were invited to make a candid investigation of the plea of the Disciples of Christ. Thanks were extended to J. H. Reaves and wife, who left their own work in South Dakota to take part in the convention. The next convention will be held at Mankato, Minn.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Cost Nothing to Try, Send for it and See.

Those who suffer from it well know the miseries of catarrh. There is no need of it. Why not get it cured? It can be done. The remedy that does this is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, an eminent Southern doctor and minister, who has for over thirty-two years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

He will send you, entirely free, enough to satisfy you that it is a real, genuine, "home cure" for catarrh, scratchy throat, stopped up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, asthma, etc.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before. It is not a spray, douche, atomizer, salve, cream or any such thing, but a genuine, tried-and-true cure, that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs, so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choking, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It saves the wear-and-tear of internal medicines which ruin the stomach. It will heal up the diseased membranes and thus prevents colds, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and a good, free trial treatment and also a beautiful illustrated booklet, "How I Cure Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, showing you how you can cure yourself privately at home.

Write him immediately.

—J. W. Lowber, of Austin, Texas, has been invited to deliver an address before the American Anthropological Association.

—We have been unable until this moment to make mention of a very pleasant reunion of the Blunt family, which recently took place at their homestead near Brookfield, Linn County, Missouri. The family circle is a large one, embracing the parents, 12 children and 13 grandchildren. As two of the sons, John and Reuben, are ministers, a feature of the reunion was preaching in the Smyrna church nearby, while, of course, a basket dinner was part of the program. Visiting brethren were present from Linneus, Brookfield, Purdin, Antioch, Grantsville, Shelby and Browning and from Sullivan and Nodaway counties, as well as Kansas City. A meeting was carried on over the Lord's day and ten converts were added to the church. We are indebted to O. J. Bulfin for these facts.

—J. B. Scheitlin writes us that T. J. Shuey has completely surprised the congregation at Abingdon, Ill., by tendering his resignation, to take effect November 26. Brother Shuey and his family go to Seattle, Wash. He has been with the Abingdon church for about two years and eight months. Nothing definite can as yet be stated as to a successor. Any communications should be addressed to P. J. Murphy or C. N. Wright. Brother Scheitlin writes as follows: "Brother Shuey never preached a weak or poor sermon during his labors here and the entire community realizes that it must be an unusually able pulpit man to fill the place as acceptably as he has. Three Sisters Shuey, wife and daughters of the pastors, will be as much missed because of the extraordinary faithfulness manifested by them in the various departments of church work and especially in its music."

—F. O. Fannon, who recently paid the office of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a pleasant visit while returning from an appointment, writes us that he has felt too busy preaching and helping on their feet weak churches to make regular reports to the paper. He is now in the hardest work of his life, yet he says it is the happiest. November 11, he writes, was a great day for the little church at Salem, Ill., when the cornerstone of a most complete church building to cost about $25,000 was laid. A new interest has been started. The church debt at Kinmundy has been provided for. The building erected four years ago has become too small and there is talk of enlargement. There are additions at nearly every service. Brother Fannon is now with a little band of 20 or 30 members at St. Elmo for a short meeting to help deepen the spiritual life, gathering in some new helpers, getting a pastor located and getting the world to feel the touch and uplift of another strong church.

The Standard Adding Machine.

We wish to call attention of our readers to the advertisement in this issue of the Standard Adding Machine. The Standard Adding Machine has been on the market for a number of years and is to-day the leading commercial machine, having been adopted by a great many of the larger commercial institutions in the country, railroads, and the favorite machine of thousands of bankers.

The Standard is a very compact, durable machine, portable, and is never affected by change of position or change of temperature. Because of its simplicity, it is sold at a very low price in comparison to the make of others, and is far more satisfactory. The Standard is used in our offices, and has been for some time, and we are very willing to add our testimonial both as to the worth of the machine and the standing of the Company.

J. O. Shelburne.

Among the pastors who are resigning their regular work to enter the evangelistic field is J. O. Shelburne, of Toledo, O., who expects to resume his evangelistic work January 1. His past success in that field has been a constant motive to draw him back again into it, although his work as a pastor has been a valuable experience, enabling him to understand their problems which is an important feature of successful evangelism. Brother Shelburne has introduced in Toledo shop meetings which have been productive of great good. He has equipped himself for these noonday shop meetings with an organ, song books, posters, cards, etc., and an evangelistic singer who will have charge of this special feature of the work. This is really carrying the Gospel to the people and is a new departure of which we are glad to learn.

J. O. Shelburne.

Improved financial methods, and a complete organization of forces to take care of new converts, are some of the features to which Brother Shelburne will give special attention in his work. It is a significant fact that the ministers of all the Protestant churches in the city have urged Brother Shelburne to undertake this work of evangelism. Brother Shelburne comes from a long line of preachers, his grandfather, Silas Shelburne, being one of the first preachers of the Reformation in Virginia. He had three sons who were preachers of the same primitive Gospel, and out of their families have come twelve preachers. The Shelburne family have given to the Reformation not less than twenty preachers.

We wish Brother Shelburne the greatest success in his evangelistic work and shall be glad to co-operate with him in carrying the Gospel into new fields.

A Word of Greeting and Good-bye.

In common with many others, no doubt, we have received the following word of "greeting and goodbye" from two of our devoted missionaries, man and wife, who were just setting sail for China. We publish this greeting because we believe it expresses so well the spirit of all our missionaries, and because we hope it will help to weave a bond of stronger sympathy and affection between our missionaries and the home churches.

"We turn our faces toward China with joy. It is not because we are leaving dear ones and native land that we are happy, but because in God's far east call we believe there is an opportunity for a joyous service for Christ.

"We regret that we can not have a longer fellowship together in America, but we can have joy in prayer, and though seas may roll between we can be laborers together in Christ, you in this land and we in the lands beyond. We shall meet again, God alone knows when and where, but in him there is always a meeting place. As we journey over land and sea, we covet your prayers, and in the hours of labor and problems forget us not.

"Again we say farewell. Your life has made life's journey for us brighter and better, and for your fellowship and kindness we are grateful. May the Good Master give us all strength and make it possible for us more and more to live the love life in this world.

"May our fellowship and service be bounded only by the boundaries of the earth.

"With joy in the Master's service, Good-bye,

"ABRAM AND BERTHA CORY.

Twenty-seven churches report 266 meetings, with an average attendance of 198. Total additions, 372; by baptism, 177; by letter, etc., 94; males over 21 years of age, 71; females over 21, 85; males under 21, 22; females under 21, 67; total over 21, 156; total under 21, 89. The reason that the number of total additions shown is more than the number by baptism plus the number by letter, etc., is that not all churches reported how many by baptism, and how many by letter, but report the total only. The same is true as to the comparative ages.

We request that all meetings still in progress, and those which were delayed and commence later, be reported regularly to B. E. Hanes at Parkersburg; and these will be added to this report until the revival closes in the spring.

Ministerial Exchange.

The Christian church at Goodland, Kan., is in need of a minister. Address J. Ed. Stevens, Goodland, Kan.

J. P. Myers, Paulding, O., will be able to hold one meeting this winter. His meeting with home forces in January resulted in 70 additions.

I can hold several meetings this winter. Let those desiring my services address me at Clarksville, Ia., or at my permanent address, 985 26th street, Des Moines, Ia.—Joel Brown.

A. B. Houze writes that the choir leader, J. Orland Keener, at Flora, Ind., has a fine baritone voice, and can be had for some meetings. Write him.

Mrs. F. J. Hopeman, Cato, N. Y., will be open for engagements as gospel singer after January 1. Terms reasonable. Best of references. New York state engagements preferred.

Any church located within 100 miles of Osceola, Mo., desiring a minister or evangelist can secure the services of a worker, either a lady or gentleman. Address, Minister, Osceola, Mo., in care of B. B. Bennett.

W. F. Richardson's Twelve Years.

Having closed the twelfth year of my pastorate with the First Christian Church of Kansas City, Mo., it may be of some slight interest to some of your readers to know of the work here. During this period there have been 1,288 additions to the congregation, and 863 have been dismissed by letter and death, leaving a net increase of 425. More than half of the dismissals were to our sister churches in this city, as members moved from the downtown district into the residence neighborhoods. We have now a nominal membership of about a thousand, with an actual resident membership of 800.

The fiscal year of the church ended October 31 and the report showed that, despite our heavy losses during the year by the removal of many of our most liberal givers to other churches, we had raised more money than in any previous year of the church's history, except during the building of our house of worship, and the year when it was remodeled. Through the church and its auxiliaries $12,918.89 were contributed, of which $3,347.77 were for missions and benevolence. Many individual gifts were made for like purposes, not passing through our treasury. We start into the new year with every financial obligation of the church discharged, and a balance to our credit. To those who understand the situation here, this is counted worthy of commendation, and I want this faithful people to have their fidelity and sacrifices made known to their brethren. I began my thirteenth year as their pastor on October 1, and with the assistance of Barclay Meador, my faithful assistant, hope for even larger results in the future. We are to have R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., with us in January for a series of evangelistic meetings, and expect a great blessing from God.

Kansas City, Mo. W. F. Richardson.

A Meeting at Cornell, Neb.

James S. Beem, who is now in a meeting at Cornell, Neb., united with the Christian Church at the age of seventeen during a meeting conducted by M. C. Wilson. He had been a member of the M. E. church and, like many others, did not know that the Disciples of Christ make the plea for Christian union, their position having been misrepresented to him. He began preaching about seven years ago, three years of his ministry having been spent in active evangelistic work with the result that about 1,000 people have been added to the church under his labors. Much of his work has been held in difficult fields. He has a reputation of preaching the gospel in its purity and simplicity and yet without giving offense. Of his pastoral work we also hear a good report.

Jas. S. Beem, Evangelist.

Brother Beem is to be assisted by George W. Light as leader of music. Brother Light has been training for this work and has received favorable commendations wherever he has labored. He was converted in one of Brother Beem's meetings, has assisted him in some of these, and is blessed, we hear, both with enthusiasm and ability for his special vocation.

Mr. Hugh Gresham, who is working as a missionary of the American Sunday School Union, with headquarters at Trenton, Neb., was instrumental in getting Evangelist Beem to go west. He will assist in the work in many ways.

Good News from the Foreign Field.

The Foreign Society has late and glorious news from our stations as follows: P. A. Davey, Tokio, Japan, reports two baptisms in Ota, and three in Hongo; H. P. Shaw, Shanghai, China, reports two baptisms; C. E. Benlehr reports three baptisms in Damoh, India; Royal J. Dye reports twenty-two baptisms in Bolengi, Africa; Dr. A. L. Shelton reports seven baptisms at Ta Chien Lu on the borders of Tibet; W. H. Hanna reports twenty-five additions to the church in and around Laoag, province of Luzon, P. I.; H. P. Williams reports another church organized near Tiaong, P. I., which church now has ninety-seven members; two new churches were dedicated in the Philippine Islands on September 9, one at Laoag and one at Loreta. The latest word from the Upper Congo, Africa, is as follows: "Chapel crowded yesterday. Twenty-two conversions. Very impressive immersional service afterward in the Congo river. Largest gathering around the Lord's table ever held here. Sunday-school crowded. All rejoice. Dr. Royal J. Dye."

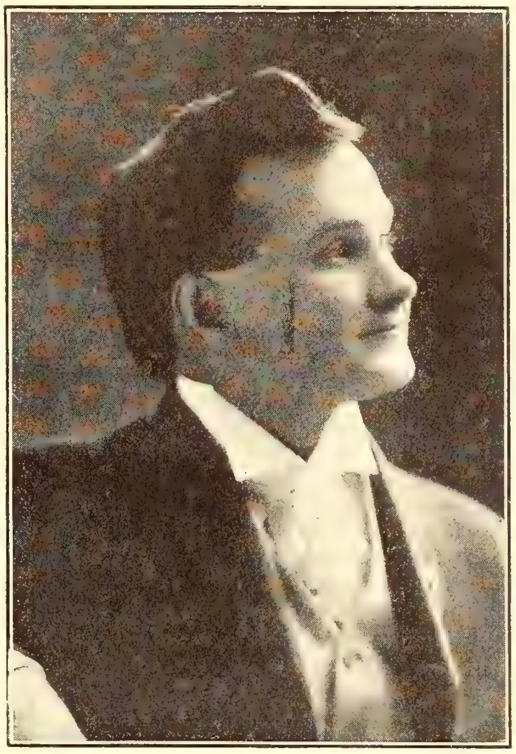
R. O. Rogers.

R. O. Rogers of Fredericktown, Mo., has just held a successful revival meeting at Marshall, Ark. It lasted twelve days and was concluded because of another engagement of the evangelist.



T. J. Arnold, a lawyer of the town, who joined the Christian Church during this meeting writes enthusiastically of it. He says when he first began to attend it, being a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, he went more as a critic and as a spectator, but when the services had concluded he was compelled to say that they had wrought untold good to the town and people and a number of additions had been made to the churches.

St. Louis Simultaneous Campaign.

The interest in the simultaneous campaign held by most of the St. Louis churches has increased rather than shown any diminution. On Lord's day last, the services at all the churches were more largely attended than at any period during the meetings. It is unfortunate that, for local reasons, the meeting at the First Church, where 150 additions were reported under Herbert Yeuell, had to close the middle of last week, and that led by Bro. C. C. Garrigues at the Hammett Place Church had to close on Sunday when the meeting was really but getting under good way, because Brother Garrigues was compelled to return to his own church at Albion, Ill. At Compton Heights W. E. Harlow will conclude a good meeting on Thursday night with his lecture on "The New Thought." The other meetings will continue throughout the week. At Union Avenue Brother Chilton's preaching has had a most inspiring effect. Brother Turner has done good work at Hamilton Avenue, and we should not overlook the fact that Brother McFarland with home forces has had good results at the Fourth Church. We have not received details from some, but it is felt that even had there not been a single addition to the churches this effort has been well worth while.

A mass meeting of St. Louis Disciples of Christ was held at the Odeon Theatre on Sunday afternoon. W. E. Harlow gave the address and there was special music by the combined choirs and the singing evangelists engaged in the campaign. Without any definite organization the body of the large hall was filled and it is expected that on next Lord's day afternoon, when a similar meeting will be held at the Odeon, the house will be packed to the doors. We can not, at this writing, say definitely who will be the speaker. The committee is making an effort to get a well known representative of our brotherhood from outside the city. The following is the report of additions presented at the ministerial meeting on Monday morning:

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Northwestern Ohio.

While we have a number of pastorless churches we hope we may soon have this problem solved. The work of constructing buildings in keeping with the cause seems to have taken hold on the hearts of our brethren. Bowling Green has a new $25,000 church under roof. Clyde Darsie, the pastor, has accomplished great things at this place.——Then comes the work under way as the church at Paulding, where our brother Myers holds forth; this also is to be a modern building.——At Fayette Brother Elwinger has just dedicated a new wing to the building, and made their building up to date.——At Wauseau, where C. R. Oakley ministers, they have the plans for a new building and in the early spring a very fine church will be erected, and the South Church of Toledo has paid for an excellent lot where they are going to have a building ready for the Pittsburg Centennial.——Norwood Avenue secured Brother Finch from Kansas as their preacher. We give him a hearty welcome. We understand that the East Side Church will soon have a pastor and this will fill up the broken ranks in this city.——Grant Speer has decided to remain at Hicksville, as the brethren will not let him go.——Brother Hendershot has had splendid success at Delta.——I have resigned the work at Central to enter the field as an evangelist. I want to extend to my brethren my sincere thanks for the privileges they have given. I have no doubt made mistakes, but you have in a loyal way supported me.——I have already received a number of calls. I have with me in my work Robert Knight, who, I think, will prove one of the strongest singing evangelists in the field. I will still remain in Toledo, O., and make it my headquarters. My first meeting will be January 1 at Salem, O.

J. O. SHELBURNE.

Chicago Notes.

The month of October was the busiest month of my ministry in Chicago. The national conventions in Buffalo, a trip to Ohio to marry my niece and to spend a day with the dearest woman in the state, my old mother, now in her 76th year; the annual rally of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society, held in Willard Hall on Sunday, October 28, at 3 p. m., with H. L. Willett as chief speaker, and a crowded house full of members of our Chicago churches and missions, with the usual duties that come to me as minister of the West End Church and superintendent of missions, all conspired to give me enough to do to keep me out of mischief. In the Englewood church has just been held the annual business meeting and election of officers of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society. All the old officers were re-elected except a few who refused to permit their names to be voted on. E. M. Bowman was re-elected president and Edward B. Witwer, chairman of the board. At the annual rally the Larrabee fund, sacred to the memory of Brother Albert Larrabee, now deceased, who served the society for many years as superintendent of missions, was augmented by offerings of nearly $300, of which $100 is to erect a suitable monument above his grave.——West Pullman is whittling down the debt and building up steadily in both church and Bible school. Guy Hoover is pastor.——Chicago Heights was probably never in so prosperous and promising a condition as under the ministry of Brother Lockhart, and fostered by C. G. Kindred and the great Englewood church.——Maywood and Humboldt Park are still looking forward to the location of a good preacher to live on the field and give full time to the work. Douglass Park is now enjoying the entire time of their capable minister, F. C. Aldinger.——Ernest M. Haile, late of Texas, is ministering for South Chicago, while pursuing some studies in the university.——W. R. Moffett continues another year at Ashland Avenue, where he is doing a good work.——The West End is trying to be patient with a slow, but, we trust, a permanent growth. Last Lord's day was our best, both in Bible school and church attendance. We dedicate on Sunday, November 25, at 3 p. m., our house of worship recently acquired from the Presbyterians. On that day we expect to raise about $500 to pay off some outstanding obligations, and provide a fund for needed repairs and improvements. Friends are asked to send a contribution for the West End mission, or for the general work in this great city.——The Monroe Street Church, which has been without regular pastoral care since the resignation of A. T. Campbell, now with the Metropolitan Church, has recalled their former minister, Charles C. Morrison, late of Springfield, Ill.

Los Angeles Letter.

Southern California churches and preachers are again on the move. J. W. Utter goes from a successful ministry of ten years at Covina to become assistant pastor at the Broadway church, Los Angeles.——W. G. Cauley leaves Redlands after five years' successful work in that beautiful city and succeeds J. W. Utter at Covina. R. H. Bateman has closed his earthly ministry and entered upon his eternal reward. His pulpit at Whittier will be occupied by W. H. Martin, who has just closed a five years' fruitful pastorate at Santa Barbara.——Among the new men who are numbered among us are M. A. Hart, Pomona; E. E. Lowe, San Bernardino; W. T. Adams, Corona; Bailey, Downey; Oscar Sweeney, Rialto; E. C. Riley, assistant pastor at Pasadena, and Dr. A. S. Dabney, Vernon. It is expected that vacancies at Redlands, Santa Barbara, and Santa Ana will be supplied by the time thes lines appear in print. Altogether our work in these parts in very prosperous.——The growth of population in southern California is immense. Los Angeles grows as by magic. The postal receipts for September, 1906, was 26 percent greater than for September, 1905. Public school buildings can not be erected fast enough to accommodate this rapidly increasing population.——Lord's day, October 28, was of special interest to the First Christian Church of this city, because on that day we formally dedicated our newly enlarged Sunday-school department. F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was present and was master of ceremonies. This part of our church property as rebuilt is 76x68 feet in size. In the basement are found a banquet hall, 56 feet square, a boy's brigade room 20x36, with 100 lockers, the kitchen, the furnace room and several robing rooms. On the first floor are found the main Sunday-school room, which is 56 feet square, and built on the Akron plan with 20 class rooms opening into it from the first and second floors. Beside these down stairs there are six other rooms available for classes; the pastor's room, secretary's room, and the Sunday-school auditorium will comfortably seat 800 persons. Upstairs are to be found the ladies' parlors and dining rooms which are very spacious, a buffet kitchen for smaller social events, three class rooms beside those opening into the Sunday-school auditorium and the janitor's apartments of three rooms which are fitted up with every modern convenience. This part of our church property has 35 separate rooms in it and F. M. Rains says it is the most perfect building for Sunday-school work and social purposes that he knows in the brotherhood. The building is carpeted throughout except in the basement. The improvements cost $15,000. Our entire property and improvements are worth at least $80,000. It is our plan this year to lay greater stress than ever upon Sunday-school and social work. We are convinced that the Sunday-school affords the most promising field for Christian work. It is both missionary and evangelistic and yields greater results for the instrument of time and money of any line of church work. Located as we are in what is rapidly becoming the downtown church district of the city we must emphasize the social life of the church. Many are the young men coming to the city who need the friendly grasp of the hand. We shall strive to supply this need. This is an important and neglected line of church work in many of the cities of the country.

Los Angeles, Cal. A. C. SMITHER.

The Twenty-first Anniversary of Our Oldest C. E. Society.

The twenty-first anniversary of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Boston Church was fitly observed November 7. This is of more than local importance, because this is the oldest society among the Disciples of Christ. On November 3, 1885, under the efficient leadership of J. H. Garrison, who was then pastor of the Boston Church, this society was organized. The charter members were (order of names as they appear on secretary's book): J. H. Garrison, G. Wilton Lewis, Ida M. Marquis (now Mrs. Emery), Maurice Willis, E. M. Potter, George Marquis, Henry Bernard, A. O. Garrison, Mrs. J. H. Garrison, Mrs. E. M. Potter, George B. Howe, William M. Varney, W. E. Garrison. The first president was Maurice Willis; first secretary, Ida M. Marquis; first treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Garrison.

Mrs. Ida Marquis Emery, the first secretary, was present at our anniversary exercises, and read an excellent history of the society. From this I have gleaned some facts. In the beginning the society grew like many others, very rapidly. At the end of the first six months it had reached 42 active members; in 1890, there were 100 active members. For many years the society took first ancient and modern historic sites, ancient land marks, decisive battlefields in the world's greatest wars are described as seen. Many out of the way places are also described where there are no laws to protect, people without intelligence to direct and religion founded on fatalism without power to reform.

LIVING AND DEAD CITIES,

are also described including Paris, Rome, Naples, Alexander, Cairo, Constantinople, Athens, Corinth, Jaffa and Jerusalem. Troy, Carthage, Ephesus, Memphis, Pompeii, Herculaneum, Jericho and other cities renowned in history.

FINE ARTS AND ARCHITECTURE

In this field the most renowned paintings, statues, pyramids, tombs, catacombs, cathedrals, temples and the mightiest monuments of the Old World are fully described.

IN NATURAL SCENERY

The grandeur of the Alps, the desolate wilds of Sahara, the devastating eruption of Vesuvius, the fertile valley of the Nile, the almost enchanted lands along the Bosphorus and among the fabled isles of the Aegean sea with the sacred hills, plains, seas, and prophetic places of Palestine are all included, together with the trials of travel met with in the sand storms of the desert, the monsoon of the orient and the sirocco of the Mediterranean sea.

place in the work of the Boston Union. It was also influential in the organization of many other societies. Many students from our churches in the central portion of the country came to this city and coming in touch with this society, on returning to their home churches, began the Christian Endeavor work in them. This society, while not so large as in some former years, is still strong and doing good work.

Three of the charter members, George Marquis, G. Wilton Lewis, and Mrs. Ida Emery, were present and had places on our program. Greetings were read from Bro. J. H. Garrison, Maurice Willis and Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Potter.

The first Christian Endeavor Society in the Boston church sends greetings to all other societies in the brotherhood, praying that "They may all be one as thou Father art in me and I in Thee" and "May the Lord watch between me and thee while we are absent one from the other."

T. B. McDonald has accepted the work at Waco.——Bert Wilson has resigned at Humboldt to take effect January 1. He will re-enter Cotner and will be ready for supply preaching then. He has done a splendid work at Humboldt.——B. H. Whiston has resigned at Minden and accepted a call to Aurora. The change takes place December 1. The church at Minden has practically rebuilt its house during Brother Whiston's ministry.——Blue Hill has called P. T. Martin, of Nichols, Ia.——E. H. Longman has visited Bradshaw several times, and will very likely be called there regularly as supply.——W. L. Lodwig has been called to supply regularly at Ox Bow and Oak churches.——C. Kleihauer is visiting Dorchester. These young men are all Cotner ministerial students.——F. L. Pettit visited in Kansas recently and held a memorial service for an aged member of the Auburn church. There have been five confessions at Auburn since the last report. W. Mark Sexson is there in a meeting.——E. D. Eubank, of Broken Bow, preaches regularly for the Liberty church near Ansley. State Evangelist Adams will hold a meeting there in December.——Two confessions at Overton where C. F. Martin preaches. Will hold a meeting the present month.——The church at Grand Island, where J. R. McIntire ministers, gave a reception to the faculty and students of the business college, which was a decided success. During the seven months of Brother McIntire's ministry 35 additions. Some lingering debts were cleared up.——The Putman-Egbert meeting at Clay Center, where A. G. Smith preached, closed with thirty-five added, most of them from new homes, and a goodly number of men.——State Evangelist Whiston (Harvard special evangelist) closed the Norfolk meeting with seventeen added. The church will begin to build as soon as possible. John L. Stine preaches for the church half time, living at Wakefield.——State Evangelist E von Forell (Clay Center special evangelist), held his first meeting at Vesta. There were six additions.——Brother and Sister Whiston are now at Guide Rock. He holds an independent meeting at Humboldt when through there.——State Evangelist O. A. Adams (Oberlie's special evangelist), has just closed a meeting at Mason City, resulting in an organization of thirty-three members.——Samuel Gregg began a meeting at Cozad, where H. F. Stevens is minister, October 21. He takes work at Fremont December 1. We give Brother Gregg a welcome to the state again.——Kearney began a meeting with Putman and Egbert October 28. F. D. Hobson is the preacher there.——R. A. Schell is in a meeting with home forces at Hastings.——Two confessions at York, where Thomas Maxwell ministers, October 21.——The church at Nelson liquidated all indebtedness in an offering taken October 7, and will make repairs on the building. There were two confessions and one added otherwise on same date. The Ladies' Aid Society provided the funds to send their pastor, F. E. Day, to the national convention at Buffalo.——A county convention in Nuckolls county has been organized with F. E. Day as president.——A letter from S. D. Dutcher says that the First Church at Omaha is closing up contracts for its new building on Twenty-sixth and Harney streets. This will be a fine structure when completed, a credit to the city and state.——Nineteen people were added to the church at Blair, where F. Grant Hamm ministers, in the first half of October. Part of these the result of a union meeting. Brother Hamm has been called indefinitely and evidently he has been indefinitely called to a closer relationship with some good woman, as he reports that "Wife and I received a good old-fashioned pounding Tuesday evening."——Knox P. Taylor held a Bible school institute at Belvidere. L. B. Cox is the preacher.——The church at Edison recently dedicated a new church costing about $3,000. J. Stuart Miller is the minister. This is a magnificent achievement for a small congregation. Brother Miller will hold a meeting at Bloomington.——Gordon Lintt has entered the field as a singing evangelist, beginning at Mount Pleasant, Ia. Brother Lintt is a brother of W. F. Lintt.——The Christian Endeavorers of the state sent State Superintendent Doward to the Buffalo convention.

Oregon.

With October evangelistic work in Oregon begins in earnest and many of the churches have perfected their plans for the year's campaign for souls. As a rule, the churches will do their best to help the O. C. M. C. to realize the motto "2,000 souls for Christ and $6,000 for Oregon missions." by Turner, 1907.——During October I had the privilege of visiting most of the churches of eastern Oregon and attended the conventions of the central and northwest districts. That of the central has already been reported. The convention of the northwest district was the equal in every way of the Albany gathering. "The Field," "The Forces" and "The Obstacles," were some of the main questions considered in the convention.——As a result of this gathering G. C. Ritchey becomes evangelist for the district, opening his term of service with a meeting at Tillamook, where Brother Zimmerman is serving as missionary pastor.——The success of this convention was, in no small degree, due to the untiring energy of C. F. Swander and the hospitality of the McMinnville church. E. S. Muckley is the efficient leader of the work in this district and was chosen to succeed himself as its president.——This district and the northeast have the distinction of having the only living link churches in the state. Portland, first, is a "living link" in the F. C. M. S. and Athena in the A. C. M. S. It would be a fine thing for some of the other Oregon churches to "go and do likewise."——Now, brethren, may we not have a great gathering for Oregon missions during the first weeks of November, and have all "Debt Fund" pledges paid in before the first of the new year?——Every Bible school in Oregon should send in a worthy offering the day following "Children's day for American Missions," November 25.

Oklahoma Christian University.

The Board of Trustees of this new institution, after careful discussion, decided to undertake the establishment of a general school or university. Enid, Oklahoma, was selected as the place for the location of the school. Determining factors were its natural and its superior railroad advantages, the flourishing condition of the city, and that the population is comparatively dense and the people prosperous and able to furnish a large local patronage.——The fact that we have a flourishing local church, and the further fact that our churches throughout the surrounding country are very numerous had great weight. We think that it will be possible for ministerial students to run out on Saturday to as many as two hundred churches and get back for work on Monday. The advantages Enid offers for student preaching are better than those offered by any other location in the new state, and Enid's bid for the school was the best proposition: One hundred 4-year scholarships at $200 each, $20,000. Two hundred one-year preparatory scholarships at $40 each, $8,000; one hundred music scholarships at $50 each, $5,000; water privilege for five years, worth at least $1,000; electric lights at very much reduced rates, making it unnecessary for us to install our own plant; streets to be paved with asphalt and the promise to soon extend the pavement to the college campus; cars to run past the college campus, giving us a fifteen minute service; the city sewer or an independent sewer brought to our building at an estimated cost of $5,000. We also have the privilege of selling off twenty acres of our campus whenever we think it wise to do so, provided we invest the money in buildings and equipment. We estimate that this will be worth to us at least $ 0,000. The full value of Enid's bid, therefore, appears to be upwards of $150,000, allowing for the probable increase in the value of our land within the next two years. Option was also taken for us on 160 acres of fine land within one-fourth mile of the college campus, at $12,000. This option has now been taken up and the farm secured, which will enable us to start an industrial department.

Our board required the city of Enid to put up a satisfactory guarantee for the payment of the cash bonus. We are proceeding at once with our plans for buildings, and we hope to be able to break ground not later than December 1. If we carry out the plans that we have in mind, we will have one of the finest educational plants in the new state. The next problem that we have on our hands after the erection of buildings, is to secure an adequate endowment for this great school. The aim will be to have the buildings ready for occupancy by September, 1907. The music department of the school will be opened at once in rented rooms, inasmuch as there is a strong local demand.

I will make my home in Enid from this time forward, and all correspondence may be addressed to me at that place.

E. V. Zollars,
President Oklahoma Christian University.

North Carolina.

The North Carolina State Convention was held in the town of Dunn. The church there is comparatively young, but entertained the convention in a splendid manner. Dunn is on the outer rim of Disciple population in North Carolina. The strength of the brotherhood is in the Eastern counties. It was of the nature of an experiment to hold the convention with one of the frontier churches, but the attendance was good and the Convention itself several degress better than any I have attended. The report of the Corresponding Secretary showed a considerable advance. Nearly four thousand dollars were raised from all sources. Three new churches were organized, and a fourth in embryo. An evangelist was sustained during the summer months and assistance was given to a number of struggling churches.——The C. W. B. M. held its sessions the first day of the convention. Mrs. J. B. Jones has been the president for four years and has infused considerable vigor into the Women's work. This year the state officers are located at Kinston. The officers are, President, Mrs. Preston Bell Hall; Vice-President, Mrs. J. W. Granger; Recording Secretary, Mrs. J. F. Taylor; Treasurer, Mrs. W. B. Brown. Miss Bettie Tesh, of Winston-Salem, was chosen as Corresponding Secretary and organizer. The advisory members of the State Board are Mrs. N. J. Rouse, Mrs. M. E. Moseley, Mrs. Sarah E. Askew, Mrs. Julia Barrett and Mrs. R. F. Hill.——Dr. Longdon, of India, made a most interesting address as a fitting close of the C. W. B. M. day. Everybody was delighted with her. It was a rare treat for the people of this state to hear a consecrated missionary. It seems to bring the foreign fields nearer to our doors and can but increase the interest in missions.——My fourth year with the church in Kinston has just closed. We have a unanimous call to remain. Our work has been successful and pleasant. The church has been strengthened in additions and in spiritual power. The ideal of worship has been advanced, and a continuous effort has been made by the pastor to get the church to realize its mission as a force for saving souls. This church is awake to all the interests of missions and benevolence. The Sunday School has vitality, system and order. The Christian Endeavor has enlisted a large number of young people and is doing a fine work. The prayer meetings are always interesting, but not largely attended. The prayer meeting is the pastor's cross. If, as some say, the prayer meeting is the gauge of the church's spirituality, then, alas! for the condition of most churches.——Our country churches in Eastern North Carolina have made their annual changes. This is a habit they have which has become a second nature. These churches seem to be content with one sermon a month and a week's prayer meeting in the summer time. Some of these have Sunday Schools, none have the Lord's Supper except on the preaching day. These churches are not grouped, each getting a pastor to its own taste, and the taste seems to get bitter or sour or both before a year ends. No preacher for the country churches is doing much pastoral work. In many instances he is engaged in farming or some business or other. The churches are not progressive, and as the bulk of Disciples are in country churches and small towns, the State Work has never been aggressive. The belt of eastern churches does not extend much above the tide-witer, and like the tide they ebb and flow, rising to some enthusiasm under a strong stimulus, but subsiding when the stimulus is removed.——I am very much pleased with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. There are 20 copies coming to members of my congregation, and all like it very much. When I came here only one copy was received. I am glad to induce anyone to subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for I believe to be on the right course and desire to extend its influence. PRESTON BELL HALL.

Portland City Missions.

On September 16 I began work as Evangelist and superintendent of City Missions for the joint board of the Churches in Portland, Oregon, and the O. C. M. C. and A. C. M. S. Our first effort was a tent meeting at the rapidly growing center of St. Johns. The meeting lasted six weeks, with 35 additions, and I have the names and addresses of 26 more who are members of Christian churches, and who expect to come into the organization. There are others who have grown so cold and indifferent that they do not consider themselves members, and still others who have placed their membership with the denominational churches. During the six weeks, it rained almost continually, and the tent blew down several times. ——The City Mission problem will be largely solved when our people realize, that, in order to enter a section of the city, it will be necessary to erect a splendid tabernacle building, for temporary use, such as the central church is now using, and the one that was erected where Brother Brooks is now holding a meeting at the very important field of Woodlawn.——There are now five congregations in the city of Portland, with a population of about 180,000. These churches will take an offering for city missions on the last Sunday in November, and it is hoped that at that time we will have a large offering, and plan for larger things in the city mission work.——The city mission committee held a meeting to-day, and decided that I should remain with, and take care of the young church at St. Johns, until a suitable man is secured for the work. It is the purpose of this board to plant a church, and to take care of it in every locality where a meeting is held this year. J. PERRY CONDER.

Victor Dorris at Springfield.

We have just closed at the West Side Christian Church, one of the most successful meetings ever held in Springfield, Ill., and, perhaps, the most successful ever held in the West Side Church. Of this we judge not by the number of accessions, of which there were eighty-one, but by the general impression made on the community and the church. However, when we take into consideration the fact that the church is located not among the unchurched masses, but among a people, with few exceptions, already churched, the results, in point of additions, were very satisfactory. These meetings were conducted by Victor W. Dorris, of Pendleton, Oregon, assisted by Chas. H. Altheide, of Bloomfield, Iowa, as director of music. Perhaps as high a compliment as I can pay Mr. Altheide would be to say that this was the third time within a year that he has been called to Springfield for such service, and the second time to the West Side Church.

Victor Dorris is quite well known, but as very little has appeared in print respecting his work here or elsewhere, I feel inclined to say a word. His work was all that could be desired. He believes that the plea made by the fathers is the plea for the twentieth century. He never hesitated to preach the whole truth of God with respect to the sin of divisions and necessity for Christian union I am quite sure that our pulpits would have a stronger hold upon the people to-day, and there would be less falling away after a great meeting, if sermons abounded more in instructions on the elementary principles of redemption. In this line of work Victor Dorris is a "professional"—that is, he knows the Book and preaches its doctrines with rare ability. Not a single sensational theme was announced throughout the entire series, yet the audiences were unparalleled in the history of the congregation. The West Side Church will be five years old January 1. In that time almost 700 have entered into the fellowship of the congregation. Our membership now is about 600. At present I am alone in our work in the city, but expect to be joined shortly by C. C. Sinclair, who comes to the Stuart Street Church December 2, and by Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Ky., who comes to the First Church January 1, 1907. F. M. ROGERS.

Paxton's Meeting.

The Paxton (Ill.) church has been a problem for years. I came here as pastor in January, 1905. A reorganization was necessary. We reorganized the following September. Since then the church has prospered. The church is now respected and we have a place in the city. On October 14 Bros. H. A. Davis and Frank Charlton came to assist us in a three weeks' meeting. Both are Christian gentlemen and capable. This is not a great field. More than half of the population is Swedish. The church is only a year from the old organization. All of these things prevented a large ingathering. The church was strengthened and spiritualized and we are now better understood in the city. Thirty-eight had been added at regular services during the year. Twenty-three were added during the meeting. Every department of the church was strengthened. The meeting closed with the largest audience and greatest service in the history of the church. Considering the field and the history of the church this was a great meeting.

"A True Revival."

We have just had a true revival of religion—the Christian religion—as the lamented L. B. Wilkes would say. Bro. H. D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, Kentucky, did the preaching. It is the universal opinion that his services were among the best ever heard in this town, where many able and distinguished men have preached. The pastors and many members of other churches joined in the services. The preaching, in thought, in spirit, and in expression, was all that could be desired. In fact the sermons were an education on many of the most vital themes of our holy religion. Just before the meeting began Mrs. Princess Long came and gave one of her inimitable recitals which did good like a revival meeting. It was our only regret that she could not remain and lead our singing after she had made such a deep and lasting impression. Seven choice spirits were received into the fellowship of the church during the meeting.

Why the Quarter-Century Christian Endeavor Memorial?

By William Shaw, Treasurer of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Because the object is a worthy one, and the United Society is entitled to it. I speak in no spirit of boasting, but with keen appreciation of the great things God hath wrought, and the small part men have had in the wonderful growth of Christian Endeavor.

Dr. Philip Schaff said on the platform of the great New York Christian Endeavor convention in 1892, "The historian of the nineteenth century will rank the Christian Endeavor movement as one of the greatest, if not the greatest movement in the history of the church."

Twenty-five years ago one society, to-day 67,800; then fifty members, to-day 3,500,000; then in one city, now in every country in the world; then in one denomination, now in sixty; then literature in one language, now in eighty; then in one church, now in scores of thousands of churches, missions, schools, hospitals, prisons, in the army and the navy, anywhere, everywhere that people need to know of the love of Christ.

Twenty-five years ago treated with distrust and suspicion, criticised and misunderstood; to-day praised by men high in affairs of church and state, at home and abroad, with a following as loyal as ever espoused a sacred cause.

These twenty-five years have witnessed the rallying of young men and women in unparalleled numbers in personal devotion to Christ and his church; in missionary work, both in going and giving (ten thousand societies in five years having given $2,187,000); in their interest in Christian citizenship, temperance and all moral reforms; in Christian fellowship, which is so marked a feature in the religious life of to-day, and in the promotion of international brotherhood among the young people of all nations.

During the years of theological unrest and readjustment through which our churches passed, and which witnessed great spiritual dearth and death, Christian Endeavor stood for faith in Christ and service for Christ, having confidence that if we would do his will, we should know of the doctrine.

It is giving to our churches, as fast as they make a place of service for them, young people trained to do things by doing them, trained in the church, for the church, and only outside the church when driven there by opposition or lack of sympathy and wise leadership.

As to the future, we count not ourselves to have already attained, but we press toward the mark.

For seventeen years the United Society has carried the burden of extending the movement in all parts of this country and largely around the world, without soliciting or receiving a dollar from any society or individual. With the ever-broadening work expenses have increased, and new doors of opportunity have been opened.

Shall the future be more full of blessing to the young people of the world than the past has been? Your answer will be measured by your contribution to the Quarter-Century Christian Endeavor Memorial Fund, which is to be invested in an international headquarters building as a memorial of our first twenty-five years. This is to be no useless monument to a man, but an added equipment for service to the movement, so that Christian Endeavor may do a still larger work for Christ, and the church of the future.

Every society should give its members a chance to contribute. Every friend of the young people should have a generous share in this fund. Millions are given for the training of young people in secular studies. Here is your chance to invest in the training of young people in all lands for all times in religious life and practical service.

Let men of means join with the young people in generous gifts, that the resources of the society may be equal to the demands made upon it, and that gratitude for the past may be expressed not simply in words but in deeds and dollars as well.

Georgia Notes.

Chas. E. Smith, state evangelist of South Carolina, writing from Wagner, says: "We recently organized a new congregation at Brunson with 29 charter members of the very best people of that thriving town. A tent meeting here at a brand new point with the finest interest and attention we ever had. It is too early to tell what can be done. There is not a 'Christian only' in the whole place, but the brethren come from Merritt's Bridge, ten to fifteen miles away." The report indicates that a denominational preacher there has misrepresented us.——Sectarianism in many places of our southland is still as far from the spirit of Christ as it is from the truth. Many sectarians have yet to learn that sectarianism does not make Christians and is not a part of Christianity. They thank God for divisions among God's people, but when preachers of another church go into their territory to establish a church they smell heresy and go about warning the people against "the new doctrine" and telling them to "stick to your bush" and let this "new thing" alone. But the truth told in love and practiced in daily life will prevail.——T. F. Jones, of Newman, sent me the money to renew his subscription and said: "I am well pleased with our new paper." Brother Jones knows a good thing when he sees it. The weekly visits of this great paper will prove a blessing to any home. "Southern Evangelist" readers will soon become attached to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and then the paper will come to our homes as a dear friend. In addition to the strong editorials and the news from many fields, the Sunday-school, prayer-meeting and Christian Endeavor come in for their share and assist us in these departments. Then if you try the Sunday-school literature gotten out by this paper, you will be perfectly delighted. So I consider that we are well fixed with our new paper and, like Brother Jones, I am well pleased with it. Convention news next week.

Oregon S. W. District Convention.

The first annual convention of the Southwest District of the O. C. M. C. has held a most enthusiastic series of services at Roseburg. Plans for the year were formulated and heartily endorsed. It is hoped a "Dollar League" may be formed in all the churches, the proceeds of which shall support an evangelist in the district, which comprises Douglas, Coos, Curry, Josephine and Jackson counties. Reports show a good missionary interest and excellent work done by the churches. Officers for the current year chosen, were: B. E. Youtz, Roseburg, superintendent; Clark Bower, Grant's Pass, vice-superintendent; Frank E. Alley, Roseburg, secretary and treasurer; F. E. Billington, our model corresponding-secretary; sister G. S. O. Humbert, C. W. B. M. president; and sister Clara G. Esson, Bible school superintendent. Each added greatly to the interest of the sessions by stirring addresses.

THE NEW TEXAS-CALIFORNIA. — The Gulf Coast and Rio Grande Valley of Texas is the most attractive region known to us for both the Home-Seeker and the Investor. It is the home of the Citrus fruits, English walnuts, Figs and Grapes. The truck-farmer puts his products on the market from four to six weeks earlier than from any other portion of the country. He is 1500 miles nearer to the great markets than California. Our organization is especially trying to interest members of the Christian Church, so that the settler will have the advantage of his accustomed religious influence. Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Prescott, Nov. 10.—Closed the best meeting the church ever had here, last Wednesday night, with ten additions.—Percy G. Cross.

Siloam Springs, Nov. 1.—Just closed a two and half weeks' meeting here with 30 baptisms. Charles D. Purlee is the minister. Edward O. Beyer had charge of the music. We go next to Broadway church, Pueblo, Col.—John W. Marshall.

California.

Ventura, Nov. 13.—Three additions last Lord's day. Work growing nicely.—Dan Trundle.

San Francisco, Nov. 12.—One by baptism and 4 by statement and letter the past week. Our opportunity here at West Side is appallingly great. Growth in all things increasing.—Robert Lord Cave.

Colorado.

Salida, Nov. 12.—Six added yesterday—5 baptisms; 83 in last three and one-half weeks.—W. B. Crewdson.

Illinois.

Greenville, Oct. 29.—Two additions at regular services yesterday.—Tally Defrees.

Maroa, Nov. 15.—Two baptized last night. Two added by letter recently.—W. H. Applegate.

Berlin, Nov. 13.—Meeting of three weeks closed last night. Nineteen additions. J. T. H. Stewart, Georgetown, Ill., helped nine days.—J. W. Bolton.

Rossville, Nov. 16.—One addition last Sunday. We are preparing for a meeting in February. Mrs. J. E. Powell will assist as singing evangelist.—William Grant Smith.

Alton, Nov. 16.—One addition by letter last Sunday night, one by statement two weeks ago. The attendance is growing with each service.—G. Washington Wise.

Nebo, Nov. 6.—Closed a two-weeks meeting here with 10 additions—9 baptisms and 1 restored. This is a good, loyal people but they need a minister.—J. D. Williams.

Waynesville, Nov. 12.—Fourteen added here in first week of meeting with J. A. Barnett, of Freeport, as evangelist, and Miss Manie Bowles, of Ernden, as leader of song.—J. F. Smith, pastor.

Lincoln, Nov. 16.—William J. Lockhart and W. E. M. Hackleman have just closed a four-weeks meeting here which brought 76 people into the church—53 were by confession. Following so close upon the great meeting of Wilson and Lintt, our people regard this as another great victory.—W. H. Cannon.

Barry.—Closed a three-weeks meeting at Barry November 11. J. D. Dabney of Pittsburg, Pa., did the preaching. There were 23 additions—21 baptisms. This makes 58 additions since the beginning of the year—45 baptisms.—C. B. Dabney, pastor.

Allendale, Nov. 12.—A most excellent meeting of two weeks closed here last night, with 23 added, and the church greatly revived. J. W. Kilborn, minister at Mt. Carmel, Ill., did the preaching. We have now the strongest church in town, and we have resolved to go forward to greater victories.—W. B. Morris, minister.

Charleston, Nov. 14.—Evangelists Davis and Charlton are in a good meeting with the First Christian Church here. Six additions to date. Prospects bright.—George H. Brown, pastor.

Irving, Nov. 12.—Closed a nineteen-days meeting with J. A. Mason, pastor, at Pleasant Hill, a country church in Edgar county, with 57 added—37 by confession and baptism and 20 by letter and restoration.—L. Hadaway.

Indiana.

Atlanta, Oct. 29.—Four added.—E. D. Long.

Driftwood, Nov. 9.—Closed a nineteen-days meeting at this place last Sunday night, resulting in 19 additions, all by baptism except one.—Addison Willard Crabb.

Indianapolis, Nov. 15.—There have been 101 added in our meeting at the Sixth Church. Brother McLean is the evangelist. A. L. Orcutt is the minister.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Wabash, Nov. 15.—I recently closed a short meeting at Lizton, Ind. There were 7 accessions—6 by confession and baptism and 1 from another religious body. Brother Alford is the pastor.—L. L. Carpenter.

Salem, Nov. 15.—The church at Salem has recently enjoyed a great meeting conducted by Evangelist J. V. Coombs and J. Walter Wilson. There were sixty-nine accessions to the church.—W. Y. Allen.

Flora, Nov. 11.—Closed a three-weeks meeting with home forces, which resulted in 11 additions—5 by confession and baptism, 4 by letter, and 2 from other religious bodies. Church is left in fine condition.—A. B. Houze.

Indian Territory.

Tulsa, Nov. 12.—Two additions by letter and 2 by baptism yesterday.—Randolph Cook.

Sapulpa, Nov. 16.—Two additions since last report. All departments of the work in splendid condition.—A. M. Harral.

Miami.—John A. Brown, of Moline, Kan., conducted a sixteen days' meeting, which resulted in 23 additions.—Thomas J. Giddens, Oswego, Kan.

Iowa.

Richland, Nov. 6.—We are just beginning a meeting here. Frank Robey, of Drake University, is assisting in the singing and personal work. We go to Kentucky for our next meeting.—Lawrence Wright.

Des Moines, Nov. 12.—We are in a meeting now seven days old, the local minister conducting. Frank A. Wilkinson leads the singing. Ten additions to date, with many interested.—F. D. Macy.

Mount Pleasant, Nov. 17.—Large and enthusiastic audiences every evening. G. P. Lintt, evangelistic singer, of Lincoln, Neb., is assisting. Additions at nearly every service. Will continue one or two weeks longer.—L. A. Chapman.

Prairie City, Nov. 15.—W. E. Pitcher, of Blockton, Ia., assisted us in a three-weeks meeting, which closed last night, resulting in 19 additions—13 by baptism and 6 by statement. There had been 7 additions— 2 by baptism—before the meeting, not reported.—C. H. Strawn.

North English, Nov. 15.—We closed a very successful three-weeks meeting at our country church, White Pigeon, on November 11, with 12 additions—11 by confession and baptism. The pastor did the preaching and was assisted by Mrs. J. H. Davis, of Oskaloosa, Ia., as leader of song.—J. C. Hanna, pastor.

Kansas.

Hoisington, Nov. 12.—Three made the good confession November 11. Two of them were baptized.—F. M. McHale.

Wonsevn.—Closed my meeting with a crowded house. Four confessions, three baptized.—J. M. Cockrill.

Peru, Nov. 12.—Meeting here starts well, with large audiences, and the best of attention. Fourteen additions the first week. F. M. O'Neal and wife, of Springfield, Mo., are leading the singing.—J. P. Haner, evangelist.

Arkansas City, Nov. 12.—Great meeting in progress. Twelve added yesterday, 94 in seventeen days. Crowds every night. J. B. Boen is the evangelist.—M. Lee Sorey, minister.

Halstead, Nov. 12.—Began meeting here yesterday. Preparations perfect. H. W. Nicholson is the minister. Great audiences to start with.—M. B. Ingle, evangelist.

Kentucky.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

November 28, 1906.

THANKSGIVING AND SERVICE.—Ps. 116:12-19.

"What shall I render to my God
For all his kindness shown?
My feet shall visit thine abode,
My songs address thy throne.

"Among the saints that fill thy house,
My offerings shall be paid;
There shall my zeal perform the vows
My soul in anguish made.

"How happy all thy servants are,
How great thy grace to me!
My life, which thou hast made thy care,
Lord, I devote to thee."

One of the highest and most acceptable forms of service we can render to God is the dedication of ourselves to him—sanctified from sin and by education, culture and training nobly equipped for helping him usher in an age-long era of the ought to be. This ideal is fondly submitted to the prayerful consideration of all, and especially of our youth who may have decades of life to give him.

There is no thanksgiving apart from service. All that made worship of David's protestations of love for God and his frequent recitals of the Lord's goodness to him was their harmony with his love for God expressed by his earnestly striving to better the condition of Israel, to make of the people loyal and happy sons and daughters of the great King and to exemplify in his own life the dignity and grace of "a friend of God."

Brethren, it is not a question to-night of what returns China and Japan ought to make unto Jehovah for the emancipation from the furies of superstition he is marvelously effecting in them; of what our neighbor ought to give and do for the grace bestowed on them, nor of what we intend sometime to be for our own life-long blessings, but of what we shall do and give and be right now and henceforth. The summer is passing, soon harvest will be ended, the night is at hand and for us all is done or will be left forever undone.

The drops of praise we would have wafted up to God to-morrow are not sufficient returns for the great rivers of mercy everywhere flowing around us. Because of the great abundance of his kindnesses to us we ought to do infinitely more than we have to inaugurate his kingdom and make all our Father's children happy. Hezekiah's condemnation was that he returned not unto the Lord according to the kindness done unto him. Were we to stand in our houses and throw stones at the old king, doubtless we would hear the glass shiver.

Have we all done what we could to give all a generous share in the present era of material prosperity obtaining in our country? Land owners, money lenders, artisans, tradesmen, miners, railroad employes and all these crafts and clans are reveling in abundance. Little, if anything, has been done, however, to increase the compensation of clerks, land tenants, ministers, teachers, stenographers, house servants and unskilled laborers. Here is a new challenge to chivalry. It is ours to create a sentiment and to precipitate action that will result in a fairer distribution of the milk and honey with which our land is overflowing.

Millions of people will to-morrow rejoice in the amenities of home-coming and family reunions with their retold vows of love and helpfulness along the pilgrimage of life. Many will not pause to thank the Founder of homes and the Preserver of their sanctities. Such homes as America knows are the direct gift of God through the church. But thanks to him for our homes and all the sweet privileges with which they are freighted will rise no higher than our roof tree unless we earnestly labor for the extension of a home-founding Christianity throughout the earth, and unless we try to make of every earthly home a beautiful type of the heavenly home beyond.

"What shall I do to gain eternal life?
Discharge aright
The simple dues with which each day is rife?
Yea with thy might.
Ere perfect scheme of action thou devise,
Will life be fled,
While he who ever acts as conscience cries
Shall live, though dead.—Schiller.

Fear is not necessarily ignoble. To fear God is one of the surest prophecies of glory and immortality. This fear really overcomes cowardice of men and evil spirits, of death and the grave, of resurrection and the judgment.

Courage is a higher quality than fearlessness. One soldier noticing another's blanched face, contemptuously said, "you must be afraid." "Yes," was the reply. "If you were as afraid as I, you would run away." Courage is that expression of nobility that holds one to his post and his principles in spite of his fears.

The writer once caught a bucket swinging from a windlass and was lowered hundreds of feet into a Cripple Creek mine for fear the miners would regard him as a very "tender foot" indeed. He manifested no bravery—simply indicated his lesser fear. It often requires more courage to descend than to rise, to sit than to stand, withhold than to give, to be silent than to speak, to retreat than to battle, to live than to die.

Joshua and Caleb were not blinded to the giants or other physical difficulties in the way of the conquest of Canaan, but they knew the Lord was mightier than they all. This sentiment made them invincible. If the Lord delight in us then will he bring us into this land which floweth with milk and honey. Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land; their defense is departed from them and the Lord is with us; fear them not. They may have shuddered at thought of the struggle and carnage, but that moral courage born of unfaltering trust enabled them to see Israel prosperous, happy and the religious light of the world after the ordeal was over and the victory won.

The pioneer who surrenders his just claim because lacking in physical powers or courage to hold it against the intrusions of others is not nearly so cowardly as the man who will equivocate or dissemble and thus relinquish a high moral or spiritual estate because the latter has more appealing to him to be brave, he ignobly surrenders infinitely more, he is the greater traitor to right and God.

Just to the extent of one's cowardice goes his practical atheism. Elisha's miracle of opening the eyes of his servant to the vision of a mountain full of horses and chariots was performed for his followers once for all by our Savior on the cross. Now, all who will may see "God with us." Who can fear while marching beside the chariot of the Lord? The visions coming to us in earnest prayer will do far more to overcome our fears than gymnasiums, armories or diplomacy.

JESUS BEFORE PILATE.—Luke 23:13-25.

Memory verses, 20, 21.

Golden Text.—Then said Pilate . . I find no fault in this man. Luke 23:4.

John tells us (18:28) that the mob which conveyed Jesus from the court of the high priest to the palace of Pilate "entered not into the palace, that they might not be defiled." Never was there a clearer contrast between real and ceremonial defilement. To enter the house of a Gentile would be a breach of the law of purity. To shed innocent blood was a matter of small concern.

Observe that the accusation before Pilate is quite different from the charge which was made against Jesus in the presence of the Jewish authorities. Then it was blasphemy; now it was treason. Before the Roman authorities it was necessary to have an accusation which would appeal to a Roman. Pilate would care little what Jesus had said about the temple. But the chief anxiety of a Roman governor was to keep the peace and prevent insurrection. So the accusers brought two charges: First, this man is a disturber of the peace; second, he claims to be a king and so wins away the loyalty of the people from Caesar.

Judea had always been a restless and turbulent province. The first charge was well calculated to arouse the fears of Pilate. It would have been a good charge if they could only have proved it. But even Pilate saw at once that it was a mere pretext. The second charge was equally transparent. Pilate saw that, whatever Jesus might say about being a king, he meant nothing prejudicial to Caesar's sovereignty. The accusation fell flat on both counts. The verdict was "Nothing worthy of death has been done by him."

Pilate's effort to escape responsibility was pathetic. He sent Jesus to Herod, but Herod, though appreciating the compliment, also shunned the responsibility and sent him back. He offered the release of Jesus or Barrabas. He suggested that he would scourge Jesus to satisfy the passions of the mob and then release him to satisfy his own sense of justice. But no argument or device could avail against the wild cry, "crucify him."

The weak magistrate gave way to the mob. He did not even profess to pass sentence upon Jesus, but in giving him up to be crucified he passed judgment upon himself. So does every one who answers the question, "What shall I do with Jesus?" It is still a question of life and death—not now the life or death of Jesus, but of the one who answers the question.

Who Are the Fathers?

I don't understand this paper racket over "Our Fathers." Who are they, that we should walk in their shoes? Shoes don't grow; feet do. I loved the good old pioneers of the Reformation, but their shoes don't fit. Let us go back to the apostles for "Our Fathers" and shape our feet to fit their shoes. Let us change your paraphrase of Kipling.

> Plea of our faith, our hope, our love,
> For whose dear sake the Apostles strove;
> O blessed Christ, we pledge to thee
> Head, heart and hand through years to be.

X. Y. Z.

[Our fathers in this Reformation had for their plea the restoration of apostolic teaching. We are safe in following them as they followed Christ, but no farther. The revised paraphrase is all right, but it means only what the paraphrase means. —Editor.]

Some Points and Questions.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Can a man have a Christian character and not be a Christian? All will agree that he may have a Christian character and not be a Catholic, or not be an Episcopalian, or Presbyterian, or Methodist, or Baptist, or Disciple with a big D. But I affirm that every man who has a Christian character is a Christian. To be a Christian is to be Christed. A living faith in a saving Christ is the essential factor in a Christian character. A man may have a religious character and not be a Christian. This was the case with Cornelius. But Cornelius had no Christian character. He knew nothing of Christ as the Savior of man. When Peter set Christ before Cornelius as his Savior and Cornelius accepted him as such then Cornelius was Christed—made a Christian. Faith in the Son of God as the Savior of the soul transforms a man's ideas, transfigures his character, makes him a new creature—a Christian. If a man has not this faith—this character—we do not baptize him. Baptism does not give character to a man. It is the expression of a character already formed. This use of the expression "Christian character" does not convey the idea in its highest form. It requires time and experience, service and sacrifice, self-denial and suffering to produce Christian character in its nobler types. The thousands of men and women who have never been baptized and yet who have for long years been giving themselves faithfully in service to the Lord Jesus Christ, whose lives are influenced, guided and dominated by him, and whose characters are permeated by the Christ idea—are they not Christian?

Is a man a Christian who is not "in Christ?"

The phrase "in Christ" does not mean in his person. My body does not enter the body of Christ literally, nor my spirit enter his spirit. To be "in Christ" is to be under his influence as a leader, under his reign as Lord, under his dominion as Savior. No man is a Christian who is not thus "in Christ." Every man is a Christian who is thus in Christ.

In order to get in Christ is it necessary to be "baptized into Christ?"

In order to get into Christ formally or ceremonially it is necessary to be "baptized into Christ." In order to get into Christ really and spiritually it is not necessary to be baptized, since you cannot be Scripturally baptized until you have first entered into him spiritually and really. And when a man enters into Christ spiritually he "puts on Christ" spiritually. When he enters into Christ ceremonially he "puts on Christ" ceremonially.

The Israelites "were all baptized into Moses in the cloud and in the sea." But they had already entered into Moses by faith, and had placed themselves under his leadership and followed him from Egypt to the Red Sea.

Is a man a Christian who is not in the kingdom of God? A man becomes a Christian and enters the spiritual kingdom of God simultaneously. The penitent believer is "begotten of God," if begotten of God he is God's child and hence in God's spiritual family or kingdom.

Can a man enter into the kingdom of God except he be born of water and the Spirit?

He can not enter the Kingdom of God on earth, the Church of Christ without being baptized or born of water. But he cannot be thus born of water until he has first been begotten of the Holy Spirit and been made a child of God.

Will I take an unbaptized person with a Christian character into the local church for which I preach?

I will not. Why? I am committed to the work of restoring apostolic Christianity to the world in doctrine, ordinances and life. The primitive church was composed of immersed believers. I could not bear my testimony to the truth nor be faithful to our restoration movement by endorsing a different course. I will recognize every man who has a Christian character as a Christian, will co-operate with him to the extent of my ability, and thus seek to win him by love that I may teach him the way of the Lord more perfectly.

Liberty, Mo. A. B. Jones.

P. S.—The expression "baptized into (eis) Christ" occurs, I think, but once in the New Testament, while the phrase "believe into (eis) Christ," occurs about twenty-five times. And yet some men can never see how it is possible to get into Christ except through baptism. A. B. J.

Prayer.

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of. Wherefore let thy voice
Rise like a fountain for me night and day,
For what are men better than sheep and goats,
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer,
Both for themselves, and those who call them friend?
For so, the whole round world is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

PART IV.

CHAPTER VI.

Having left the pawnshop once owned by Miss Pinns while nominally under the ownership of Uncle William Hodges, Raymund wandered down one street and up another without much perception of his surroundings. A thought, strange, new but as yet not very pronounced, was beginning to take possession of him. He felt the need of being entirely alone; therefore he shrank from the idea of returning to Frog Bend. In his present disturbed state of mind he shuddered at the prospect of facing the inquisitive Mr. Willby. He shrank still more from meeting Rhoda. When he had last seen her he had believed her to be his sister; now he knew the truth and knew that she knew. He shrank most of all from learning what name was engraven upon the bronze vase. Either he was Mrs. Revore's son or he was a millionaire. He hesitated to know which. Could money compensate him for the loss of a mother? And if it proved that Rhoda was the heiress, would not the knowledge that Mrs. Revore was of no relationship, embitter her prosperity? Still, he had no right to maintain the secret. But for a while it might lie hidden—it had been hidden so many years. And what Raymund desired was time—time to think it over, to get used to the perplexing situation.

He found himself once more trudging along Washington avenue before the lodging house where his father had died. He came to the vacant lot where Wizzen had encamped with Mrs. Weed. He sat down upon the mouth of the crater, as it were, and gazed down upon the hollowed scene whose life had grown extinct. In yonder cavity had stood the old moving-wagon and the aged horses had been tethered in that distant frowsy growth of discouraged city weeds. It was curious how the young man's heart warmed as he thought of the dusty white-covered wagon and the listless attitude of the jaw-drooping horses. And Wizzen with his prodigal use of "which" and his manner of peering up from under his gazed cap—and old Mrs. Weed with her unerring gift of seizing the idea by the wrong word, and, as it were, seeking to force into its spiritual mouth a philological bit that never fitted—how Raymunud would have rejoiced to see these simple friends again—to see any one, indeed in that desolate city with a kindly face. But no; Wizzen was gone, Mrs. Weed was gone. Rhoda was not only far removed in space, but had even ceased to be a sister. The coal soot like lazy snow in mourning, floated down upon him from the upper air. Beyond the concave vacant lot was the rear of various tenement houses, and from every porch and balcony swung lines of washing with a bold red obtrusiveness of nethermost garments. Raymund rose with a sigh and turned his back upon the scene. The hoarse-throated call of steamboats reminded him of the houseboat bearing his friends down to New Orleans. What had become of them?

At last Raymund had made his plans. He would not go to Frog Bend. He did not wish to meet Rhoda till he had thought and thought and thought. Kansas City naturally occurred to him. In that little back room on the third floor of Mrs. Bannerton's lodgings on thirteenth street, he could be absolutely alone. Jack had gone to Frog Bend for his vacation. Mrs. De Fer, now the wife of the Columbia professor, had sailed for France. There would be no one to disturb his solitude. Raymund accordingly took the train for Kansas City.

Mrs. Bannerton was naturally surprised to see her "roomer" as she had understood his intention was to stay away all summer; but she was always more glad than surprised to see her old friend. Raymund took possession of his room with a certain snug feeling of satisfaction. It was no longer necessary to hump himself over a coal oil stove, pretending to be "warm enough." The weather was his stove now, and warmed him above the degrees of ease.

It was about six o'clock on the fourth day of his return to Kansas City and his resumption of the little rear room, that he heard a footstep on the stair that caused him to sit up in sudden surprise—he had been lying upon the side of the bed in abstracted thought. Suddenly the door was flung open and Jack Bellfield entered breezily.

"Why, hey there, Ray," cried Jack with a grin, "haven't got over the evil habit of lying on your bed in the daytime, I see. Tut, tut!" Jack flug himself upon the bed and added, "We got your letter telling us you'd been to St. Louis and would have to stay a week here in town. What's up?"

"I have been busy," said Raymund.

"You look like you've been working hard," said Jack with a critical glance. "When did you eat last?"

"I—I don't know," said Raymund. "I haven't thought much about it. Don't you know, the little necessary acts and parts of life—eating and sleeping, you know—the links that hold the main parts together—oh, all that is a weariness!"

"You get weary without 'em," Jack commented. "Say, fellow, you are pale and thin and look like you've had a sickness. It's six o'clock and I'm hungry. Now you don't seem very communicative, but I'll tell you about me. Nelsie Loraine is visiting here for a few days, and I'm to take her to the opera house to-morrow night. And I'm to call around there to-night; and day after to-morrow, I'm to go with her to Westport to a sort of automobile meet. And the next day—by that time I calculate all my money will be spent—I'm to creep home to Frog Bend. Will you be ready to come home, by that time?"

"Yes," said Raymund listlessly, "I suppose so."

"Then we'll just batch here in the meantime as of old, hey? I'll go out and rustle us some provender."

Jack went out and Raymund flung himself upon the bed. Again his thoughts went back to this new light in which he stood to Rhoda. He was thinking of Rhoda when Jack returned. It was natural for him to ask about her.

"Awfully worried," said Jack, as he deposited various packages on the bed and washstand. "She can't imagine why you should streak off to St. Louis without a word. No more can I, but I'm not curious. Nelsie Loraine gives me all I can think about. I'm in love, that's what I am. Look out, fellow, that's pickles; don't tip it up that way. Do you want the bed floating in vinegar? Say! Don't roll on those bananas. They are soft. She's certainly the prettiest girl I ever saw in all my life. Now, I throw that out as a challenge. Pick up the glove. Did you ever know a prettier girl?"

"I never did," said Raymund promptly.

"And why?" cried Jack as he poured a bottle of cream into a tin pan and stirred in two heaping teaspoons of cocoa, "because they're not on the earth. That package you are trying to work up your trouser leg, is the sugar. Heave it over this way."

Jack stirred the sugar into the mixture of cream and cocoa, then lit the gas. He had made a wire frame which fitted upon the burner, just large enough for the tin pan, by the nicest of balancing, to rest upon it. When the cocoa was thus placed, Jack stood upon a chair in order to seize the pan the moment it began to boil. He looked down upon Raymunud as the latter still moved restlessly upon the coverlet. "Ray," he said, "is it anything I can help?"

"No," said Raymund, dejectedly.

"All right, I'll not refer to it again," said Jack Bellfield. "Get out the crackers while I'm watching this cocoa, will you? Have you forgotten the old tricks? Pull out the wash-stand drawer and push it slightly in, upside down, for our table. Draw the bed around for our banqueting-bench. Unroll that smelly stuff; it's halibut."

"What! halibut?" cried Raymund with memory of other days and other halibut, "thank you, none for me."

"I guess you will," said Jack. "It's bought now—I didn't know how rank it was till I'd paid for it. We can't afford

American Standard Bible

Edited by the American Revision Committee

Why the Best?

Because it is the most accurate translation of the Scriptures in existence.

Because it is the work of the best American scholarship, and has all the accumulated wisdom and knowledge of the world since the publication of the King James Version in 1611.

Because many authentic and valuable manuscripts of the Bible have been discovered since 1611, and these were available for use by the American Revision Committee.

to throw it away. We'll have to eat it to save it."

"Everything has its limit," said Raymund, "and the limit of economy is spoilt fish."

"It's not really spoilt," said Jack, "And we buy no more meat till this is eaten."

"And I eat no more, till more is bought!" Raymund declared.

Jack grinned at him and remarked, "I see all you've needed was for me to come to get you out of the dumps." Then he turned off the gas, bore the boiling cocoa to the upturned washstand drawer, and seated himself upon the banqueting bench. Cocoa was their first course, taken with bananas and crackers. Next followed halibut, in its dry or raw state, partaken of by Jack with bated breath and considerable rapidity.

"Now," he said, pushing the remainder of the odorous fish under the bed, "I've saved quite a hunk; I hope to dispatch the rest at supper, if you will lend a hand. If not, it goes into our breakfast, too, for the sooner it's done with the better for us and it, too. It's decomposing fast, but I think I can beat it to the goal. Now for our dessert."

The dessert consisted of a mixture of cream, raisens, pecan-kernels, a chopped-up orange, and two bananas, all stirred together in the water-pitcher. This was evenly portioned out in a couple of large pickle-jars and partaken of with much relish by Jack and with dawning interest in life on the part of Raymund. When the dishes, that is to say the jars, tins, and various lids of cans, and two tin spoons had been cleaned, it was growing dark. They repaired to their balcony, that is to say, the fire-escape. Seated upon newspapers, they swung their legs at the dizzy height, with nothing between them and the basement-ground, four stories below, but a few airy fairy bars of iron. Jack did his utmost to hearten up his friend and Raymund for a time put his new cares from him. On the other side of the basement-yard fence, a pug dog issued from the adjoining house —that house behind which Boggs had once alarmed Raymund. The pug caught sight of the two figures perched upon the fire-escape where no man, by his experience should be. He instantly burst forth into vociferous barking, rolling his eyes at them and pawing the ground in impotent wrath.

"Let's throw him the halibut," said Raymund slyly. "Let's make him madder."

"Ray," said Jack, "that's an inspiration!" And until time for Jack to go to see Nelsie Loraine they sat like children, throwing bits of fish at the dog, who would eat none of it. As Jack departed, after considerable primping, he said, "What do you say to coming along, Ray? Nelsie Loraine won't care, and your glumness will be a very effective foil to my high spirits." Raymund declined the part, and Jack went down stairs humming gayly—"Tell me pretty maiden, are there any more at home like you?"

But in reality, Raymund's thoughts were by no means glum. Because during the next four days he often seemed to Jack as solemn as a judge, was often abstracted, lost to the world, would hear his friend read a squib from the Kansas City Star with an unmoved countenance, therefore Jack imagined him melancholy. But it was not the sadness of his new reflections, it was their strangeness that affected Raymund. In the late afternoon his favorite walk was along the Passeo. He would sit for half an hour on the edge of the fountain staring at the circling water. He would lean over the high parapet, gazing down upon those passing below till a touch upon his shoulder was needed to bring him to the consciousness of city sounds.

The time came at last for Jack to return to Frog Bend.

"Yes, I am ready," said Raymund. "I will go with you." There was a new note in his voice. The clouds seemed suddenly to have vanished from his face.

"See here, fellow," said Jack, "you told me when I came to town that you were busy. But all the time I've been here, you haven't done a thing."

"That's where you're wrong," Raymund smiled with his old-time ease. "I've done a great work. I've come to a decision that will influence all my life—and Rhoda's." He smiled strangely.

"Well, I've done a good work, too," said Jack. "I'll tell you," he added joyously. "It's a secret, but you're my one friend, you know."

"I can guess," said Raymund. "And so yet get Nelsie Loraine? Strange how things come about!"

"Why don't you shake hands with me?" demanded Jack, suddenly. "Your thoughts never drifted that way, did they?"

"Perhaps when I was a boy," Raymund confessed. "But that ended long ago, one cold Christmas morning. No, indeed. I didn't shake hands, because I was thinking of—"

"Go ahead. Don't spare my feelings."

"Of the mother-in-law you are about to get. Not that I, myself, have any illwill toward that estimable Leader, but—"

Jack made a dive at him and Raymund nimbly fled to the fire-escape.

When the late Commodore Foote was in Spain, he had upon one occasion the king on board his vessel as a guest. Like a Christian man, as he was, he did not hesitate in the royal presence to ask a blessing as the guests took their places at the table. "Why, that is just as the missionaries do," remarked the king, with some surprise. "Yes," answered the sailor, "and I am a missionary, too."

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

COSTS NOTHING TO TRY.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy.

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

The Pangs of Misprized Love.

BY MARY BARRETT HOWARD.

Mary Elizabeth, her feet bare, her frock torn and soiled, was tilting on the branch of an apple tree, the guest of Katrinka Knauber, the naughtiest little girl in town. Her costume and the hour—three o'clock in the afternoon—proclaimed her an exile from polite society, for although in that quiet village children of "the best families" were permitted during the morning hours to revel, unshod and unkempt in mud pies and tree-climbing, it was an unwritten law that at the approach of the sun's meridian they should submit themselves to the ministrations of the grownups, and appear for the remainder of the day in the garments of civilization.

But on this particular day, Mary Elizabeth, for the first time in her seven years of life was suffering the pangs of slighted love. Early that morning Nellie Ingraham, her most "intimate friend," had run across the street to impart the momentous fact that Chauncey Olcott, a hitherto loyal bondsman of Mary Elizabeth, had invited her, Nellie, to accompany him that afternoon to the village pharmacy, there to partake from a white marble soda fount of the delights of "strawberry and vanilla mixed."

Therefore had Mary forfeited her favorite dinner of broiled chicken, green peas and strawberry shortcake, and fled to the forbidden society of Katrinka Knauber; and in the desperate attempt to forget her wrongs she had, with the able assistance of that cheerful young outcast, been indulging in a perfect orgie of mischief.

Katrinka, frowned upon by mothers on account of an inexhaustible capacity for inventing original and unforgivable pranks, had her good points. She was a warm partisan, and her forcibly expressed sympathy and indignation were sweet to Mary Elizabeth's sore heart.

She was generous too, and when after some hours of lawless wanderings the two little Ishmaelites returned to the shabby, tumble-down habitation that Katrinka called home, she insisted on sharing her own small portion of the family's repast of bread and molasses.

Mary Elizabeth was fond of this delicacy, chiefly because it formed no part of her accustomed menu, and in the enjoyment thereof she had almost forgotten her troubles, when glancing down from her lofty perch she espied her perfidious friend mincing up the street arrayed in her best pink muslin frock and a triumphant smile. By her side, O, woeful sight! marched Chauncey Olcott, holding a diminutive pink parasol above Nellie, with an air of devotion that caused Mary Elizabeth to sink back among the apple blossoms in a state of collapse. Throwing her arms about the great tree she hid her face against the rough bark and sobbed so piteously that the alarmed Katrinka was at her wit's end to comfort her.

A sudden grunting from the pigsty below suggested to Katrinka a new idea.

"If you cry no more, Mary Elizabeth," she besought, "I vill gif you von of dose leetle pigs vor your own."

Like a flash Mary Elizabeth was out of the tree and down on her knees in the rivulets of water that meandered through the muddy pen, her tears dried as if by magic. For Mary Elizabeth adored all dumb creatures, and the difficult task of deciding between ten little piglets, each more beautiful than the other, entirely banished her grievance from her mind.

"I tank you better vash him bevore you dake him home," recommended Katrinka, sagely.

Mary Elizabeth was embracing her newly acquired treasure with reckless fervor, but she acknowledged the soundness of Katrinka's advice, and notwithstanding piggy's protesting squeals he was held under the pump and thoroughly cleansed with the help of a scrubbing brush and soap surreptitiously obtained from the Knauber kitchen.

With her eyes shining like twin stars, Mary Elizabeth departed with the now snowy piglet under her arm. She did not trouble herself to imagine what Mrs. Knauber's feelings might be when she discovered that her too-generous daughter had given away one of the useful animals that formed the widow's chief means of support.

For some reason Mary Elizabeth deemed it wise to reconnoiter when she arrived at her own gate instead of rushing into the house in her usual impetuous fashion. Finding the coast clear, she stole quietly up the stairway to her own pretty room, and turning back the coverlets of her dainty white bed, she laid piggy to rest therein. Fearing that he might be chilly after his unaccustomed ablutions she went to her mother's wardrobe and confiscating a shawl of pale blue Canton crape, she proceeded to wrap it about her porcine prize until only a pink nose emerged from its folds.

When Master Piggy was worn out with his struggles, or whether he really appreciated the luxury of a soft clean bed will never be known, but certain it is that instead of attempting to escape he laid his head on the pillow as one who would say, "Leave, ah, leave me to repose."

Mary Elizabeth was unable to tear herself away from this entrancing pet. Dragging a chair to the bedside she began to sing, softly:

Hush, my babe, lie still annd slumber,
Holy angels guard thy bed,
Heavenly blessings without number,
Gently falling on thy head.

Pretty red-haired Noah had been delegated to seek for the wanderer and had just completed a leisurely toilet, for it being the custom of Mary Elizabeth to "go traipsing off to goodness knows where," every time the world went awry with her, the family had felt no great anxiety when she did not appear at dinner.

Now as Noah stood before her glass she heard the voice of Mary Elizabeth chanting good Dr. Watts' cradle hymn. Hastening toward the sound she stood transfixed on the threshold of Mary Elizabeth's room. A shriek of housemaid stridency brought every member of the household to the spot where Mary Elizabeth was vigorously defying Noah's attempts to remove the uncanny occupant of the bed, and a chorus of shocked exclamations arose.

"O, Mary Elizabeth—your lovely white bed! My best shawl!" wailed her mother.

"Of all the quare, outragious childer iver I seen, Mary Elizabeth bates Baniger," muttered Katy the cook, crossly.

"Where did you obtain the creature, child?" demanded her grandfather, adjusting his glasses with a judicial air.

"Katrinka Knauber gave him to me," the culprit faltered.

"Was it hers to give?"

"I—I don't know," Mary Elizabeth confessed.

"Don't you know that it belonged to her mother and you took it without her permission, that you practically committed a theft?" pursued Mr. Courtenay Owen with unprecedented severity.

"Yes, Mary Elizabeth, there isn't a cent's worth to choose between you and

J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

"Tom, Tom the piper's son,'" agreed her father, frivolously.

Then Mary Elizabeth turned at bay, and in one impressive burst of oratory she chanted of her false friend, faithless vassal and heartless family.

"There doesn't a single person love me in all this world," she ended, tearfully, "and I can't even have a pig to comfort me."

She threw herself on the bed, clasping her one solace frantically to her heart. The expression of the faces about her changed with ludicrous swiftness.

"Come now, alannah," coaxed old Katy, "don't yez be failin' so bad. Sure an' I'll bake ye an illigant big little cakeen if yez'll take the little pig back to his mother who loikely be scratchin' fer him this same minyut."

"Faix, an' there's no nade to be tillin' the poor child such romances," broke in Norah, wrathfully, "sure an' it's me that'll be havin' the trouble of kapin' that crathur up here, but it's not me that ud be brakin' her heart deprivin' her of it."

"Norah may go over and purchase the little animal," conceded Mr. Owen hastily, slipping a silver dollar into the housemaid's hand, "and if your parents are unwilling that it should remain here"—

"She may keep it—of course she may," coaxed Mrs. Carr, vainly endeavoring to kiss the cheek hidden in a tangle of sunny curls, "only, darling, don't you think piggy would be happier in a nice little pen in the barn-yard?"

"Undoubtedly he would," interposed Mr. Carr, briskly. "Come, Mary Elizabeth, we'll go tell Peter where to build a pen, and then we'll have up the horses and drive to Fairview for some soda."

Mary Elizabeth's sobs ceased. Perhaps piggy would be happier out there in the warm sunlight. Moreover the soda water at Fairview was of a superior sort, much better than anything her native town could produce. She sat up and brushed aside her tangled curls.

"Will you go too, Grandfather?" she demanded.

It was the hour for the arrival of Mr. Owen's Tribune, and he loathed the sickish sweetness of the beverage which his prophetic soul warned him the small tyrant would require him to drink copiously, but he replied, with hesitation,

"Most assuredly, dear child, if you wish me to do so."

Later, Mary Elizabeth sat enthroned in the old-fashioned "two-seater" enjoying the honor of driving, when two familar figures appeared in the distance. She stiffened perceptibly at the sight, and as they met she bowed in the manner of a justly offended princess.

Pink-frocked Nellie Ingraham was swinging her brief skirts with an air of smug satisfaction, but her escort was looking unmistakably bored, for Nellie's society seemed unutterably vapid to a boy who had delighted in the infinite variety of Mary Elizabeth. That he had slighted and grieved her to whom his inmost soul gave allegiance was merely an ebullition of "the eternal masculine" with its fondness for roving, its dislike of even silken fetters.

"Papa," questioned Mary Elizabeth after a solemn pause, "don't you think it is very much pleasanter for a little girl to be tooken by her own folks to get soda than to go with just a boy?"

"I do indeed," responded her father, giving Mary Elizabeth a great hug.

But the next instant she was leaning out of her carriage.

"Mamma," she said with a wistful look in her brown eyes. "Chauncey Olcott just loves pink an' my best frock is blue. Don't you s'pose that if you should buy me a pink one—pinker'n Nellie's, that Chauncey—p'raps"—

Mr. Carr laughed as his strong arm drew the child back into safety, but the eyes that met above the golden head held tears as well as smiles at the thought of what the coming years must bring to a nature so intense, so eager for love.—The Congregationalist.

How Bob B—Lived His Religion.

There are certain people who take every opportunity to make loud long professions of their religion, and, like the Pharisee of old, thank the Lord that they are better than others, but when you watch closely how they live, you will find that their lives don't tally with their professions.

Now I want to show you how Bob B—— lived his religion. The best thing about this little incident is that it is substantially true, though I may not be able to give it to you just as it was given to me.

Some years ago I had a brother working in the general offices of the G. P. R. R., at Birmingham, Ala., while Colonel S—— was general superintendent and Mr. G—— was assistant superintendent. My brother and Bob B—— worked in Mr. G——'s department.

Bob began work at a salary of $35 per month. He boarded at the same place where my brother did, and when he drew his first month's salary, that night at the boarding-house he counted out his money for this month.

"Now," said he, "that is my church money, and laid aside $3.50."

"You don't mean to give that much out of your own month's salary, do you?" said someone.

"No," replied Bob; "I am not giving that, I am only paying to the Lord. After that comes the giving."

After awhile Bob got a raise to $50 per month.

Some of the boys said, "Well, Bob, I suppose you will not give $5 out of your month's wages?"

"I'll pay my debts," said Bob.

Again he was raised to $60 per month, and it was the same thing.

But Bob was to be tested in another way. One Saturday afternoon Mr. G—— said: "Well, boys, I don't have you to work on Sunday, as a rule, but we are behind now, and you will all have to come down to-morrow and work to get things ready for the end of the month." But one of the boys had enough of the two G's—Grace and Grit—to object.

Bob spoke, quietly: "Mr. G——, I can't work on Sunday."

"Now, Bob," said Mr. G——, "this is the first time I have had you boys to do so, and we must work to-morrow to catch up."

"I'm sorry, sir," said Bob firmly, "but it is against my religion, and I can't do so."

"Well, Bob," said Mr. G.——, sharply, if you can't do the work, I want you to do, at the time I want you to, I'll have to get a man that will."

Sunday morning every one but Bob went down to work; he went to Sunday-school and preaching. Monday morning he was "fired."

That night, when Bob brought in his part of a month's wages, some of the boys said: "Well, Bob, I guess you won't give any of that money to the church, but keep it to live on until you get another job." But Bob still paid his dues.

Bob started out at once to hunt him another job.

But days passed, and still he was out of a job, until the boys thought things pretty blue for him. But there was a brighter day ahead for him.

One day Col. S——came into Mr. G——'s department. He knew Bob, and missed him right away. "Where is Bob B——?" said he.

"I had to let him go," replied Mr. G——.

"What was the matter?"

"I had to work some on Sunday, we were so badly behind; Bob refused to work, so I had to let him out."

The colonel made no further remark then, but afterwards he saw my brother, and asked him about Bob—where he was, and what he was doing. He told the colonel that Bob boarded at the same place he did, and that he was still out of a job. Colonel S—— told him to tell Bob to come to his office next morning. Bob went over next morning.

"Well," said the colonel, "you are the chap that preferred losing a job to working on Sunday?"

"Yes, sir."

"You are the very boy that I have been looking for—one that will stand by his principles. You can got to work at once in my office. What salary have you been getting?"

"Sixty dollars per month was my last salary."

"I'll start you at $75," said the colonel.

And little Bobbie went on climbing up, until he climbed up to New York, and the last I heard of him, he was getting $150 per month, and he may be still climbing, for I have lost sight of him for some years.

THE FINISHING TOUCH

To our present "front rank" series of BIBLE SCHOOL HELPS will be our

TEACHERS' QUARTERLIES FOR EVERY GRADE

by that prince of teachers, William Worth Dowling, whose ability in this character of work has always given us the "swing" with those wanting the best. About January 1st, 1907, we will send out containing 40 pages of just what the teacher will need to do the work as every consecrated teacher wants it done. Full of suggestions as to use of the picture roll, the lesson cards and methods of teaching each lesson. These superior helps for our primary teacher friends will be sent in any quantity at the remarkable price of FIVE CENTS EACH PER QUARTER.

THE PRIMARY TEACHER

THE JUNIOR TEACHER

containing nearly 80 pages, each quarter, filled with notes on each lesson, illustrations, practical truths as applied to this grade only, and general suggestions as to class organization, management and methods. These are to be sent our Junior teachers at SEVEN CENTS EACH PER QUARTER in any quantity.

THE INTERMEDIATE TEACHER

containing about 100 pages, with lesson notes on same pages with lesson verses treated. References and Revised Version changes always given. The illustrations to be selected with this grade in view so as to fit the ones taught. The intermediate teacher will thus be placed in touch with the best there is for that grade, and these will go at SEVEN AND ONE-HALF CENTS EACH PER QUARTER in any quantity, so that all schools may use them.

THE BIBLE TEACHER

having about 150 pages in every number will be well adapted to use of the Bible class teacher, the reviewing superintendent and the pastor. In this number will be given from all sources, in the fewest words, the cream of helps for Seniors and the Home. The price is SEVEN AND ONE-HALF CENTS EACH PER QUARTER in any number.

TRIAL RATES To any school that has never before used our admirable Lesson Helps, but will now send us an order for our Sunday-school supplies, we will furnish the above described Teachers' Quarterlies at one-half the prices quoted above.

—Perhaps you can "get along" without the Dowling Bible school helps—but why should you? Our low prices put them within the reach of all.

—Correspondents will get better service by sending communications intended for our different departments on separate sheets of paper. Omnibus envelopes are unobjectionable, but the omnibus letter is a cause of delay.

—With 111 new Christian-Evangelists read by its members each week the historic church of C. R. Hudson and George Darsie at Frankfort, Ky., ought to and will attain even greater distinction in realms of Christian usefulness.

—Any preacher may get "Helps to Faith" by J. H. Garrison, one of the best books we have yet published, free of cost by sending us a new subscription accompanied by the $1.50. On the same terms he can get E. L. Powell's "Victory of Faith."

—Heretofore we have gone to press on Tuesday noons, but demands from all over the country for more Christian-Evangelists have forced us to close our forms early Monday p. m. Space will be reserved for telegrams and other brief and very important news till Monday noon. All other copy must be in the printers' hands by Saturday to insure its publication in the following week's paper.

—Every church contemplating a meeting should write at once for terms for 300, 500 or 1,000 Christian-Evangelists per week together with the pink circular containing pictures of ministers, evangelists and church together with appropriate local announcements. They not only insure large congregations, but fill the house with prepared listeners. Thousands of these are in use and are most important factors in many of our most successful revivals.

—Note churches that are dedicating new houses of worship, burning mortgages, holding great meetings, becoming living links, creating strong sentiment in favor of Christian union, preaching and exemplifying an optimistic, constructive, progressive Gospel, and you may depend upon it their ministers are reading The Christian-Evangelist and are in full sympathy and co-operation with its spirit and ideals. If these churches are greatly redounding in the virtues the probabilities are that the officiary and a large percentage of the membership are in the same literary boat with the minister.

—Our subscription clerk is working over time caring for the hosts of new subscriptions coming in these autumn days, and trying to get to the new members of our great constituency the earliest possible number of the paper. While the many coming by ones and twos help guarantee us an even distribution among the churches we are pleased to report the following new clubs at $1.50 each:

Mendon, Mo., David Millar, minister	3
Atlanta, Ga.	7
Munhall, Pa.	8
Lexington, Ky., Mark Collis, pastor	13
Homestead, Pa., E. L. Allen, minister	25
N. Tonawanda, N. Y., E. A. Todd, pastor	25
Kansas City, Mo., W. F. Richardson, pastor	154

—"I consider 'Gloria in Excelsis' by far the most usable hymnal ever published by our brethren. It contains that which has been an insistent demand upon the part of the Church in a hymnal, viz., a large number of the hymns that will never die because born of the deepest thirstings of the human soul, with a liberal number of the more recent hymns which answer the heart cravings of the younger recruits to the army of God. The features of the hymnal which include the responsive readings for public services are a timely and helpful feature. The volume is, in binding and workmanship, most satisfactory. I trust it will have a large sale.—J. W. Hilton, Bethany, Neb.

A Constructive Paper.

Knowledge is always power. The man who knows always has work. The man who knows wants to work. Knowledge is the secret of the desire as well as the ability to work. People who know the most about the kingdom of Christ have the greatest desire to work. People not only need a knowledge of the kingdom of Christ scripturally, but they need to know the ongoing of it in all the world. This knowledge must come through good reliable religious literature. An increase of 30 per cent in circulation of a religious paper such as The Christian-Evangelist in one year is, therefore, a good omen. It means knowledge, which in turn means power. But to those who are students of the progress of the people who are contented to be called simply Disciples of Christ, this growth is not to be wondered at. The Christian-Evangelist is worthy of a larger circulation. It is a clean, aggressive, up-to-date religious news paper that is not too narrow to think and talk all the time about things within our own brotherhood, but keeps us in touch with what our neighbors are doing. It is an all-round paper, sound in faith, tolerant in spirit and constructive in teaching. Then it is conducted on good business methods. Its writers are the best. It is a valuable paper because of the many things it evidently does not print. Its growth is a demonstration of what the brethren want.

It is what the leading brethren want. If The Christian-Evangelist will aggressively "saw wood," keeping on the positive side of things, it will have a growth in the days to come that has not been dreamed of in the days that now are. All this present and promising growth means much to our brotherhood. It means that the best among us have no notion of settling down to be the meanest and narrowest of all sects, but rather to learn as we go, and keep our eyes, hearts and minds open to all the good things that look to the furtherance of our divinely-appointed mission—the union of all followers of the humble Nazarine. The Christian-Evangelist ought to be in every home in the brotherhood. One hundred thousand by 1909 will be a fine stride toward that end. For this I am willing to work. C. A. Freer.

OTHER BIBLE SCHOOL LITERATURE MAY BE GOOD—
THE W. W. DOWLING SERIES IS ADMITTEDLY BETTER.

THE BEST SCHOLARSHIP, EDITORIAL ARRANGEMENT, AND MECHANICAL EXECUTION FIND EXPRESSION IN OUR SERIES OF SUPPLIES. WHILE OUR QUALITY IS THE HIGHEST, OUR PRICES ARE THE LOWEST.

Similar to this expression—"It makes little matter to which church one belongs"—is this other, "It makes no difference what literature we place in the hands of our Bible-school pupils." All the thought of these young people as well as their church affiliation in after years may hinge on a single sentence, or the turning of a phrase.

The consideration of first importance in purchasing supplies should be, that they be edited by a loyal disciple. Then choice should be made from disciple publications and the best taken—that means the Dowling series.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

The honor of being Centennial President is worthy a king's quest.

Only thirty-four months till this greatest of our church festivals begins.

There are many reading this in hamlet and distant vale who shall not see death until they have witnessed our Centennial and told of the celebration to wondering crowds.

Men now unknown to fame among us have time to merge into prominence through the performance of good works and move like kings among the convention hosts. Spur, study, pray, sacrifice, win!

Among the dramatic incidents of Pittsburg it would not be surprising if some like A. M. Atkinson at Cincinnati saying, "Quit you like men," or Simeon at Jerusalem with his song—

> Now lettest thou thy servant depart, O Lord,
> For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,
> And the glory of the people Israel should never descend from the exalted spirit of the convention, but in an ecstasy breaking through the mantling flesh should in the presence of their brethren rise at once to the angel choir celebrating the triumphs of the church and the goodness of the Lord.

How fickle we are! Many like Isaac Errett, Alexander Procter, G. W. Longan and others now on earth and in heaven, whose hearts were often grieved by indictments of heresy framed in our own ecclesiastical courts and by the misconstruing of their motives, teachings and tendencies by their brethren will in that great convocation be enumerated among the prophets, heroes, and martyrs of this Restoration, and the mention of their names and the telling of their deeds will call forth thunderous applause.

Let not the thought that we may be mustered out of service or "fall asleep" abate in the least our zeal for achievements worthy the celebration by a great church. "God may bury his workmen, but his work will go on." Those who look down through the stars upon that triumphal scene and behold their own weaving in the fabric, seeing with clearer eyes and purified hearts and with fuller understanding of its significance to the culmination of God's plans will doubtless rejoice ever more over the work of their hands than the visible participants in the convention.

After all the best way to "look towards Pittsburg," is to look to your own local congregation—to doubling its membership, to deepening its spiritual life, to enlisting the whole membership in all the benevolences of the brotherhood, to the putting of a Christian journal in every home, to erecting the family altar which has fallen, to the building up of the Sunday-school and the improvement of its methods, to looking after and building up the Christian Endeavor Society, the C. W. B. M. Auxiliary, the prayer-meeting and so promoting the welfare of the local congregations.

The Bible School and the Centennial.

Never before in our history has the consequence of the Bible school to the future of this Restoration been so fully and justly emphasized. We look there as never before for our numerical increase and for that intense loyalty, even unto proselyting zeal, for our Plea marking us as a "peculiar people" earnestly striving to make all like as we are and without bonds. We are not alone in placing an increased value on Bible school work. As never before the great religious denominations about us are beginning with the children to train their corps in the great armies of the Lord. It is surprising to many to learn the immense bibliography on this subject and to see what a large proportion of the space in our leading preachers' libraries is given over to literature on Bible school methods and inspiration. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is fully awake to the trend of the times and has its columns open to helpful contributions on this great theme, and assures its correspondents that none other is more eagerly scanned. Not only so but "Our Young Folks"—the chief of its related publications—is now conducting a special department under the editorship of an experienced Bible school teacher on the best methods of teaching and training and recruiting those classes from which the flower and chivalry of this Restoration will go forth to work and win. "Our Young Folks" should be in the hands of every pastor, superintendent, teacher and the older among the student body. Resolutions should be adopted by the officiary of churches and schools to place this paper in the hands of all church and school workers not now privileged to read it. These evidences of appreciation of what has been done to bring this splendid paper for youths up to its present degree of excellence and what it is now doing to make it surpass all its past will call from us every possible effort to make it the best Bible school paper in all the land. It is now advocating an "each one win one" campaign to the end that within a year the membership of our Bible schools be doubled. We urge preachers, superintendents, pastors and evangelists to enthuse our schools with the Centennial propaganda, making the hearts of these young cadets to so glow with the fires of patriotism for the Father's kingdom that all impurities may be consumed and only love for the beautiful, good and true remain, that they not only become good soldiers of the cross themselves, but melt away the barriers keeping their parents and friends from the ranks, and that the church of to-day be assured that the world's youth of to-morrow will indivisibly be on the Lord's side.

Preacher, your richest ore is in the Bible school, and there, too, may multitudes hitherto seeking great opportunities for advancing the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ and finding them not, attain their quest. Among the mighty captains honored at Pittsburg, from sanctums, pulpits, college faculties, or mission fields—none will be received with greater acclaim than our faithful and successful Bible school teachers.

A Pan-American Centennial.

Apropos the first Lord's day in December's consideration by our churches of our great missionary activities under the supervision of the National Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Centennial Secretary Warren sends an interesting article calling attention to three American open gateways to large usefulness. The first of these introduces us to millions of negroes and thousands of mountain people in the United States whose mental and moral culture have been almost enitrely neglected save as they are being cared for by the women of this organization. At Edwards, Miss., we have an industrial school largely patterned after Booker Washington's Tuskegee institute. The Edwards' plannings are as wise and the ideals as high as at the more famous Alabaman seat, and money given there will yield as large returns as any other possible investment. At Louisville is a school for the preparation of young colored men for the Gospel ministry; at Hazelgreen and other points in the mountains, schools with vast possibilities for good are being ably conducted.

Another of these gateways opens into the West Indies. Porto Rico will soon be an integral part of these United States, giving those people added claim to our fraternal care; already we have a flourishing mission in Jamaica and the white banners of Immanuel float over another Disciple mission station in Cuba.

The third gate leads into continental America below the Rio Grande. Already in Mexico we have one prosperous mission; another has recently been established in the capital city of Buenos Ayres. The needs of these Latin lands as well as their geographical proximity to America rightfully place them under our religious as well as political tutelage. By consecrated, energetic missionary endeavor compensating for past delays, we might yet have statistics and representatives from these islands of the sea and hinter Americas most creditable to our first century's development and adding largely to the usefulness and glory of our first Centennial. We plead for a Pan-American Centennial; that all Disciples send to the corresponding secretary, Sister Harlan, financial evidences of their profound interest in the great work of our Christian Woman's Board of Missions, making the offering on the first Lord's day in December both of recruits to the membership and dollars to the treasury the largest in the history of that queenly organization.

The People Versus Oil.

"The United States versus the Standard Oil Company," is a title for which we have been waiting for a long while. Now we have it in the title of the suit instituted last week by the authority of the president and Attorney-General Moody. The suit is on the ground of alleged conspiracy in restraint of trade. The petition filed by the government's attorneys in the federal court in St. Louis, recites the history of the oil trust's alleged proceedings, which it divides into three periods: First, from 1870 to 1882, there existed a conspiracy among more than a score of oil companies which had no organic relation to each other. The present Standard Oil magnates were the leaders in this conspiracy and its purpose was to prevent competition and create monopoly. The trust idea was in its infancy then. It consisted simply of an agreement among independent concerns resulting in the suppression of competition. Second, from 1882 to 1899 there was conspiracy and combination. A majority of the stock of these forty or fifty co-operating oil companies was placed in the hands of nine trustees who managed it all for the common good. In this stage there was a definite and formal unification of control while the ownership of the several companies remained separate. This was declared an illegal combination in 1892 and its dissolution was ordered by court, but the parties appointed to wind up the affairs of the combination carried them on by the same method for seven years and then escaped the law (temporarily) by another form of still closer consolidation. Third, from 1899 to the present time, the stock of the minor and subsidiary companies has been held by the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey. This corporation directly neither produces, owns, refines nor sells oil. It owns stock in the companies that do these things. It is a "holding corporation." The evasion of the laws against combination have been always in the direction of a closer consolidation, which augmented the evils which the law sought to remedy. Incidentally the petition charges that the company has received rebates from the railroads. The petition asks for an injunction and the dissolution of the combination.

A Bonaparte in the Field.

The new attorney-general, Mr. Bonaparte, who will succeed Mr. Moody before the Standard Oil Company files its reply, has fighting blood in his veins. His grandfather, Jerome Bonaparte, was a brother of one Napoleon Bonaparte who, it will be remembered, gained some little reputation in his day as a fighter. But he never fought in half so good a cause as that in which his grand-nephew will contend with the oil trust. The old Bonaparte fought for the restoration of absolutism. The new Bonaparte is called on to conduct a fight against commercial and industrial absolutism. Strength to his arm!

A Currency Scheme.

The committee appointed by the American Bankers' Association met in Washington and has agreed upon a plan of currency reform which will be recommended to the treasury department and to congress. The grand desideratum of every currency scheme is elasticity without inflation or instability; to have some sort of money which will automatically come into existence when money is scarce and dear, will be safe and sound so long as it is in circulation, will stay as long as there is a real need for it to avert panic or relieve stringency, and will modestly retire when normal conditions have been restored. The plan now proposed is that in addition to their bank-notes secured by bonds, national banks shall be permitted to issue unsecured emergency notes to the amount of 40 per cent of their bond-secured circulation, and that they shall pay a tax of 2½ per cent upon this emergency issue. Further, they shall be allowed to issue a second class of unsecured notes equal to 12½ per cent of their capital stock, and upon this issue a tax of 5 per cent is to be paid. These notes are to be guaranteed by the government. The tax paid on them will create a fund for the payment of any losses arising through failure of banks to redeem their notes. The theory is that the tax imposed will prevent the issue of such notes except in times of stringency when interest rates go so high that the banks will find a margin of profit after paying the tax; that the issue of the notes will tend to relieve the stringency (which is the chief purpose of it all) and thus to bring the rate of interest down to normal; and that decline in the interest rate will then wipe out the margin of profit for the bank and induce it to retire the issue. If it will work this way it will be an ideal system of automatic elastic currency—unless one is disposed to object to a credit currency on principle. But it appears to our eyes—comparatively untrained as they are, we must admit, to the intricacies of high finance—that the tax is scarcely high enough to secure prompt retirement when the emergency is past. Would it not be almost or quite as cheap for a bank to pay 2½ per cent interest on an issue of unsecured notes, as it is to buy government bonds paying only 2 per cent interest (thus using up good money which could have been loaned at 5 per cent) and deposit these as security for a bank-note issue, as is done under the present law? In one case the bank pays a tax on its notes; in the other, it loses part of the natural interest on the money which it invests in bonds to use as security. Since ordinary secured bank-notes circulate with profit to the bank in ordinary times, it appears that the first class of emergency notes might do the same. If this were true it would mean not elasticity, but permanent inflation. If this argument is correct, the defect in the newly proposed plan could easily be remedied by making the tax higher.

THE THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

Yet another year of widespread well-being has passed. Never before in our history or in the history of any other nation has a people enjoyed more abounding material prosperity than is ours, a prosperity so general that it should arouse in us no spirit of reckless pride and least of all a spirit of heedless disregard of our responsibilities, but rather a sober sense of our many blessings and a resolute purpose, under Providence, not to forfeit them by any action of our own.

Material well-being, indispensable though it is, can never be anything but the foundation of true national greatness and happiness. If we build nothing upon the foundation, then our national life will be as meaningless and empty as a house where only the foundation has been laid. Upon our material well-being must be built a superstructure of individual and national life lived in accordance with the laws of the highest morality, or else our prosperity itself will in the long run turn out a curse instead of a blessing. We should be both reverently thankful for what we have received, and earnestly bent upon turning it into a means of grace and not of destruction.

Accordingly, I hereby set apart Thursday, the 29th day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and supplication, on which the people shall meet in their homes or their churches, devoutly acknowledge all that has been given them, and pray that they may in addition receive the power to use these gifts aright.

Where Jesus Placed the Emphasis.—XIV.

On the Life Hereafter.

[Concluding the Series.]

It might be expected that one who came into this world that men might have life and that more abundantly, and whose great mission was and is to bring men in right relations to God and to one another, whose kingdom is the kingdom of the spirit, would lay great stress upon the life beyond. Indeed the whole mission and ministry of Jesus Christ in this world assume the capacity of man for an eternal existence and justify themselves on the ground that man is to live forever.

The belief in a life beyond the grave is, of course, not peculiar to the teaching of Jesus. Such a belief, more or less vague, seems to have entered into the life and to have been a part of the religion of all nations. But these ideas, even among the Jews, were vague and unsatisfactory. It was Jesus Christ who "abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." (II Tim. 1:10.) His whole teaching was based on the assumption of life beyond the grave. His attitude toward that doctrine was not one of doubt or conjecture, but of absolute certainty and knowledge. He spoke of the world to come as familiarly as we would speak of countries which we have visited and with whose inhabitants and customs we are acquainted. To quote here all the passages in which the future life is taught directly, or implied, would be to quote a large part of the teaching of Jesus. Let a few passages suffice.

To the Jews he said: "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day." (John 6:54.) Again, meeting the objection of the Sadducees who did not believe in the life after death, he said: "But that the dead are raised even Moses showed, in the place concerning the Bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Now he is not the God of the dead but of the living: for all live unto him." (Luke 20:37, 38.) In the same connection he tells the Sadducees that "they that are accounted worthy to attain to that world in the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; for neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are sons of God, being sons of the resurrection." (Luke 20:35, 36.)

His repeated promise of giving "eternal life" to those who believed on him, and his instruction to his disciples not to fear him that can only kill the body, carries with it the inevitable conclusion that in the thought of Jesus the grave is not the end of human life. To the penitent thief on the cross he promised "This day shall thou be with me in Paradise." To the weeping sisters at Bethany, whose brother had died, when Martha had said, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day," Jesus replied: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live; and whosover liveth and believeth on me shall never die." (John 11:25, 26.) It may be doubted whether the church has come to a full recognition of the meaning of this wonderful passage.

The one passage in the teaching of Jesus which, perhaps more than any other, has comforted the hearts of his disciples in the presence of death, is the following: "Let not your heart be troubled: believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:1-3.) Than this nothing can be more explicit and satisfactory. Every element is here that is needed to comfort the heart troubled with the thought of death. There is the Father's house with its many abiding-places. We are not, then, to go out as strangers in a strange land, but rather we are going home to our Father's house where all our brothers and sisters will be gathered. Notice this assurance: "If it were not so I would have told you." Here our divine Lord pledges his own candor and veracity to the reality of the life beyond. He would not deceive us. He would not hold out great hopes of a glorious life hereafter, only to disappoint us. If it were not so he would have told us. On this solid rock we may place our feet and look, without a fear or a tremor, into that spiritual world whither we are going.

But as if all this were not enough to comfort and sustain the heart in the midst of the trials and tribulations, and the ravages of death, in this present world, he added demonstration to promise. He died for us, was buried, and rose again on the third day, appearing to his disciples, even to as many as five hundred at one time, demonstrating the reality of his resurrection. And then, one day leading his disciples out as far as Bethany, on the slope of Olivet, and giving them his parting blessing, he was parted from them, and under the bright shining of the Syrian sun, he ascended to his Father and our Father, to his God and to our God. Long did his disciples stand gazing up after him with wistful eyes, until the angel announced that this same Jesus who had ascended would in like manner descend again.

What more could Jesus say or do, to give assurance to his disciples of the reality and blessedness of the life that lies beyond the grave. Before leaving the world he commissioned his disciples to go and preach the gospel to the whole creation, and this is now the great work which should engage the thought and resources and energies of the church. How vitally important it is that the world should come into possession of these great treasures of truth, and especially into possession of that eternal life which, beginning here on earth, stretches across the death-line with unbroken continuity into the very eternity of God!

If these brief studies in the teachings of our Lord shall serve to strengthen faith in, and reverence for him, and shall lead our readers to a more diligent study of his character and doctrine, and to a greater consecration to his service, our purpose in preparing them will have been realized. To his blessed name be glory, and honor, and majesty, and dominion, both now and forever. Amen.

Let Us Give Thanks

For the loving kindness of our Common Father who has preserved our lives through the year past, and who has abundantly supplied all our needs. "For in him we live and move and have our being."

For the fruitful fields, the abundant harvests, and the bending orchards, with which the year has been crowned, rewarding the toils of the husbandmen and supplying food in abundance for man and beast. For he watereth the hills from his chariots and softeneth the furrows with showers from heaven.

For freedom from war, pestilence and famine, three of the great scourges of mankind, and the general prevalence of peace, health and prosperity, within all our borders.

For the spirit of brotherhood and charity which has manifested itself toward such cities or sections of the country as have suffered from earthquake, fire or flood. This growth of the altruistic spirit is of more value to the world than universal material prosperity.

For the rising tide of moral sentiment in the nation against all classes of evil-doers, and for the manifest purpose of the chief executive of the United States, to bring the great corporations of the country to the bar of justice, and compel them to respect and obey the laws regulating such organizations. There is nothing for which Christian people should be more grateful than for this higher ethical standard that the people are demanding both in public life and in commercial and industrial pursuits. In this we have the highest proof, perhaps, of the growing power of the kingdom of God over the common life of the people.

For the growing unity of the world, as manifested in friendly conferences between nations, in the Hague tribunal for preventing war, in numerous peace congresses, in growing commerce between nations, and in the universal condemnation of the aggressive policy of any nation against the territorial rights or political independence of another. Rapid transit and swift methods of communication are steadily unifying the world and bringing the family of nations into closer and more friendly relations.

For the growing unity of the church, as shown in the decay of the spirit of sectarianism in all enlightened communities, in closer co-operation between different religious bodies in advancing the common interests of the kingdom of God, in the waning power of human creeds and the increasing emphasis on the vital and fundamental truths on which the church is one. Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers moves steadily and irresistibly towards its fulfillment, and all "our little systems" that stand in the way of this grand consummation will soon "have their day and cease to be." For this fact the readers of this journal will be specially grateful, and for the humble part our own religious movement has had and is yet to have in bringing in the era of a united Christendom.

For our homes and the tender and sacred relationships of the family, where life has its sweetest and holiest charms, and whence issue those saving influences which make for good citizenship in the state, and in the kingdom of God.

For our public schools, our academies, colleges and universities, and all other institutions which stand for the general diffusion of knowledge and for the moral and intellectual development of the people.

For our churches, our hospitals and asylums, our homes for the orphan, the widow and the friendless and for all the sweet and tender ministries of benevolence alleviating human sorrow, rescuing neglected childhood, and soothing the pains of the unfortunate and afflicted.

For the advancement of science, which is giving us a better knowledge of the world in which we live, and of the universe, showing us how God has worked hitherto and is working in all the processes of life and growth, and which is revealing to us laws of health and of treating disease hitherto unknown, making new discoveries and inventions which contribute to human welfare and happiness and help the race on toward a truer and more enlightened civilization. So from being an enemy of religion all right-thinking men now regard it as a helper and co-worker with religion in elevating the race.

For these and all other blessings which come down from above, let us give sincere and heart-felt thanks to Almighty God, while we confess our sins and shortcomings, and seek his forgiveness, and invoke his guidance and blessing in all the years to come.

Notes and Comments.

Is there to be another eruption so soon? Is the brotherhood to be thrown into a turmoil of controversy through newspaper attacks on brethren whose views are adjudged to be unsound? There are not wanting indications that we are threatened with such calamity. Surely if there were not an abnormal appetite for such literature among us it would cease to be forthcoming. If there is anything we need less than harsh and unbrotherly criticisms of those whose views are more liberal or more conservative than our own, we do not know what it is. If wrong positions be taken by any brother let them be pointed out in love. These general fusillades against the "new theology" and "destructive criticism" create false impressions and false alarms. We believe in discussion, but denunciation and insinuation are something very different.

Sometimes we have been asked why THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is not zealous in exposing error like some other religious journals. We have never felt it to be our duty to hunt up all the unwise, rash and skeptical things which rash and unwise men have said, and publish them for the sake of replying to them. Our journalistic policy has been different. Our ideal is that of the Apostle Paul, who said, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Error has a wide enough circulation without our assisting it. Much more do we deprecate the tendency to magnify the faults of our brethren and to interpret what may seem to us to be an erroneous view, as a surrender of the faith and disloyalty to Christ. We want our readers to understand, what we believe to be true, that the great body of our brotherhood, both ministers and private members, are loyal to Christ and though differing in their views of certain aspects of truth, are one in their faith and loyalty to a common Lord. Sowing seeds of distrust among the brethren is one of the poorest ways to advance the kingdom of God.

We are in receipt of letters from several brethren who, referring to the outlook indicated above, are cast down in spirit and ask, what is to be done? We are bound to take the same optimistic view of this situation as we do of other things. There is an inherent power in truth and right, and an inherent weakness in error and wrong-doing, which is a sure ground for an optimistic view. Sooner or later error defeats itself and "truth crushed to earth will rise again." It is in the power of its friends to help it rise, but it is not in the power of its enemies to prevent it from rising. It is in the power of brethren who love peace and pursue it, and who love unity and wish to see the brotherhood advancing unitedly on the forces of evil, to have it, and they will have it sooner or later.

The committees having in charge the arrangement of the details of the union of the Congregationalists, United Brethren and Protestant Methodists, three religious bodies which some time ago agreed upon a general plan of union, are now in session in Pittsburg, Pa. There is a committee on polity, another on uniform doctrine and rules of church government, and still another on the legal phases of the union involving the question of vested rights. The committee on polity will suggest names for the united church, but will leave the selection to the tri-church council. That may not prove an easy question to decide, but if worse comes to worse, they might compromise on some old-fashioned names found in the New Testament. The committees are all hopeful that their reports will be approved and that in about two years the three churches will be one. Whoever causes one denomination to grow where three grew before, will undoubtedly prove a benefactor to the cause of Christ. Meanwhile let us not forget the main question which is the union in Christ of the whole body of believers.

One of the speakers on "City Evangelization" at the national city evangelization convention, recently held in Chicago, said: "The whole of life is what the church must provide for. I believe in mixing religion and politics and religion and business." There are those, however, who would keep them in separate watertight compartments. The worst possible form in which politics can mix with religion is for it to shut the mouth of the church and prevent it from bearing its witness against the liquor traffic and other moral abominations, on the plea that "the church must not go into politics." When it yields to that plea politics has it by the throat, and the worst form of politics at that.

Dr. George H. Ball, writing on the evangelistic campaign in the "Morning Star," puts the case in a nutshell, thus:

> Christian ideas are the only remedy for false and harmful living. Christian emotion is healthy and comforting, but intermittent and feeble unless rooted in Christian ideas. The days of emotional religion in America are past. The revival now needed is that of ideas, thoughts, principles. The evangelist who lacks a firm, clear, strong grip of the ideas Christ stands for can do little toward meeting current want. The people are thinking, and thinking on new lines, and demand fresh, clear utterances of the truest Christian truths, and their practical application to personal, business, everyday life.

This is the new evangelism—the old Gospel of Christ freshly applied to the needs of men to-day. There is no substitute for it.

Editor's Easy Chair.

We were hardly prepared for the difference in temperature between St. Louis and Mobile. When we left St. Louis we were having crisp late autumn weather with an occasional flurry of snow. We found Mobile sweltering in summer heat—an unusual temperature for even that southern city. The roses were blooming fresh in the yards and the people were wearing their summer costumes. Mobile's location, on the bay near the Gulf, and at the converging point of four rivers which drain as many states, is destined to make it one of the great commercial ports of the soutn, especially in view of the Panama Canal. The city does not yet appear, to a visitor, to be conscious of its great destiny, but inside of a decade great changes will be witnessed in real estate values, buildings, and other evidences of growth. We know of no better place for good investments. It still bears some of the marks of the great Caribbean storm which visited it September 27. But, after all, the city's loss was light as compared with the district down nearer the Gulf. A ride of thirty miles down the Bay to Coden, where we saw hundreds of acres of beautiful timber prostrated by the gale, impressed this fact on us. Captain Alba, at whose hotel we put up at Coden, but whose home is in Mobile, told us many remarkable incidents of the storm, resulting from the pushing back of the waters of the Gulf over all this part of the country. Other citizens also related thrilling personal experiences. This flood will be a distinct landmark in the history of this part of the state from which events are likely to be dated.

The people thereabouts are at work repairing their losses as far as possible, but the great need of this section of the country, as perhaps in many another section of the south, is intelligent, reliable labor, and additional capital. A gentleman who owns and conducts a large creamery down on the bay, said in our hearing that he was about to move his creamery elsewhere, simply for the lack of help which he could not get there. Everything else was ideal for the business. Our hostess in the residence part of the city, spent a half hour in telephoning various down-town firms for a messenger boy to carry our suit case to the station, but failed to find any one who could do so, and our host from his down-town business place sent one of his men to perform this service. This demand for help caused by temporary illness, impressed us with the need of a better organization of labor, as there are thousands of unemployed negroes in the city. The problem of transforming these freed men into reliable laborers is one of the great problems of the south. The problem would be more readily solved if the climate were less hospitable and the soil less productive. The old Confederate soldiers were having a reunion in Mobile on the day we left the city, and it was gratifying to us to know that these old grizzled veterans of many a hard-fought field were receiving hearty recognition, and a generous welcome from the people of that city. Their courage in battle, and their devotion to duty, both in war and peace, entitle them to this generous recognition. This is their only pension from the people whose cause they fought to maintain and it should not be withheld from them.

The state convention, which met in the First Christian Church, had well nigh completed its sessions before our arrival on the scene, late Saturday night. It was our privilege to speak twice on Lord's day, and to give the closing address on Monday morning. Another hand will report the entire convention. We believe it was regarded as one of the best which has been held in the state, and, judging from what we saw of it, the spirit was most admirable. The Alabama brethren who are engaged in co-operative missionary work, have their faces turned toward the future and are planning for larger and better things. There was a fine lot of earnest preachers present and a number of consecrated business men who are giving their time and thought to the advancement of the cause in the state. We have seldom addressed more responsive audiences anywhere than those we met in Mobile. It was a special delight to see the handsome new church building of the Christian Church on one of the great thoroughfares of the city—Government street—and to note the standing which the young church is already gaining in that conservative old city. Bro. Claude E. Hill, their minister, has done a monumental work in Mobile, and he is seconded in his efforts by a very efficient board of officers. Our home in the city was with Brother Wintersmith, one of the elders of the church, who, with his delightful family, discharged all the rites of Christian hospitality in a most charming manner. Only Christianity makes such a home possible.

An afternoon's fishing with Bros. W. T. Moore and C. E. Hill, in one of the bayous into the gulf, was a pleasant episode of our southern trip, and served as a brain rest after the fatiguing labors of the convention. We left the other two brethren mentioned down on the happy fishing and hunting grounds intent on further sport while we hastened back to Mobile with a view of taking in a part of the Valdosta, Ga., convention. On the eve of starting, however, a sudden illness necessitated the abandonment of our journey to Valdosta, and robbed us of the anticipated privilege of meeting with the Georgia brethren, which we very much regretted. If the Georgia brethren will pardon us, we will make amends for this at some future meeting. We had a painful journev home most of the way, but the kindness shown us by passengers on the train partially compensated for this, in showing, as we have often stated, how much of the milk of human kindness, after all, there is in the average human heart. Happily the illness proved temporary and by the time we reached St. Louis we were quite comfortable—thanks to Dr. Osgood of Mobile who provided us with remedies on leaving, and to a recuperative constitution for which we must thank the powers above. This Dr. W. W. Osgood is a brother of our missionary to China, Dr. E. I. Osgood, who was a visitor at the convention. Among other visitors from outside the state, whom we recall, were President A. McLean, Assistant Secretary G. B. Ranshaw, Secretaries G. W. Muckley and J. H. Mohorter, W. T. Moore, of Columbia, and H. C. Bowen, of Cincinnati. Perhaps this convention may have been a little overloaded with outside visitors, but we heard no suggestion to that effect from those hospitable people. These intervisitations between residents of different sections of the country tend to break down provincialism and strengthen the bond of unity. Thank God we have no North and South churches.

The Christian-Evangelist comes to its readers this week in a special Thanksgiving number in honor of our national Thanksgiving day. Grateful for all the blessings which our heavenly Father has vouchsafed to us during the year past, we trust our readers are also in a grateful mood for the manifold favors they have received from the same source and will enter with us heartily into this Thanksgiving period. It is one of the customs which we should not allow to become stale with age. It springs from one of the noblest sentiments of the human heart—gratitude for blessings received. That man is low in the scale of moral development who feels no impulse of gratitude for undeserved favors which he has received. Even dumb animals show a sense of gratitude for kindnesses bestowed upon them. Let us then who wear the image of God see to it that we are not unmindful of all his benefits. Along with gratitude for blessings received, let there be acknowledgment of our sins and shortcomings and a deeper consecration to true and worthy living. So shall our annually-recurring Thanksgiving season prove a fountain of blessing to our individual, family and national life.

As we are closing early this week, because of an extra large edition, we are unable to report the full results of our simultaneous meetings, some of which have closed, but some of which are to run beyond the time of our going to press. We need not wait for the full results, however, to be able to say that the success has surpassed anything heretofore attempted in the way of evangelistic services in the city of St. Louis. The meetings have proved to be of incalculable benefit to all the churches cooperating. They have b en strengthened greatly in the numbers added and, also, in the revival of the spiritual energy of former members. The experiment has convinced us of the wisdom of simultaneous meetings. Our mistake was in not undertaking it on a still larger scale, although we did seek to enlist a number of churches within reach of St. Louis which for one reason and another did not join with us. Other things being equal, the larger the number of cooperating churches the greater will be the spiritual momentum and the greater the results. Among the reasons for our gratitude on this Thanksgiving day is the success which has crowned our simultaneous evangelistic services in the city of St. Louis.

THANKSGIVING

By JAMES EGBERT

Thankfulness is the state of which thanksgiving is the expression. It is usually associated with the emotional nature and expresses itself in poetry, song and prayer. Thanksgiving speaks of the harmony that exists between the Father lavishing his gifts and his children receiving them.

All true achievement in life is but an expression of thankfulness—the artist spreading on canvas his heart of fulness, the poet outpouring his love in song, the sculptor chiselling out of the rough stone the divine image, the artisan at his bench, the teacher before his class, the housewife in the home.

Thanksgiving is not a spasm coming one day in all the year. It is rather a habit of the soul. And every day is a thanksgiving day.

Our reasons for thanksgiving are based in the character of God. True recognition of the Father's love and care under all life's circumstances creates a trust which makes the heart constantly thankful. As said the Quaker poet:

> "I know not where his islands lift,
> Their fronded palms in air,
> I only know I can not drift,
> Beyond his love and care."

The Hebrews are a point in illustration. The Hebrew heart could always thank God and take courage. The most adverse circumstances only made evident their gratitude to Jehovah. Walk among the hymns in their Psalm Book and watch the stream of thanksgiving as it issues in "The Blessed Man" and winds its way among hills and through valleys in one unbroken stream of giving thanks until it finally reaches that climax, "Praise ye the Lord . . . Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord," and emerges into the great ocean of gratitude.

The Twenty-third Psalm is but an outburst of praise to the Shepherd who leads them in pleasant pastures and beside still waters. Even in the valley and shadow of death they are not unthankful, for his presence is there. Among enemies they find the spread table.

In the Forty-sixth Psalm we find Israel in the midst of national calamity. The strong figure bespeaks its awfulness. Great mountains which have stood unmoved for ages are being hurled into the heart of the turbulent sea—but, says the Hebrew:

> "God is our refuge and strength,
> A very present help in trouble.
> Therefore will we not fear."

One would think that the dark cloud of exile had quelled her thankful spirit. And, indeed, she did hang her harp on the willows and refuse to sing in a strange land. But the emotion was there and it must come forth. Under the power of this crushing of affliction Israel did sing. She re-sang her songs, reviewed her history, compiled and gave to the world that monumental literature which we find in the Old Testament.

Israel's deepest shame was famine, pestilence, and exile. Not that she was not hardy to endure but it cast reflection on Jehovah before other nations. She wanted all to recognize him as the Provider of every good. Hence she would ever say in affliction, "It is our own sin." Israel's greatest delight was in the well-filled granary, the overflowing larder, and hills feeding with flocks and herds. For in prosperity Jehovah would be exalted among the nations.

The Hebrews were the hill-people, having flocks and herds. Living out under the open sky, they came in contact with God's rugged world. This largely accounts for their pure, simple emotion. Moses got the right vision of things from Pisgah's heights. He foresaw the danger of this simple people. Hence his warnings in Deut. 8. He feared that among the nations they would learn to trust in trained warriors, among the traders they would catch the spirit of commercialism, among the city mansions they would learn to trust in the material show of things—that they would vaunt themselves and forget God.

This is the danger of every age. The sadness of Greece is that in her beautiful scheme of culture she forgot God.

In these days of gigantic intellect, and marvelous inventions, when art and literature and all good and beautiful things are being poured into our laps in abundance, let us not forget that God provides the life and the health, and inspires the thought. In these days of advanced thought, when we do not see God as a wonderworking magician, let us not fail to see him—see him in the great network of laws. Not only see that "all is law," but "all is God," and "all is love."

> "God of our fathers, known of old—
> Lord of our far-flung battle-line—
> Beneath whose awful hand we hold
> Dominion over palm and pine—
> Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
> Lest we forget, lest we forget."

Our daily living is so systematized and our system of distribution so perfect that all runs like clockwork. The farmer sows and cultivates his fields and reaps them with the ease of the best mechanism; hurries the grain off to mill, where it is ground on polished rolls and bolted on swing sifters; brought to our door by the delivery man at precisely the time wanted. Let us not forget that—

> "Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
> And back of the flour is the mill;
> And back of the mill is the sheaf—
> And the shower
> And the sun,
> And the Father's will."

Jesus added another charm to giving thanks to God. He graced the reasons for thankfulness by taking things out of the material category and viewing them as spiritual values. His wilderness conflict was an inner struggle of conflicting ideals. He settled the matter once for all. Man was not to live by bread alone, but by the word of God; he would use his power for others; the realities of life are of first consideration. The issues of this struggle became his program for life, as well as the ideal program for every other son of God. He then set his face toward Jerusalem. The shadow of the cross ever hung over him. We think of him, and truly, as the Man of Sorrows—yet he was always thanking God.

One day the disciples came in rejoicing because of their mastery over demons. Jesus told them not to rejoice over such things, but rejoice that their names are written in heaven. He then had joy in the Spirit and said, "Father I thank thee."

As they wended their way toward the Holy City, a man, struck by Christ's words of authority, said, "Master, bid my brother that he divide the inheritance with me." Jesus at once knew he had his mind set upon material things and said, "man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things possessed."

Likewise, the apostle Paul had such a firm grasp of the unseen realities that, utterly regardless of the appearance of material conflict, he could set his face toward the Roman prison not only to be bound but to die, with the song ever in his heart, "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice."

So the soul doth pierce the blackest night,
And smiles through the dash of tears;
For it knows, at the heart of thing is right,
And Time shows a Love that hears.

"THOU CROWNEST THE YEAR WITH THY GOODNESS."

By E. L. Allen.

For the year thou hast crowned with Thy goodness;
For Thy glory afar o'er the lea;
And the harvest which yielded its fullness;
The abundance we've "sucked of the sea;"
For the sunshine which gladdened the mountains;
For the dew and the soft falling rain—
Which, supplying the rivers and fountains,
Didst refresh each valley and plain—
We thank Thee, O Lord!

For the farmer who plowed the deep furrow
In hope, not in vain, a rich yield;
For the cattle which browsed o'er the meadow,
And the song-birds of forest and field;
For our ships which have sailed o'er the ocean,
Each bearing our commerce afar;
For our land preserved from commotion,
Rebellion and red-handed war,
We thank Thee, O Lord!

For our lives oft shielded from danger
In the ceaseless grind of the mill;
For the kindness of friend and of stranger
In the day of distress and of ill;
For our home life, so sweet and so tender;
The blessing of wife and of child—
All the gifts which we fail to remember
Of mercies so gentle and mild—
We thank Thee, O Lord!

Aye the year Thou hast crowned with Thy goodness;
For each season's sweet blessings rare;
For the Winter's brisk wholesome freshness,
And the Spring's budding blossoms so fair!
For the Summer's gay garland of flowers,
Gentle Autumn's rich burden of corn;
For old Time with his swift passing hours
Which fillest our life's sunny morn,
We thank Thee, O Lord!

For the Saviour's redemption from sorrow;
For Thy comfort and peace from above;
Affording a glad golden morrow—
Aye ten thousand tokens of love—
For the hope when our journey is ended,
And Death with his dart lays us low,
That our lot with the glorified's blended,
We'll the joys of eternity know,
We thank Thee, O Lord!

The Future of Our Country and Our Contribution To It*

By W. H. Sheffer

Born upon the shores of an untrod continent, wrapped in the swaddling clothes of adversity, and rocked in the cradle of oppression, yet soothed by the lullaby of a sustaining faith, our nation has grown until it takes its place among the sturdy peoples of the world. Its history is an open book and it is needless that I shall in any measure recite it to you. We are now a great people and living in a great age.

The permanent greatness of any nation depends upon its citizenship. Its people are its power. The American citizen is as unique as he is great. He is the compound product of many nations. In his veins flows the blood of many peoples. And the treasured wisdom of all the ages abides in his heart. The comingling of the blood of the different peoples of the world has strained out the narrowness peculiar to each, and given birth to a people larger and greater than any. And so we have of the many "one new man"—an American citizen. The word "American" has won its place in the ranks and thought of mankind. Those of other lands respect it and those of our country revere it with a sacred pride. Said Daniel Webster, pointing to the pillar on Bunker Hill, "That motionless shaft will be the most powerful of speakers. Its speech will be of civil and religious liberty. It will speak of patriotism and courage. It will speak of moral improvement and elevation of mankind. Decrepit age leaning against its base, and ingenuous youth gathering round it, will speak to each other of the glorious events with which it is connected, and exclaim, 'thank God, I also am an American.'"

Nor am I to speak of our present progress and power. Great as we are, and alluring as is the theme, it must be left to another. Our faces to-day are to the future. We must hear the marching orders of our king. And as he said to the wondering group on Olivet, "Go ye into all the world," so he has given to America an universal mission. We talk about our country's greatness, her size, her wealth, her physical prosperity and power, and recount with pride her material resources; but if these be all of which we have to boast we are poor indeed. These are but the outward evidences of an inward possession far more valuable. America is the incarnation of a divine purpose, the prophet of an ideal era wherein dwelleth peace, the herald of the Gospel of liberty as universal as mankind and commensurate in meaning and moment with that liberty of which our Master spoke when he said: "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." It is ours to teach all men what freedom is, both civil and religious, and ours under God, to emancipate and redeem the human race. A vast horizon opens before us. Years ago with a kind of unconscious prophecy we declared: "We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal; that these are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." Were the words "all men" meant only for that fragment of our race that dwells within the borders of our own land? Or must we give them that universal reach that God meant them to have, even though our fathers, wise as they were, did not then discern it?

But before America could accomplish this mission, she must first establish herself as a great nation. This task she has fully and well performed. Another and higher task awaits her. What she has done for herself, she must do for others; and what she is and shall be must be recognized as a sacred trust for the entire race.

W. H. Sheffer.

No other nation is so fitted for this task as our own. Fleet of foot, she has outstripped all others in the race of progress; made wise by the experiences of older nations, she is to escape the pitfalls wherein many a promising people found ruin; bold as a gladiator, she is not to be intimidated by jealous rivals and opposers. The foundation principles of our government are world-wide and imperishable. America and Americanism must conquer the world; not indeed by force of arms or carnal conquest; but by the power of a success wrought out by modern and righteous methods of government; by the demonstration of a higher civilization, and by beneficent results that flow from our national life like streams of gladness which refresh and sweeten the lives of all the people, from the least to the greatest, and bless the poor and rich alike. No longer an experiment or an untried theory, America is to become the exemplar of the world, and by her example to lead all nations to a better life.

What I have said thus far has been, as I see it, the logical deductions from the fundamental principles of our government and a rational interpretation of our history. And in speaking thus I have not allowed myself to be blinded to the defects that exist or to the mistakes we have made in the applications of these principles. Being human we have erred, and at times our errors have been considerable. But we are encouraged just now by the wide-spread movement to correct many of our mistakes and to call our people to return to the first principles of our government as announced by the fathers and which have been the inherent power of our greatness. In this struggle to rectify our failures and to make the needed and proper advancement our nation demands and must have every contribution of wisdom and service available. Her people must come forward with whatever they have for her betterment and place it willingly at her disposal, that her mission be not impeded, but that like an apostle clothed in light she may go forth among the nations both to her own and their eternal good.

In this day of our nation's need as well as of her hope; in this day when opportunity is pleading like an angel, what have we as a religious people to contribute to our nation's good? What have we to give to make more glorious her future, wherewith to bless the race, and wherewith to glorify our God? My brethren, I verily believe that to us God has given that which our nation most surely needs and that which above all else will contribute to her abiding greatness and which will through her bring the largest measure of good to all peoples. In my judgment what is most needed is the spiritual quality. We have become rampant in the matter of material prosperity and progress. Commerce, agriculture, finance, and an accompanying extravagance have set us wild, distorted our judgment, corrupted our ideals and led us away from the pillar of cloud that would not only have guided us through the seas of early struggle, but into the very promised land. Our national life seems to me to be abundant in body, in outward form, in material stature, but lacking in animating and directing spirit. What this huge body needs is a soul, a spiritual force, able to guide it in the proper way and to transform its material greatness into an intelligent spiritual power, and that will show us the difference between the real object of life and the incidents and means that lead thereto. The religious element was the bed-rock of our greatness. It was that on which we builded to our present heights. We should not treat it as,

> "Ambition's ladder:
> Whereto the climber upward turns his face;
> But when he once attains the upmost round,
> Then unto the ladder turns his back,
> Looks into the clouds, scorning the base degrees
> By which he did ascend."

It was faith in the living God and reverence for his holy name that made us a great and prosperous people: and it must be these that shall continue our greatness. Indeed, without these elements of spirituality we must inevitably pass into that withering blight and eternal doom that have passed upon all preceding nations that have forgotten God.

With this whole situation what have we as a people to do? Much every way: chiefly because unto us were committed the oracles of God. The Gospel of Christ has ever been and will be unto the end of time the power of God unto salvation. It is the savor of life to the individual and to the nation alike. These times need this gracious Gospel. But the conditions demand the real Gospel, the Gospel as revealed through the Christ and preached by his chosen apostles. This is no time for the vagaries and speculations of theology; these times are out of joint with the cold dead creeds that stand in our pathway like gaunt specters, whose clammy hand has chilled the warm blood of faith and thus confused the religious thought of mankind. The creed for this hour is the living Christ. Men who are unwilling or unable to believe many of the theological statements about the Christ, will gladly accept him as a personal Savior and admit him into their hearts as the Lord of their lives. The Christ is the religious center of gravity. When he is firmly fixed in the heart as the object of faith and love, all the other parts of the religious life are in perfect balance. He is the magnetic force which alone can unify all the religions, systems and peoples of the world. He, if lifted up, will draw men unto him, and secure that unity for which he both labored and prayed. This centering of the life in Christ assures stability and unity of faith and at the same time is a guarantee of that religious liberty which every growing life both craves and demands, and which is his by right of divine purpose and promise. Where the Christ binds us, we are every one willing to be bound; where he leaves us free, no man or method, no creed or council has the right to bind us. It is a Gospel that exalts the Son of God; that makes him the supreme source of authority in religion; that calls upon men everywhere to confess him and to wear his name; that makes his life and teaching the standard and example for the lives of all people.

*An address delivered at Buffalo before the American Christian Missionary Society.

This Gospel calls no man common or unclean, but makes of one blood all nations of men, and constitutes of the whole race an universal brotherhood with God our universal Father. It knows no distinction between what is commonly called sacred and secular, but demands that every man shall bear the principles and spirit of the Christ into all his affairs of life. This at once exalts business and government, giving them a spiritual significance and value, and at the same time regards them as but means to a far more intelligent, beneficent, and divine purpose, that the whole world may be filled with all the fullness of God.

This Gospel is strikingly adapted to the genius and conditions of our country. They both were born in the travail of a great opposition; grew to their present stature in spite of the combined forces of prejudice, ignorance and vice; and have gained their present eminence and power by virtue of a constant and terrific warfare. And, as if by divine appointment, this same Gospel seems especially adapted to the intellectual, social, commercial and religious conditions of our present national life. This is an investigative age; and this Gospel has endured the light and scrutiny of nineteen centuries and constantly increased in popularity and power; it is a progressive age, ever taking on new forms, and this Gospel, while maintaining its truth and essence, adapts itself to the changing conditions of life; this age is indifferent to the theories and method of the past, asking only for the true and the good, and the Gospel of Christ is a genuine iconoclast, striking down the false and partial and giving the true and the universal; it comes bringing not peace, but a sword. Some cry for peace, but there is no peace, and can be none until it is reached in the clear wisdom, perfect righteousness and impartial love of the Son of God. He is the solvent of all doubts and of all problems, and is the one straight way through all the labyrinthian complexities of human life. He is the universal hope. Our social, commercial, political and religious life can all find their perfect adjustment and reconciliation in him. When we learn from him that men are of more value than things; that life is not to be measured by its accidents, that giving is better than getting, that service is valued above selfish ease, that love is the supreme law of God and man, then shall the middle wall of partition be broken down and we shall have that peace for which we have so long sought and which passeth all understanding.

To us who are called Christians has this Gospel been committed. It is ours in trust. By every demand of reason, of righteousness and of love we must not withhold it. If we more clearly than others see its light, the more imperative is our call. The American Christian Missionary Society is the medium through which we may co-operate in evangelizing our country. This society is to us a supreme opportunity. They do not relieve us of any responsibility; rather is it their mission to arouse us and make us feel more profoundly this important duty. As a brotherhood and as individual Christians we must have fellowship with these chosen brethren. They have not chosen us, but we have chosen them, and in choosing them we have morally pledged our very best endeavor. Too long already have we withheld our worthy fellowship and full support; too long have we been almost criminal in our neglect. The blush of shame has burned its guilty spot deep enough into our cheeks. Let us awake ere it burn our souls.

Some day and all who now are here shall pass, I hope, to that immortal life which God in love hath promised to the faithful. Then, though far beyond this world, we still shall live again in the lives of those who still abide upon the earth: for every man may, if he will, enjoy two blessed immortalities.

> "O may I join the choir invisible
> Of those immortal dead who live again
> In minds made better by their presence."

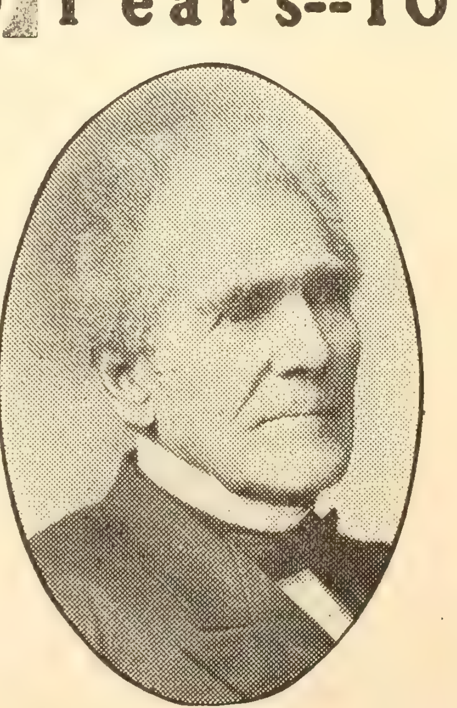
I stood at Memphis on the banks of the Father of Waters and watched the setting sun. As he sank low toward the west he cast from his glowing face a pathway of light across the surface of the stream. I saw him build with drifting clouds a palace of gold, all pillared and gabled with purple and crimson glory. He cast his mantle upon the lap of mother earth whereon he laid his head to rest. As the scene all shifted farther into the west there remained a lingering, streaming glory as if a band of angels had thrown aside their robes as they flew. And as I watched, one by one the stars came from their hiding places in the sky. The sun had set, but far beyond the horizon that bound my vision was shining in a new world; and yet in the world from which he had departed he was still living in ten thousand shining stars. So may we if faithful unto God and his call of service abide with him beyond the sky, and yet live on and forever in the lives of those whom we have blessed, like the lingering glory of a departing sunset reflected from a world of stars.

Minister 80 Years--101 Years Old

Perhaps John Schaeffer, the devout man of God and the eminent minister of His word, would estimate his life as modestly as did Jacob, "The wrestler with God," but he can say what Jacob could not say: "I have attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers in the days of their pilgrimage, and far beyond them." Only two of those who were contemporary with him in any part of his early ministry are now living—Prof. Charles L. Loos, of Lexington, Kentucky and Rev. Lathrop Cooley, of Cleveland, Ohio, both of them past their eightieth year. But they were far from the beginning of their ministry when John Schaeffer began his ministry of the Word.

Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott, William Hayden, Jonas Hartzel, Almon B. Green, John Henry, J. H. Jones, Adamson Bentley, William Collins, Marcus Bosworth, eminent preachers all, and a hundred other men of renown in their "day and generation" and contemporaries of his, have long since passed over to the "other side." He himself says, as he stands alone the representative of the Disciple preachers of his generation:

> "No longer forward or behind, I look in hope or fear;
> But grateful take the good I find,
> The best of now and here."



John Schaeffer.

> "I break my pilgrim staff—I lay
> Aside the toiling oar;
> The angel sought so far away
> I welcome at my door."

Indeed all the windows of his soul are open to the day. I have before me a letter, clear and legible, written by himself to me October 17, 1906, which fairly represents his present bodily and mental strength and the sublime faith of his heart:

"October 17, 1906.

"My Dear Brother:—Yours of the fourteenth was received yesterday. You wish me to write you a few lines with my autograph signature. Yes! I will also send you a photograph likeness, of which 100 were distributed on the day of the one hundredth anniversary of my birth. I trust this will answer your wish. The Lord is my shepherd and my refuge, and my two daughters my caretakers, so you see I shall not want. May the Lord bless you!

"Fraternally yours,
"John Schaeffer."

The story of his life would fill a large volume with interesting facts. But in a few paragraphs I will name some of the, to me, most interesting.

He was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., November 22, 1805, and to-day, November 22, 1906, he has reached the one hundred and first anniversary of his birth. At present his home is at North Benton, Ohio, and in the care of two of his daughters. He was number 12 in a family of thirteen children, nine of

Why Should We Be Thankful?

What Is There for Which I as President of the Foreign Society Should be Thankful?

For the growing interest in missions on the part of the churches; for the manifest desire for fuller information shown by the number of missionary books bought and by the number of mission study classes formed; for the cultivated and consecrated young men in and entering the ministry, eager to assist the missionary cause according to the ability God has given them; for the prospect of a new generation in sympathy with missions almost from their birth; for the great and effectual doors opened on all sides; for the opportunities of service and sacrifice such as no previous age enjoyed; for the cheering reports that come from all the fields; for the new workers who have gone out; for those who having finished their course, having entered into the life that is life indeed. Our God has done and is doing great things for us and through us. He is honoring us by permitting us to have fellowship with himself and with Jesus Christ in the greatest and holiest of all enterprises. In his service he enriches and ennobles us; he greatens our souls. As we do our duty he puts it into our power to do still more, and thus he prepares us to receive larger blessings. We are not fighting a losing battle. The sure word of promise is that all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. ARCHIBALD M'LEAN.

Things for Which a Corresponding Secretary Has to be Thankful.

For preserving me in safety while I traveled more than 20,000 miles during the missionary year. For giving me health and strength for the hardest year's work of my life. For giving me a great host of warm friends and supporters in my work, and permitting me to lay many of my burdens upon them. For giving me access to the hearts and purses of our brethren in two thousand churches, so that it was possible to raise a larger sum for home missions than in any former year.

For giving us the very best convention, with the best addresses, the best spirit, the best fellowship, the heartiest good will, the most ardent hope accorded the Home Society in many years. For driving dark clouds away from our work and making our prospects the brightest within our history. Hosts of our brethren indulge the conviction that in Home Missions we have entered upon a new era. Their belief will take an active form and thus bring it to pass. There will be a new and better era. For its advent we thank him and take courage.

Finally: For making life worth living in that he gives hard work to do and ever matches the task by the increased power of the worker. "O, let us exalt his name together." W. J. WRIGHT, Cor. Sec.

Benevolence Inspires Thankfulness.

As we come to this Thanksgiving festival, I am especially grateful that it is my privilege to represent the Benevolent Association of our great brotherhood in its effort to restore apostolic benevolence in its purity and beauty. No ministry of the church is more beautiful and Christlike and none fraught with more interest to the final triumph of the truth of God's love to the world, than this in which the church by bearing one another's burdens fulfills the law of Christ. Of all the multitudes that bring their offering of Thanksgiving to God, none have greater reason for gratitude than those who are interested in the Gospel of the Helping Hand.

We may well be thankful for the help we have been permitted to bestow upon the helpless throughout the year. We have literally fed the hungry, clothed the naked, furnished homes to homeless, and healed the sick. More than 300 parentless children have found parental care and affection, and sixty faithful old brethren have been saved the humility of pauperism and the cruel pangs of cold and hunger by the love, loyalty and service of a great church. Instead of becoming hardened under neglect and suffering they have grown sweet and grateful, invoking heaven's blessing upon their benefactors. Who would not be thankful for such a ministry?

AN ANCIENT HYMN OF PRAISE.

Te Deum Laudamus.

We praise thee, O God;
We acknowledge thee to be the Lord.
All the earth doth worship thee, the Father everlasting.
To thee all angels cry aloud;
The heavens, and all the powers therein;
To thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry—
Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabaoth;
Heaven and earth are full of the majesty of thy glory.
The glorious company of the apostles praise thee.
The goodly fellowship of the prophets praise thee.
The noble army of martyrs praise thee.
The holy Church throughout all the world doth acknowledge thee;
The Father of an infinite majesty;
Thine adorable, true and only Son;
Also the Holy Ghost, the Comforter.
Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ;
Thou art the everlasting Son of the Father.
When thou tookest upon thee to deliver man,
Thou didst humble thyself to be born of a virgin.
When thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death
Thou didst open the kingdom of heaven to all believers.
Thou sittest at the right hand of God, in the glory of the Father.
We believe that thou shalt come to be our Judge.
We therefore pray thee, help thy servants,
Whom thou hast redeemed with thy precious blood.
Make them to be numbered with thy saints, in glory everlasting.
O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage.
Govern them, and lift them up forever.
Day by day we magnify thee;
And we worship thy name ever, world without end.
Vouchsafe, O Lord, to keep us this day without sin.
O Lord, have mercy upon us, have mercy upon us.
O Lord, let thy mercy be upon us, as our trust is in thee.
O Lord, in thee have I trusted; let me never be confounded.

We are thankful for the best year in the history of the association. The donations have been larger, and have been of a better quality. They have come from a larger number of persons. More have remembered this tender ministry in their wills. Our annuity plan was more popular by far. The offerings from individuals, churches and Sunday-schools were the largest we have ever received. The total amount received for the year was $91,794.76; about $12,000 in advance of last year. As we remember the words of the Master, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," we have reason to rejoice and give thanks.

Then we have reason to be thankful for the growing interest in the mission of the association. There has never been such an interest in Christian benevolence since the days of the apostles. From everywhere over this broad land, from pulpits and pew come expressions of the warmest sympathy and heartiest approval, with pledge and promise that the Gospel of the Helping Hand shall occupy its divinely appointed place in the church. Manifestly the time is at hand when the spirit of Christ dwelling in his church shall once more move among men in sympathy and helpfulness, when the dying mother will be eased in the pains of parting by committing her babies to the bosom of the church, and when no old saint shall suffer; but when the church having loved her own will love them to the end. J. H. MOHORTER.

Why I, as a Christian Woman, am Thankful.

As a worker in the Christian Woman's Board of Missions I am thankful for the past year crowned with God's unfailing goodness, and for the present widening opportunities for service before our organization. I rejoice that work and hope and happy skies are ours, not only at this glad Thanksgiving time when autumn's gold is gathered and her harvest reaped, but in all seasons and in all service for him.

In the Thanksgiving joy for garnered harvests is the prayer that all may share the reaper's joy, that the Church of Christ may have the yearning heart of her great Captain and the divine illumination coming from a sanctified knowledge of his will. That she may be led by him to undertake with and for him the consummation of his plan—the Gospel taught in all lands and the union of all Christians. In this great work of the church we pledge ourselves to bear a part.

MRS. HELEN E. MOSES.

What Have I, as Secretary of the Board of Church Extension, to be Thankful For?

That God has seen fit to give me good health and to use me in some measure to help spread his kingdom has made me thankful every morning. I am thankful for the co-operation of my brethren in the ministry who have helped to build up a fund of nearly $600,000, and for the confidence of the churches. I treasure the confidence of my brethren in Christ more than all riches. I am profoundly grateful for the gains of last year—the first of our Centennial campaign. There was a gain of more than 25 per cent in receipts and a gain of 275 in the number of contributing churches.

I am thankful for my citizenship in a land so blest as ours, and for my membership in a brotherhood, with a plea so democratic that it is rapidly meeting the liberty-loving Americans who believe that in union there is strength.

I am, therefore, glad for the hosts of new churches that are born into this great family of God who are demanding for their housing a million dollar Church Extension fund which shall repeat itself in church-building work until the church militant shall become the church triumphant.

I rejoice in the fact that through this fund 1,027 congregations now have good church homes and that they have been so loyal in the use of this money that more than $580,000 has been returned to repeat its work and that only a few hundred dollars have been lost.

I am thankful, also, that we have over 1,200 homeless bands thus far loyal to Christ and our plea, who, though it would be easy to surrender and merge into sectarian congregations, yet will not hang their harps on the willows but who wait and work in faith and hope until that glad day when a tardy brotherhood will help them to strength and permanency with a church home.

A Day with the Rev. J. H. Jowett, M. A.

England's Greatest Preacher

By William Durban

It has been often remarked, as Lord Chesterfield said in relation to Lady Hester Stanhope, that to know some men and women is a liberal education in itself. I have certainly greatly extended my own education as years have rolled on, by my immense privileges in making the acquaintance of very many wonderfully able and highly distinguished people, belonging to different walks in life. London affords its residents incomparable advantages in this respect. For this stupendous center of civilization attracts to itself, permanently or temporarily, the vast majority of the personalities who in this and other lands have deserved and achieved celebrity. It was my good fortune not long ago to spend a whole memorable day with Mr. J. H. Jowett. This popular Birmingham minister is, not only by his own people, but also by large numbers of others, considered the very greatest preacher now living in the world. Such an expression of appreciation when very wide-spread is surely a proof of a valid title to fame. But I have never met with a more unpretending or more easily accessible man, or one more utterly unconscious of his own towering merit.

Listening to the Pulpit Music.

A sermon by Jowett is a homiletic melody of indefinable fascination. I have been perhaps all my life peculiarly susceptible to the attractions of oratory. And I am sure that this sensitiveness to the charms of real eloquence has been a deepest source of pleasure. The versatile persuasiveness of Beecher, the torrential outpourings of that "volcano in a white necktie" (when he chose to wear one), T. DeWitt Talmage, the fine philosophic sermons of Dr. Hillis, the impressive declamation of Dr. Amory Bradford, the mingling of power and delicate humour in the addresses of Z. T. Sweeney, have taught me to understand the splendor of the finest American preaching. From my boyhood onward till now such men in the English ministry as Canon Liddon, the silver-tongued orator of St. Paul's for all too brief a career, the golden-voiced Henry Melvill of years before, styled the British Chrysostom, the matchless people's preacher, C. H. Spurgeon, the glittering Paxton Hood, the erudite and elegant Dr. Alexander McLaren, the stately Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, the potent and convincing Hugh Stowell Brown, the saintly Newman Hall, the soaring Morley Punshon, the master of wonderful whispers and sublime thunders, Dr. Joseph Parker—these have all in turn enchanted my admiration and enshrined themselves in my mental Valhalla of English pulpit princes. Alas, most of these have passed away! And in England today, though the number of excellent preachers never was so great, the number of really eminent and widely popular ministers of religion never in modern days has been so small. Dr. Campbell Morgan, of Westminster Chapel, has captured the West End of London; R. J. Campbell holds great crowds at the City Temple; Archibald Brown is the greatest pulpit force in South London, as he used to be in East London; the bishop of Stepney and Canon Scott Holland draw multitudes to St. Paul's; Canon Henson, in his parliamentary parish church of St. Margaret's, Westminster, is exceedingly attractive to the fashionable class, as is Archdeacon Wilberforce when he declaims in Westminster Abbey. But these stand out from the mediocre mass of preachers. They are bright stars in the homiletic firmament, but what a small galaxy it is!

Mr. Jowett's Style.

Why do many thoughtful people place Mr. Jowett higher as a pulpit orator than any of his companions in the clerical constellation? I think I can account for the priority. He is possessed of a rare and perhaps unequalled combination of the very qualities wihch captivate hearers of the best class. Most of the great preachers excel in one or two of these characteristics, but Mr. Jowett shines in them all. He is of fine physique, but is not ponderous. He is given to natural gesture, but makes no attempt at histrionic display. He has a melodious and flexible voice, but never painfully exerts it. He is by turns impassioned, quiet, serene, excitable, pathetic, humorous, eloquent, simple, pungent, sarcastic, conciliatory and poetic. His argumentation is always somewhat declamatory, so that it never tries, but awakens the hearer to fresh interest. And his declamation is always argumentative, so that it never wearies the listener like a series of hollow thunderings. His thoughts are always expressed in the simplest possible diction, so that their crystalline clearness makes them at once apprehended. In illustration he excels perhaps all of his competitors. He plunges at one moment into classical allusions and presently takes his hearers on a flying excursion into some realm of nature. So that a sermon from this "Bishop of the Midlands" is a truly incomparable feast.

The Preacher's Views.

After hearing Mr. Jowett preach on one Sunday morning I spent the afternoon with him in conversation. The sermon was preached in Westminster, for on that day Dr. Campbell Morgan and Mr. Jowett were exchanging pulpits, the former having gone to Birmingham and the latter having come to London for that purpose. Long shall I recollect the grand utterance to which 3,000 delighted people listened. The subject was based on Matt. 16:13, "Whom do men say that I am?" The preacher dilated on the John the Baptist element, the Elijah element, the Jeremiah element in the nature of Jesus. What did the man in the street of Christ's own day think of him? Evidently Jesus was not the kind of personality that we commonly imagine. He was not by any means simply or exclusively the "gentle Jesus, meek and mild," of our popular modern conception, but was rather known to his own generation as Knox, Oliver Cromwell, and other grand, majestic, stern and terrible reformers and denunciators of iniquity were known in their days. And just because of this element of majestic righteousness in Jesus which thundered out woes on hypocrites and oppressors, he also was ineffably tender in his love and compassion. For the water that trickles forth over granite rocks is always the purest and softest. Mr. Jowett declared that the chief want of

A DOCTOR'S TRIALS

He Sometimes Gets Sick Like Other People.

Even doing good to people is hard work if you have too much of it to do.

No one knows this better than the hard-working, conscientious family doctor. He has troubles of his own—often gets caught in the rain or snow, or loses so much sleep he sometimes gets out of sorts. An overworked Ohio doctor tell his experience:

"About three years ago as the result of doing two men's work, attending a large practice and looking after the details of another business, my health broke down completely, and I was little better than a physical wreck.

"I suffered from indigestion and constipation, loss of weight and appetite, bloating and pain after meals, loss of memory and lack of nerve force for continued mental application.

"I became irritable, easily angered and despondent without cause. The heart's action became irregular and weak, with frequent attacks of palpitation during the first hour or two after retiring.

"Some Grape-Nuts and cut bananas came for lunch one day and pleased me particularly with the result. I got more satisfaction from it than from anything I had eaten for months, and on further investigation and use, adopted Grape-Nuts for my morning and evening meals, served usually with cream and a sprinkle of salt or sugar.

"My improvement was rapid and permanent in weight as well as in physical and mental endurance. In a word, I am filled with the joy of living again, and continue the daily use of Grape-Nuts for breakfast and often for the evening meal.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

One cause of thanksgiving that comes to every true heart to-day is found in the flowers. Consider the lilies; think upon them, take in their lessons. Millions of these lilies bloom in Galilee. The fine showy scarlet flowers abound everywhere. Jesus loves nature and teaches from nature, and looking upon the fields he exclaims, "Consider the lilies!" Consider the lily; it was a clod; it comes forth from the darkness; God fashions it. So he gives you life and beauty. Consider the lily; how the earth feeds it, and air fans it, and sun warms it, and heaven sends its dews upon it. Consider the lily; how it grows, from what it springs, to what it attains, how gratefully it lives and blooms and gives out its fragrance to bless the world. And from every grass blade, and every flower comes the lesson of praise and thanksgiving. Deo gratiae, "Thanks be to God," is the voice of all nature. Our word "thankful," from its Anglo-Saxon derivation, is allied to "thinkful," that is, to be thoughtful or mindful of benefits received, and thus every flower of the field seems to think, and to be of one mind with the poppy-anemones which in spring paint with bright scarlet the plains of Palestine. On a blue Monday recently I sauntered into the chrysanthemum show. It is worth a good deal to associate with these stately blooms and get their inspiration. I always go; and I preach better the next Sunday for an hour in such company. Here are the small-flowered pompons and the grotesque big-flowered Japanese sorts, the children of the Chusan daisy. Pompons are the small, flat and button-like outdoor plants, while the large, globular, Japanese blossoms are grown indoors. A single plant of the Japanese hairy type—the Mrs. Hardy—sold for $1,500 and started the American craze. Here are white flowers and golden flowers with long hairs, incurved and recurved; fantastic forms, freaks, oddities and curiosities; tubular and quilled varieties; flowers white and pink, amaranth and crimson, red and yellow, buff and bronze, and all seemingly brought to a stage of practical perfection, and growing to a height of five or six feet. What fanciful names! Golden Hair and Queen of Plumes, May Flower and Black Hawk, Good Gracious, Bronze Bride and Queen of Anemones, Golden Weddings and Silver Weddings. As my friend who shows me around is a canny Scot I am reminded by these last of the story of two old Scotch women in London during the queen's jubilee. One says to the other, "Can ye tell me, wumman, what is it they call a jubilee?" "Wele, it's this," said her neighbor, "When folk has been married twenty-five years, that's a silver wuddin', and when they have been fifty years that's a golden wuddin'. But if the mon's dead, then, it's a jubilee."

Most of the beauties, however, are named after famous women. Here is Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Donald McLean, Mrs. Mary Mann, a deep pink of ample proportions, and Miss Alice Byron, a pure white, and Mrs. Senator Knox, a bright yellow; the pure white blossom, easily told by its rotundity and the glistening brilliancy of its petals, is the Beatrice, and the bloom, with many tints that change almost as the opaline hues of the seashell, is the Oklana; Mrs. Paul Sahnt is a floral curiosity with blossoms six inches in diameter, pure white, turning to a delicate pink, and Mrs. G. M. Wilson is a creamy white with lemon center and odd-shaped petals; Amoria is exquisitely pink and round while Ethel Fitzroy has red and yellow blooms; Magenta resembles a peony, and the Dazzler, a deep crimson, blushes like a June rose. Then here are our old friends, William Jennings Bryan and the Ducrosiets, and such freaks as the Rufus and the Brutus. Many a one might be named Fido, or, for the lack of a hair cut, "The Old Man of the Sea." They are enormous, some of them, measuring twenty-three inches in circumference.

Chrysanthemums are good to eat, they say. "The Golden Flower" is the flower of the east, as the rose is the flower of the west. The Chinese minister says they make an excellent salad, these "Mums." Mr. Chentung Liang-Cheng is authority for the statement that properly prepared the big bushy blooms are esteemed a delicacy in the land of Sinim. Mr. Sinzo Aoki, Japanese ambassador, says our chrysanthemums are larger and finer than those of Nippon, "the land of the chrysanthemums." But he is a diplomat, this little brown-skinned, black-eyed man from the land of the rising sun.

But there is more for my "Blue Monday" than these chrysanthemums in the show. Here are crotons that look like green plants streaked and spotted with white or yellow paint, palms and roses and carnations. Here my friend is creating a new lettuce, and in another place he is producing a new brand of oats, and in another, coaxing a new tomato to come into being that shall be smooth on top, and be worth 25 cents more on each plant. Here he has made a new rose which he says is worth—the single plant—a round thousand. Here is an old lady plant, a spray of which every old woman in his native country takes to church in her Bible to tickle her nose during the sermon and induce wakefulness. Here is a great hothouse given over entirely to my favorite carnations. Theophrastus, 300 B. C., gave the name Dianthus, Greek Dios, divine, and anthos, a flower, to this blossom because of its delightful fragrance. Carnation, we call it, from the Latin, because of its flesh color. It is the old English "Gilly flower," and for two thousand years it has been cultivated, and they use the forceps on it as they do on the "Mums" and get nature to work it up in all forms and colors and scents. Here is the Dionaea, or "Venus Fly-trap." It is an insectiverous plant and possesses an inexplicable fancy for flies. It is a wonder of the vegetable kingdom, and grows only in the sandy savannas of North Carolina. It has a large special literature, and everybody is interested to see and test it. So it is a much overworked plant. It delights in sunshine and sighs for "Tarheels." Its peculiarity is a little trap, formed by two leaves, with a border of sawlike filaments. Your musca domestica, overcome by curiosity ventures in the

NO COFFEE
The Doctor Said.

Coffee slavery is not much different from alcohol or any other drug. But many people don't realize that coffee contains a poisonous, habit-forming drug—caffeine.

They get into the habit of using coffee, and no wonder, when some writers for respectable magazines and papers speak of coffee as "harmless."

Of course it doesn't paralyze one in a short time like alcohol, or put one to sleep like morphine, but it slowly acts on the heart, kidneys and nerves, and soon forms a drug-habit, just the same, and one that is the cause of many overlooked ailments.

"I wish to state for the benefit of other coffee slaves," writes a Vt. young lady, "What Postum Food Coffee has done for me.

"Up to a year ago I thought I could not eat my breakfast if I did not have at least 2 cups of coffee, and sometimes during the day, if very tired, I would have another cup.

"I was annoyed with indigestion, heart trouble, bad feeling in my head, and sleeplessness. Our family doctor, whom I consulted, asked me if I drank coffee. I said I did and could not get along without it.

"He told me it was the direct cause of my ailments, and advised me to drink Postum. I had no faith in it, but finally tried it. The first cup was not boiled long enough and was distasteful, and I vowed I would not drink any more.

"But after a neighbor told me to cook it longer I found Postum was much superior in flavor to my coffee. I am no longer nervous, my stomach troubles have ceased, my heart action is fine, and from 105 lbs. weight when I began Postum, I now weigh 138 lbs. I give all the credit to Postum as I did not change my other diet in any way." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

open doorway, tickles the plant as he moves around, and it closes the trap with a jerk, and proceeds leisurely to devour its delicious morsel. Another curiosity is the "Ouvirandria Fenestralis," or lace plant of Madagascar, the leaves of which grow only under water and are like the most delicate lace of intricate pattern.

But there is no end to these attractions. The cerulean hue of my day is gone. Life is full of little joys. Nature teaches everywhere the goodness and love of God. It needs only an open mind and a grateful heart to receive the gifts. Sidney Smith said: "Never give way to melancholy, resist it steadily; for the habit will encroach. I once gave a lady two and twenty receipts against melancholy. One was a bright fire; another, to remember all the pleasant things said to her; another to keep a box of sugar plums on the chimney piece and a kettle simmering on the hob. I thought this mere trifling at the moment, but have, in after-life, discovered how true it is that these little pleasures often banish melancholy better than higher and more exalted objects; and that no means ought to be thought too trifling which can oppose it, either in ourselves or in others." But I never in all my life knew a "Blue Monday." Come, let us give thanks.

England's Greatest Preacher.

our times was a recovery of the accent of righteousness and of indignation against wrong inflicted on humanity.

An Afternoon Causerie.

I sat with Mr. Jowett on the Sunday afternoon, listening to his replies to certain queries that I addressed to him. These elicited some very original expressions of his individual ideas. He believes that the pulpit, so far from being superseded by the press, or becoming effete in an age of profusely poured forth literature, is a far greater power than ever before. For there is something in the souls of men which yearns for the efficient utterance by the living voice of the deepest and most vital truths. I asked Mr. Jowett what he considered should be the attitude of the ministry towards the various movements connected with criticism and modern thought. He replied thus: "I believe that the preacher's great Master places his disciples under no obligation to blind their judgment. Our preaching must be illumined, if it is to be effective. In the matter of the public ministry there are two things which we can only divorce at our peril—light and heat. It is very easy to display heated ignorance, and it is by no means difficult to exhibit non-fertilizing knowledge. I think that the Christian minister should guard against both these perils. In the realm of learning he must see to it that his zeal is according to knowledge. "Speaking for myself," continued Mr. Jowett, "my indebtedness to modern scholarship is unspeakable. I believe that our Lord is lighting lamps all down the highway of the centuries, and the recent illuminations are by no means the least in the long succession. It may be that the critics are sometimes a little in advance of the discovered path, and I think they are on the open moorland when they may be fancying that they have found the track across. And I quite agree that all revolutionary positions should be tested with scrupulous care before being accepted; but I am not prepared to shout an alarm simply because some pioneers have been a little premature in hailing unfounded discoveries. I am too much their debtor to be their thankless critic. There are some portions of the Old Testament which in these recent days have been vitalized as Carlyle vitalized the life of Oliver Cromwell."

A Fine Exegesis.

Mr. Jowett's evening sermon was as great a masterpiece of popular pulpit oratory as the discourse of the morning. It was on Luke 21:19, "In your patience ye shall win your souls." The authorized version reads, "In your patience possess your souls." But in the revised version it is "win." Mr. Jowett quoted from a letter by the late Bishop Westcott, one of the revisors, that of all the changes in the New Testament none had given him so much joy. For it is one thing to possess a Victoria Cross, quite another to win it. It is one thing to inherit a title, quite another to earn or win it. He added that the English people had only lately shown that they possessed South Africa, but had by no means won it. A country never is won by mere annihilation of our foes. The only way to win is by conversion, not destruction. The sword is not to be annihilated, but turned into a plowshare.

Minister 80 Years—101 Years Old.

whom grew to manhood and womanhood. His grandfather, John Schaeffer, arrived in the United States from Germany in 1763. The home in Germany was at Wittenberg where the university in which Luther and Melanchthon held professorships, was established in 1502, and where the colossal statue of Luther was erected in the market place in 1821. The father, also John Schaeffer, was born in Maryland, near Hagerstown. The family resting places after their arrival in America were, first near Hagerstown, Md.; then in Pennsylvania, on both the east and west sides of the Allegheny Mountains; then in Harrison county, O., where the family lived for thirty years; then in 1847 in Iowa where, in 1853, the father of the subject of this sketch died in the ninetieth year of his age. John Schaeffer, the third, was about 12 years old when his father's family came into Ohio. They were of the real pioneers of the eastern part of the state. The family was poor, and he had few advantages to obtain an education, and he never had the advantage of a collegiate education. But he was, nevertheless, a man of fine attainments in the line of scholarship, for he was fortunate in having, after he was 20 years of age, for an instructor, Rev. John Wagenhaltz, from Germany, a gentleman in the true sense of that word. This instruction was mainly theological—the theology of the Lutheran church—though the literary feature of an education was not overlooked. Writing of that period of his life in 1872, Mr. Schaeffer said: "I studied the theology of the Lutheran church one year, after which by the influence of Mr. Wagenhaltz, I obtained, when examined, a license to preach, sprinkle infants, catechise and solemnize marriage contracts, but was denied the right of administering the Lord's supper and a voice in the synodical and ministerial sessions. This was to assist me in the prosecution of my studies for another after being examined in theology, by which I was clothed with all the ministerial functions, save a voice in the ministerial sessions, which privilege was consequent upon ordination, and by this license I was constituted a candidate for ordination, and put on probation in the ministry for three years, after which term upon examination of my orthodoxy in the Lutheran faith, I was ordained by the imposition of the hands of the ministerium to the office of a pastor. I remained with the society but one year in the capacity of a pastor. My entire stay with that religious order was five years, save two months, viz.: one year as a catechist, three years as a candidate on probation, and one year as an ordained minister or pastor. It will be noticed that in every step of his progress towards the Lutheran ministry he was carefully guarded, and he was thoroughly proved in character, ability and qualifications before he was allowed to exercise with any authority the functions of that body or go forth as the representative of the Lutheran church. Manifestly all religious bodies would act wisely if they would restrain their neophytes from plunging in and plunging out until they could tell, at least, the difference between the walls of Jericho and Jerusalem. After he was regularly ordained to the ministry he located in Lisbon, Columbia county, and served six congregations according to the arrangement for supply in that early day, on a salary of about $500. Counting from the beginning of his ministry in the Lutheran church in 1826 to 1906, his ministerial life covers the long period of eighty years. In 1834 he united with the Church of Christ at Deerfield, O., and since that time his religious associations have been with the Disciples of Christ.

By his marriage to Mary M. Hartzel, March 25, 1830, he became a member of that large and respected family of which Jonas Hartzel, the stalwart man and mighty preacher, was the most distinguished representative. His family consisted of nine children—five sons and four daughters, of which the larger number are yet living.

When he united with the Disciples or Christians at Deerfield they were in all the land a "few and feeble folk." Their special plea for the union of all Christians on the basis of the Word of God—the Bible, and no creed but the single article of faith: "I believe with all my heart that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God," had only begun to fill the air with the melody of triumphant song. Mr. Schaeffer has lived to see that plea carried into every land and the feeble few grow into multitudes.

John Schaeffer was a superior teacher rather than a great preacher. His excellent endowment of mind, his polished manners and his good education constituted him a man of priceless value in the early days of the Disciples as a teacher of the church. In his native German he was a fluent speaker. For eighty years he has been known as a preacher, though for many recent years he has done but little public work.

He has outlived all of his contemporaries save the two mentioned in the beginning of this sketch and they, though venerable, are much younger men. He stands to-day like a mountain pine alone, where once an entire forest sent their green pinnacles toward the sun and in the ecstasy of strength stood proudly against the wildest storms.

Defender of the ancient creed
  Thou lover of the shining Word!
Full many a noble Christly deed
  Will follow close on thy reward.

The Art of Reading

By James Mudge, D. D.

Many people make shipwreck on the infinite sea of printer's ink. A pilot for that ocean, a professor of books and reading, seems to be much needed. Goethe is reported to have remarked: "I have been fifty years trying to learn how to read and I have not learned yet." It may well be doubted then, if many common men can be accounted to have fully mastered this difficult art. Certainly not every one who is familiar with print knows how to read.

The immense multiplication of cheap reading matter, while commonly esteemed one of the glories of our time and land, has very serious drawbacks; and even the art of printing has not been a gift wholly unmixed with evil. It may easily become a clog on the progress of the human mind if not used with judgment and self-control. It has been said of some that they gave so much time to the minds of other men that they never found leisure to look into their own minds, and that they piled so many books upon their heads that their brains could not move. Who doubts that it was a blessing in the case of Lincoln, and some others, that they had so few books in their earlier years? Some are simply smothered by the weight of their accumulations. They do not possess their knowledge, they are possessed by it; they do not master their books, they are mastered by them. Great piles of fuel put out a little fire, though they only make a great fire burn brightly. When the mind is really on fire any and all material will feed the flame. But reading will do very little good to a mind which is sluggish, not thoroughly awake and alive and aware. Books give the mind stuff to work with—ideas, facts and sentiments—of which it is almost as bad to have too much as too little.

Advices? Rules? Yes, they can be given. No two persons would put them quite in the same way, nor would precisely the same formation be equally adapted to all. But some things in the way of counsel may, perhaps, be ventured which those at least who are immature can find profit in pondering.

Read with a relish. It is not well, as a general thing, to lay out extended courses or attempt ambitious works of many ponderous volumes, unless there be a very decided taste for exploring some especial field of research. What is taken in when the mind is aglow, when it has by some means acquired an eager appetite, when curiosity is awake, is worth many times as much as that which is placed upon a dulled palate or received from a mere sense of duty. Hence a historical novel is frequently better for a young person than a dry history. It will often stimulate inquiry so that the sober history itself becomes afterwards attractive, whereas if the latter had been presented first, the only result would have been a loathing for the whole thing.

Read with a purpose. He who works up a subject with the design of presenting it in a systematic form, in an essay or a lecture, or a newspaper article, a pamphlet, a book or a debate before some association, will take hold of it with a zeal otherwise unattainable, and will feel little fatigue after great labor. He has before him a definite end and is exceedingly stimulated by that thought. Random reading profits little, and is in most cases a mere waste of time.

Read with results. These will come only as pains are taken to digest the mental food. The mere act of reading will not be followed by lasting good any more than the mere act of eating. The voracious reader who races at express speed through whatever comes along, each volume wiping out the impression produced by its predecessor, is not a model for imitation. What is taken into the mind must be meditated upon and talked about until it becomes completely assimilated with previous stores and made one's own. The process of transformation must go on until the thoughts and facts received are no longer foreign substances, but have become incorporated with the intellectual system.

Read only what is worth reading; if, with the utmost care that precious thing can be ascertained. It needs a strong character and a resolute system to keep the head cool in the storm of literature around us. We are deluged with books, and, as to magazines and newspapers, they are without number. There are emptied upon the counters month by month whole libraries of print which are extremely unworthy to take the time of a busy man who has some respect for his brains. The wonder is, not that so few books outlive the year that gives them birth, but that they are born at all. One must be ignorant of much that is commonly talked about in order to have something in mind that is really worth talking about. The field is almost boundless and it is not surprising that many are extremely bewildered by the multiplicity of objects clamoring for a share of their attention. To find the few books that are really worth while is as difficult as to find the best companions.

Read with a pencil and make marginal notes, so that the main points may be rapidly reviewed and the mind concentrated on that which is most important. Some system of shorthand is a great help in this. "Reading with the fingers" has been called the most thorough test of active scholarship. It is no small art to know how to turn the pages of a thick volume quickly over and light easily on the exact spot where the thing wanted is to be found, picking out the valuable from the immense amount of useless verbiage that encumbers most books. Certain sections or chapters often embrace all that is really important, and it would be very foolish to feel it a duty to plod through the whole. Ordinary books contain a good deal of padding, a good deal that is very commonplace and that can just as well be omitted by one who has read widely. Much of literature is the mere pouring out of one bottle into another, the repetition in a slightly different form of what has been said over and over before. This makes the art of skipping and skimming exceedingly useful. One who has read much becomes able quite readily to get out of a new volume its real meat, its genuine contribution to the thought of the world, if it has any, to pluck out the heart of its mystery with speed, to suck its juice quickly and throw it aside like a squeezed orange. Very few books deserve prolonged study. He makes a great saving who has learned how to leap from point to point instead of painfully traversing the vast valleys of the commonplace which make up most of the pages.

The best reader is he, both thoughtful and purposeful, who reads to stimulate his mind that it may go to work on its own account to gather stores of information that he may have material to work upon, to purify his taste, improve his style, broaden his sympathies, enlarge his usefulness, and increase his power. He is glad to read quite often what he does not fully agree with that he may be roused to intellectual combat which will impart vigor to his reasoning faculties. He delights also to read very frequently those great poetical productions which expand his emotions, impart wings to his imagination and teach him both how to observe nature and how to comprehend the human heart. Such an one reads with close attention, reads a great deal aloud, reads with some system, reads with prayer and care, with patience and perseverance, for one's self and for other people, with diligence and determination, with enjoyment and exhilaration, and, while not altogether neglecting the current literature of the day (for once in a while there is a volume that has the breath of life in it), reads the solid, supreme books, the masterpieces of literature that have proved their right to be and commend themselves to us by the cumulative force of long-established prestige.

Blessings on books! They enlarge space and prolong time; they transfer us to former days and distant climes. Few men are happier than he who has both a taste for and a vocation among books. The winnowed and garnered wisdom of the past is his daily food. For him orators declaim, poets sing, and philosophers discourse. He has been made free of that rightly-named "republic of letters," that genuine republic where, without introduction or ceremony, the greatest and noblest of all ages may be met on terms of perfect equality. Fenelon said: "If the riches of both Indies, if the crowns of all the kingdoms of Europe were laid at my feet in exchange for my love of reading, I would spurn them all." Many others have said substantially the same. Next to a great university, as a means of culture, stands a great library; and even in the university the library is the central point. He who has learned how to make the best use of a large library has made excellent progress in his education.

Side-Lights on Astronomy. By Simon Newcomb, LL. D. Harper Bros. 350 pages. $2 net.

Prof. Newcomb's name on any book dealing with the general subject of astronomy is guarantee of that book's worth and best of all, he is not only a specialist with a great fund of knowledge but, like Richard Proctor, he has the gift, rare in the man of science, of popularizing abstruse subjects and bringing them in language and treatment within the range of the common man. This book stimulates the imagination while it impresses one with the grandeur of astronomical conceptions. And though it calls for the exercise of the thinking powers, it is fascinating in its attractive qualities. Interest rather than unity of thought has determined the selection of these essays contributed originally to a number of the periodicals. A prominent theme in the collection is that of the structure, extent and duration of the universe. Prof. Newcomb discusses questions of this character in the light of the most recent knowledge. And it is worth while quoting this paragraph as showing how open-minded is the true scientist and how far short he feels he is from the final knowledge: "It is a curious fact that, although they (astronomers) were never learning so fast as at the present day, yet there seems to be more to learn now than there ever was before. Great and numerous as are the unsolved problems of our science, knowledge is now advancing into regions which, a few years ago, seemed inaccessible. Where it will stop, none can say." Although mainly astronomical, a number of discussions relating to general scientific subjects have been included in the book, the closing chapter being a lucid and sane presentation of the flying machine.

Fairest Girlhood. By Margaret E. Sangster. Fleming H. Revell Co. 263 pages. $1.50 net.

Mrs. Sangster's charming style is her sweet, winsome personality woven into words. She knows girlhood—its longings and hopes, its fears and frailties, its possibilities and its defeats, and its victories. She has been a girl and she has had opportunities to study the girls of to-day as few women have, and this, with her motherly instinct, has made her their best counsellor. This book, dedicated to Miss Grace Dodge, another friend of girlhood, has been written with love in every line for all sorts and conditions of girls, and it is beautifully presented with all the fine arts of the printer and drawings by Griselda Marshall McClure.

Highways and Byways of the Mississippi Valley. By Clifton Johnson. The Macmillan Co. Pages 287. Price, $2 net.

Another volume of the "American Highways and Byways" series, which is as notable for its illustrations as it is for its charming character sketches and snap-shot descriptions. The author is a keen observer and an appreciative student of country manners and customs. He can see the greatness and pick out the oddities and he can make you see them. This is a book for the arm chair. Some of its meanderings are amid the "city behind the levee," the "land of rice and sugar," the cotton patches of Tennessee, down in Arkansas and the Ozarks, Mark Twain's country, the farms of Iowa, the prairies of Minnesota and Wisconsin and the headwaters of the great river. The half-tone illustrations are from really exceptionally artistic photographs. We can not name a more delightful gift book of this season.

Ring in the New. By Richard Whiteing. Century Company. Pages 347. Price $1.50.

Mr. Whiteing became famous almost in a day by his story "No. 5. John Street," but he was known before that book appeared to some newspaper men as a sympathetic student of social conditions in the great city of London. It may be surmised, therefore, that his latest book now before us is concerned with the living and thinking of "the other half." "Ring in the New," is the story of a young girl orphaned, unworldly, unskilled, thrown into the maelstrom of a great metropolis. What life may mean to such a girl, what it does mean to thousands of gently bred, gentle natured, incompetent working girls in London is told in this book with the solution of the problem which the heroine found. Mr. Whiteing's style would be the better were there a little more of poetry in it, but perhaps it is difficult to deal with such subjects in a poetical style. There are many bright sayings in it, many of which we would like to quote. For instance, "Most of her set are insane with the jumps—gadding about. The motor car has fixed it as the disease of the day. They never can stand still. They're all over the place on the lookout for the untried. That little study where she sits in the morning, is a sort of Clapham Junction (London railroad station) that leads to every place in the universe, a mere from and to. * * * They are all nice. I sometimes fancy they'll wriggle through with their manners at the Judgment Day." We give but one more quotation: "Both were unfortunate in their papa, as he, too, was unfortunate in his progenitors. He had never had a chance until the kindly earth took him, in a last endeavor to make him useful in his grave. It is asserted, and plausibly, that even these by-products have a certain value as manure."

Coniston. By Winston Churchill. The Macmillan Company. Price $1.50.

This is Mr. Churchill's best book. It is not his most interesting book to the young American girl. "The Crisis" or "The Crossing" have a more romantic love story as this is viewed by her of sweet sixteen. But even as a love story "Coniston" is far ahead in the real delineation of human feelings than anything Mr. Churchill has written. But the love element is a feature of "Coniston," yet it is a very subsidiary one except in its effects. It is character—character of great American womanhood, the character of rugged, untamed manhood, the despicable character of much that is allied with political ambition—that is the very soul of Mr. Churchill's presentation. There is less of the dramatic force in this book than in some of the author's productions, but it sounds a truer note and its principal figure is one that we can never forget, which can not be said of Richard Carvel and other of Mr. Churchill's characters. The book is interesting merely as a story, but as a study of political bossism it is opportune.

A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Book of Psalms. By Charles Augustus Briggs, D. D., D. Litt., and Emilie Grace Briggs, B. D. Vol. I. New York. Charles Scribner's Sons. Price, $3.00 net.

The great mass of humanity that finds itself mirrored in the sweet songs of Israel will not trouble itself about the questions discussed in this latest critical commentary on the collection of Hebrew Biblical poetry. But for the student mind this work will, no doubt, be an English standard commentary for many years. It can only be appreciated by the man who himself has a considerable knowledge of the subject and can look at it from the standpoint of a Hebrew scholar. The chief criticism that will probably be made upon it is that it is written in a critical rather than in a poetic spirit. It is the fruit of forty years of labor. Dr. Briggs acknowledges in his preface that it was, when in Berlin with Dr. Emil Rodiger, he began a critical study of the Psalms in 1867. He has probably given more study to this portion of the Bible than to any other. He has spared no pains upon the text of the Psalter and has carefully investigated its theology. He brings out the fact that the older British writers are the real fathers of much of the material for which modern Germans usually receive the credit. In this commentary the Psalms have been arranged in measured lines and a great majority of them in equal strophes. Most of the translations are based on the English official Versions. A large part of the first volume is devoted to a general introduction of the Psalms, this being divided under the subdivisions of the "Texts," "Higher Criticism," "Canonicity," and "Interpretation." This volume is marked by all the great qualities of the International Critical Commentary, of which it is a part.

A Commentary on the New Testament. By Prof. Bernhard Weiss, D. D., of the University of Berlin. Translated by Prof. George H. Schodde, Ph. D., and Prof. Epiphanius Wilson, M. A., with an introduction by James S. Riggs, D. D. Four Volumes, cloth, $12.00 net.

Prof. Weiss is too well known among New Testament scholars for any work from his pen not to receive careful attention. He is one of the least pretentious of students and one of the fairest. This work may be said to be the crowning effort of his long and crowded life, and only he who has patiently investigated the many problems which the Berlin professor traverses in these volumes can appreciate how much research and careful thinking he has done to make such clear and easy reading for the man who is wholly unlearned in matters of New Testament criticism. In fact, as Professor Seeberg, of Berlin, says, "the terseness of the master, no less than the sedateness of the erudite scholar and the unfailing tact of a man who for more than a generation has followed the calling of teacher, give his work an almost unique value." Professor Weiss is a leader of conservative yet open-minded thought. His commentary is thoroughly evangelical and is not a work about the Bible, but is one that directly introduces us into the Bible.

The Bible for Young People, arranged from the King James Version. The Century Company. New York. Price, $1.50.

The very title of this work indicates its scope and purpose. The Bible, as we have it, is, in large part, incomprehensible to the childish mind. Mrs. Giltner has put within the compass of 475 pages of easily read print the sweet and simple stories of the Bible, in the Bible language, omitting much that would be unprofitable to the childish mind. So divided is the book into subjects forming complete stories that the child will be interested in every part of it. For instance, the life of Jesus is put together in a continuous account taken from the four evangelists. Yet the language of the King James version is very largely preserved so that the great advantage of phrasing, which fixes itself on the young mind through repetition, is not lost. We are sure there is a large place this book can fill.

"When friends grow cold and the converse of intimates languishes into vapid civility and commonplace, books only continue the unaltered countenance of happier days, and cheer us with that true friendship which never deceived hope nor deserted sorrow." —Washington Irving.

The Inspiration of Our Faith. By John Watson, D. D. (Ian Maclaren.) New York. A. C. Armstrong & Son. Pages 358.

Here we have a volume of sermons from the author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." It takes its title from the first sermon, which is as unlike the usual sermon as is the rest of the volume. There are not firstlies, secondlies, and thirdlies in this book. One great thought is in the preacher's mind, and with all the wealth of literary power with which he is gifted he makes it stand out before the mind of the hearer or reader. That the book is not commonplace may be taken for granted. That it is not always according to the accepted orthodoxy of conservative thinking is also true. Take, for instance, his sermon on Conversion. It is, he says, "impossible to standardize conversion because you can not reduce human nature to a uniformity. As long as every man has his own history and ancestry and idiosyncrasies there will be many kinds of conversion. There is only one God to return to, and one Father's house, but there are innumerable far countries, and John Bunyan is not the only man who has been converted. Perhaps, the most conventional conversion is moral, when man is turned from sin to holiness. Some people are kept from God, not by worldliness or unbelief, but by the power of fleshly sins. From their childhood they have been held in the bondage of the senses and they have been the slaves of their passions. They may not have sinned in act, but they have sinned in their imagination. It does not follow that their nature is coarser; it may be richer. Their blood may not be fouler; it may be redder. A spring of water, if it be banked, will water a glen; if it run at laige it will make a morass. Their conversion will not be the destruction, but the redemption of their passion." Another form of conversion, he says, is spiritual, and it is the experience not of the publican and sinner, but of the scribe and Pharisee. He has not gone astray, as the sinners did. He has lived with God all his days, yet it is an inexplicable change when a Pharisee discovers that God is not hard and uncharitable, but that he is gracious and magnanimous. A third form of conversion, according to Dr. Watson, is intellectual, while there is another which is practical. One may be neither a sinner nor a Pharisee, and yet come short because he is doing nothing with his life. Dr. Watson is very positive when it comes to speaking of positive religion. He says that Christianity "is for every man, first, a venture, and then an experience," and that it is as positive as science. "Why," he says, "should a man not obey the conditions which Christ gave, and fulfill all conditions of obedience which he laid down? Let him suppose for the time that this Savior, who, according to testimony, has saved so many, is alive, and let him believe in him for the time, at least, as so many have believed even unto death. It is a most supreme experiment, but there are reasons for making it, and also strong hope of its success."

The Menace of Privilege. By Henry George. The Macmillan Company, New York. Pages 420. Price $1.50 net.

Here is a book marked by vigor, sincerity, and clearness. It is a study of the dangers to the Republic from the existence of the favored class, and by it the author has made a place for himself independent of all the fame of his distinguished father. It is a book of the times and for the times. Lofty in tone, there is no appeal to passion and prejudice, though the writer has very pronounced views on the questions of which he treats. The book is replete with information gleaned from many sources in an exhaustive inquiry into existing social, industrial and moral conditions. Through these the author has sought to trace relations, secret or overt, between special privilege and commercial forces that make for personal aggrandizement in the republic. We have heard much of the muck-rake. Our country has been stirred by the revelations of magazine and newspaper writers. Here is a dispassionate presentation of "how privileges granted or sanctioned by government underlie the social and political, mental or moral manifestations that appear so ominous in the republic." Mr. George sets forth princes of privilege; how they live; their amusements, disposition; marital relations. He passes on to the victims of privilege, picturing to us the physical, mental and moral deterioration. Coming to resistance to privilege he writes of the organization of laborers and the dangers of unionism. There is a division on the weapons of privilege, and another on privilege as the corrupter of politics. Its influence over public opinion is discussed. Here the press, the university, and the pulpit are arraigned for their bondage to privilege. The last chapters of the book discuss the centralization of government, foreign aggression, civilizations gone before, and finally Mr. George states his remedy. He says we must first abolish private ownership of natural opportunities; second, abolish tariff, and third, taxation of production and on its fruits, thereby abolishing special government grants, such as public service charters; fourth, abolish grants under general laws and immunities in the courts, such as the New Jersey corporations, the great insurance corporations, etc. We cannot say that we accept all Mr. George's interpretations of the facts which he presents, but we can recognize the value of his book, and the sincere effort which its writer has made to deal with a question that is of paramount interest in this Republic.

The Philosophy of Christian Experience. By Henry W. Clark, author of "Meaning and Methods of the Spiritual Life." "The Christ from Without and Within," etc., etc. With an appreciation by Marcus Dods, D. D. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1.25 net.

This book has received very strong commendation from men who have a right to be heard with respect to theological questions. It is one of a class which just now seems to have a prominent place in religious literature. The Inductive method is undoubtedly the true method of investigation with respect to both nature and the Bible, but it is a method which must be handled carefully, or it will lead to destructive conclusions.

The subject of this volume is of vital importance. At least the latter part of the subject is, for undoubtedly "Christian experience" is vital in any Christian life that is worth consideration at all. It may be that we may never understand the philosophy of this experience, and doubtless very few will attain to this knowledge, but even the few will have comfort in the understanding which they may reach.

The literary style of the book is not to be commended. This is often rudely constructed, and is frequently so involved as to lead to obscurity. But the book is well worth reading very carefully, as it is, in its thought, frequently very suggestive. The author's treatment of the Fatherhood of God is an attempted irenicon between the two extreme views on that subject. He rather leans to the idea that sonship is potential rather than a real thing in the case of those who are not Christians. The following extract will give some idea of the author's style as well as the position for which he contends:

"Following this line of thinking, we reach a reconciliation of ideas which appear superficially irreconcilable, and find it a clear truth that the God who is or may be Father is the God who may also become the judge. As has been already said, the Fatherhood of God is truly fulfilled only for those who will on their side assume the attitude of self-affiliation, and who thus allow all that they are to be moment by moment born from what God himself is. God's love—God's eternal readiness for self-communication—passes into actual Fatherhood for those who let it have its way. But it is the correlative of this—it is, from this standpoint, a perfectly natural thing—that to the resisters the love which, had there been yielding in place of resistance, might have fulfilled itself as Fatherhood, should become a disturbing, even in a most real sense a hostile, influence instead. And man needs to remember, whenever the spiritual problem of his nature presents itself or is suggested to his thought, that just because God in his love has provided the solution for it, a refusal of the love-provided solution must turn God into a foe. God's enmity is but God's arrested love."

The reader will notice the clumsy style in this quotation and he will also not fail to see the want of clearness to which attention has already been called. The one thing for which the book should be most highly commended is its ringing advocacy of a close fellowship with God. The author urges that we must become "God-intoxicated," and that this will follow when we allow God to come into the quietude of our minds and hearts and there show himself as he is. The plea that we should get away from the rattle of wheels, the commercial friction, the rush and noise of the multitude into the quiet hour where we can hear the "still small voice" and come into possession of real power, for true living, is a plea which is becoming more and more a necessity of the present days. The reading of this book will help many souls to a higher and truer life.

The Epistles of St. Peter. By J. H. Jowett. New York. A. C. Armstrong & Son. Pages 345. Price, $1.25 net.

This is another volume of the practical commentary on the New Testament edited by Dr. Robertson Nicoll. Mr. Jowett is one of the foremost preachers of the British pulpit to-day, and is the successor of the famous theologian, Dr. Dale. There is as much difference, however, between Jowett and Dale as there is between R. J. Campbell and Dr. Parker, whom he has succeeded. Mr. Jowett is not so much a theologian as he is an expositor and a preacher. He is alive to the modern teaching, yet retains a healthy conservatism of judgment. He is fully devoted to Jesus Christ, and seeks to bring every thought into captivity to him. His book on the Epistles of St. Peter is an eminently worthy one.

Studies in the Book of Psalms. By Lincoln Hulley, Ph. D., president of John B. Stetson University, DeLand, Florida. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto. $1 net.

The substance of these lectures was first given at a number of chautauquas and summer schools, and in response to many requests has been published in this form with much added comment by the author. These studies begin with a description of Hebrew poetry in general and then take up the Psalter as a "Book of Life." This is followed by a list of titles of the several psalms, and then a chapter is given to the "Traditional Setting of Some of the Psalms," pointing out the circumstances under which they were written. The book of Psalms is then divided into "Fifteen Psalm Groups," such as "The Messianic Psalms," "The Imprecatory Psalms," "Pilgrim Psalms," etc. Several of the individual psalms are taken up, analyzed, and treated most helpfully. On the whole, it is the most sympathetic, appreciative and illuminating study of this devotional book of the Old Testament which we have seen, and we can heartily commend the work to those who would like to make a special study of this remarkable collection of Hebrew poetry, which maintains, and ever will maintain, its hold upon the human heart.

Keywords in the Teaching of Jesus. By A. T. Robertson, D. D., Professor of New Testament Interpretation in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. Philadelphia. American Baptist Publication Society. 1906. Price, 75 cents.

The seven chapters forming this little volume were delivered first as lectures to the Jackson Springs Summer Assembly under the auspices of the Baptist State Convention of North Carolina in 1904. The following themes are discussed: God, the Father; The Son; Sin; The Kingdom; The Holy Spirit; The Future Life. The treatment of these important questions, while not strikingly brilliant, is safe and enlightened. It may be described further as conservative and yet in the light of modern scholarship. The publishers have done well to give these lectures to the public in their present form, and their circulation and careful reading cannot but accomplish good.

Putting the Most Into Life. By Booker T. Washington, author of "Up From Slavery." New York. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. Price 75 cents.

Mr. Washington, who is Principal of the Tuskegee Institute, is in the habit of delivering Sunday evening talks to the students of the institute on practical, moral and religious questions, and a number of these have been prepared for publication in this little volume. They are in Mr. Washington's characteristic style, clear, pointed, and practical, and, while they are especially adapted to his own race, are not without application to all students and young people. Here is a sentiment, for instance, that is applicable to all people:

"All industrial operations and material progress should be used not as ends but as means of making life more comfortable, more useful and more beautiful. The intelligent farmer as he plants and works and harvests the cotton must remember that the production of cotton is not the end of his effort. Every bale of cotton can be turned into books, into opportunities for travel and study. The man who grows corn must remember that that growing of corn is not the end of life, but that the corn can be turned into refinements and beauties of a civilized life and a Christian home."

The book is put up in artistic form and embraces six of these Sunday Evening Talks.

Two Minute Talks. Short Discussions of Long Themes. By Amos R. Wells. American Tract Society, New York.

Whatever Amos R. Wells writes is well worth reading. We know of few men who possess his rare power of condensation, of seizing the salient points of a subject and stating them clearly in terse, vigorous English. This little volume of less than 200 pages has nearly half as many chapters, or different subjects, all of which are wisely stated and aptly illustrated. It is a splendid treasury of thoughts for Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor workers, and for ministers of the Gospel as well.

The Evolution of a Christian. By David James Burrell, D. D., L. L. D., Minister of Marble Collegiate Church, New York. The American Tract Society, 150 Nassau street, New York.

This volume by Dr. Burrell was prepared in response to a request of the editor of the Christian Herald, New York, to prepare for publication "A plain statement of the steps to the Christian life." These are strong chapters, of course, for Dr. Burrell is a strong writer. We notice, however, in the opening chapter on "How to Begin" that same vagueness which has proved such a bar to successful evangelism among many of the great Protestant bodies. Faith, according to this author, is to believe certain things about Jesus, and it alone saves; but that it is faith in Jesus Christ himself as the Son of God, and involves the actual acceptance of Christ, and surrender to him in a definite confessional act, is not made clear. Many of the other chapters, however, are excellent, as those on "How to Hear," "How to Grow," "Character," "Imitation of Christ," etc.

Tarbell's Teachers' Guide to the International Sunday School Lessons for 1907. By Martha Tarbell, Ph. D. Indianapolis. Bobbs-Merrill Company, publishers.

A glance through this volume indicates that it is an up-to-date treatment of the Sunday-school lessons, the order being: The Bible Text: Words and Phrases Explained; Suggestive Thoughts from Helpful Writers; Light from Oriental Life. This is followed with: "Suggestions for Teaching the Lesson; Three Lesson Thoughts with Illustrations; Sentence Sermons; The Bible Its Own Interpreter." The work opens with an "Analysis of the First Nine Books of the Bible" and contains illustrations, maps, diagrams, reproductions of ancient mural decorations by Dore, Tissot, and other modern artists.

The Self-Cure of Consumption. By C. H. S. Davis, M. D. Ph. D. New York. E. B. Treat and Co. Pages 175. Price 75 cents.

We can cordially commend this little book, dealing with the White Plague. Consumption carries off perhaps more people than all other diseases in the United States combined. That we should seriously study its prevention and cure is a duty imposed upon every citizen, whether he be infected or not. It is said that the annual expense of consumption to the people of the United States is placed at $330,000,000, and there are over 150,000 deaths each year. The writer of this book, and many others, believe that there is not a shadow of a doubt but that consumption can be practically stamped out. He discusses its causes, symptoms, and treatment with drugs. He realized that good results in a great majority of instances rest upon the institution of the correct treatment in the incipiency of the disease. The open-air treatment, and the use of proper diet are the points upon which he lays the greatest emphasis in the cure. The book is just a statement of the case, with some common-sense advice as to how to deal with it.

Students and the Modern Missionary Crusade. New York. Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, 3 W. Twenty-ninth street. Pages 773. Price $1.50.

This large-size book contains a verbatim report of the addresses delivered at the Fifth International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions at Nashville, Tenn., February 28, to March 4, 1906. The informal discussions and questions of the various sessions are also reprinted substantially as they were uttered. Condensation has been somewhat more conspicuous in the case of the sectional meetings. The introductory statement of the chairmen of the various meetings, and the prayers offered are omitted, while the denominational rallies are entirely unreported. As it is, the book is large enough, and it is packed with matter of great value to the student missions. We consider the convention held at Nashville as the most important meeting held this year in our country. We regretted exceedingly at the time of the convention that we were able to give so inadequate a report of its proceedings owing to the great pressure on our columns at that time. It was worth going all the way to Nashville to hear such a speech as that by Mr. Robert E. Speer, on "The Non-Christian Religions Inadequate to Meet the Needs of Men." And it would do every religious editor good to have been brought in touch with the viewpoint of such a secular editor as Mr. J. C. MacDonald, of the Toronto Globe. We cannot attempt to give a detailed survey of the contents of this book, but cordially commend it to every student of missions whether at home or abroad.

Jehovah's War Against False Gods, and Other Addresses. By J. M. Atwater. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis.

The many friends of the late Prof. Atwater will welcome this volume selected from his public addresses and writings. They have been selected with excellent judgment, and give the reader a worthy insight into the mind and heart of this well-known teacher and preacher. The old students of Hiram College will be especially delighted with the address on "Hiram Ideals of Life and Character;" and every admirer of the martyr President Garfield will be thankful for the chapter in which Mr. Atwater gives some personal memories of that great and eminent American. The volume is well printed and bound, and can be commended in every way to those who would renew their acquaintance with him from whom they have in past years received instruction and inspiration; or those who, having never known him in life, would desire to enjoy clear expositions of Scripture, and practical and helpful suggestions as to the meaning and sacredness of life.

Love Purified. By Celesta Ball May. Chicago. Christian Century Company. 1906. Price. $1.

This beautifully printed and illustrated little volume of poems is from the hand and heart of one who has a real poetic nature which has been sanctified by Christian faith and devoted to high and worthy ends. The volume takes its name from the first poem which is a story in verse of one soul that was purified by affliction, but it contains a number of other poems all of which breathe the noblest sentiments and manifest the true poetic insight into nature and life. The gifted author, Mrs. Celesta Ball May is a resident of Blackwell, Okla., and an active member of the Christian church. Oklahoma is to be congratulated in having on her soil a poetess of such distinguished ability, and we can but wish for the volume a sale commensurate with its merits. The Christian Publishing Company will be glad to furnish this book to any of its patrons at the retail price of $1.

Hughes' Key to the Revelation of Jesus Christ. Paragraphed with proper headings and illustrated diagrams and an address on "The Apostolate of the Revelation," by Jasper Seaton Hughes, author of "Mystery of the Golden Cloth," the book on the Revelation. 1906. Price, 50 cents.

It is known to our readers generally that the author of this Key has been devoting special study to the last book of the New Testament for many years. His work on the "Mystery of the Golden Cloth" has, no doubt, been read by many of our readers. This key to the same book is intended to make it easy for the ordinary Bible student to unlock the mystery of the book and to understand its great and inspiring lessons. The view of Revelation herein presented is, so far as we know, absolutely original with the author and commends itself very strongly to minds that are open for truth. It is scarcely too much to say that every serious student of this wonderful book of the New Testament can not afford to do without the help that is offered in this little volume. The author has made a distinct and most valuable contribution to the right understanding, as we believe, of this much-misunderstood book. In this day of a revival of interest in Bible study, and a study, too, to get at the real meaning of the inspired writers, we should be surprised if this little book did not have a large sale. We cordially commend it to all Bible students and especially to the students of this particular book.

Unto Us a Son is Given; A Christmas Carol. By E. L. Allen, author of "The Power of His Resurrection", "Pentecost", etc. Pittsburg, Pa. A. W. McCloy & Co., publishers. 1906. Price $1.00.

The birth of Christ will never cease to call forth the highest and holiest thoughts in the human mind and heart and to clothe them in purest literary form. Each age and generation makes its own contribution to the growing literature of the Nativity. This Christmas Carol by Brother Allen is one of the ablest of these offerings of adoration to the new-born King. It is, indeed, a great poem, conceived in the spirit of reverence and devotion and tremulous with the joy and with the holy awe inspired by the same great event which inspired the angels' song. It is beautifully printed and illustrated, and deserves wide reading both on account of its literary excellence and for the life and joy which pulse through all its pages. Address the publishers as above, or Christian Publishing Company. We shall be glad to furnish it to readers at the publishers' price.

"THE CHURCH OF CHRIST," by a layman. Christian Publishing Co. Price, $1.

This lay writer is distinguished by three things. He has soul saneness and simplicity of expression. The book is good literature then; for all literature has been described "as the best thoughts of the best writers in a manner to arouse emotion." "Nothing noble is ever born except in a passion." You are convinced before you read two pages of this book that the author has a deep conviction and his soul burns to tell the message. The first chapter is worth ten times the price of the book. It is on the "Newness of Christianity." He emphasizes the completeness and the originality of Christ's Gospel in a fashion that is at once unique and exhaustive. It is adapted, he says, as the only religion of the universal human heart.

The writer's next point is that it is new in its teaching concerning the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men. He has no faith in the "Carpenter" theory of the universe. He makes God eternally active in the world. He is the very life of the universe and infinite love is at the heart of it. So he makes Jesus teach. He quotes Max Muller in proof. He says, "that no such word as 'mankind' is found in human langauge before Christ—that there is nothing in human language to express the kinship of the race. Before Christ it was Egyptian, Mede, Persian, Grecian, Roman, Scythian, barbarian, bond and free, but no word to express the kinship of man."

It seems that no civilization ever existed before the Christian that learned the relation of one man to another and the relation of both to God. Jesus he claims was the first to put men in right relation to world and to God and their fellowmen. The argument on this point is very strong. There is a great sermon here for the live preacher on: "What is Christianity?" He continues in this fashion: "The Christian religion alone teaches humility as the road to greatness. 'He that is greatest among you shall be your servant.' He emphasizes the originality of all this."

He points out that the religion of Jesus is positive. Repression is not its highest note, but service. The Christian method is not mutilation, but consecration. "Jesus, while restraining wrong, taught active goodness." Man must bear fruit. Jesus preached louder than any one on earth "good works." Once more: The Christian religion goes below the surface. It nips the rising thought in the bud. Its author makes the "intent" sinful. It alone can cleanse and transform the heart.

Furthermore, it is missionary. This alone is the dignity of all life inspired by the Master. "Christianity alone, of all religions, seems to possess the power of keeping abreast with the advancing civilization of the world. . . . It alone, of all the religions of mankind, has been capable of accompanying man in his progress from evil to good, from good to better." He holds that neither the Jewish nor the heathen religions are missionary. Christianity, in a word, "is alone swaying the world's destiny for nineteen hundred years, blessing and cheering the living, comforting the dying, and giving hope of eternal life beyond the grave." This has been a new world since Christ has been here. "All history is mystery without his story." In the same unique, fresh and original way he treats "The Kingdom of Heaven," "Preliminary Manifestations," "Christ as a Teacher," "Christ as the Word of God," "The Passion of Christ," "The Three Revelations," "The Church," "The Day of Pentecost," "The New Testament Scriptures," "The Great Salvation," "The Apostles' Preaching," "The Seven Chosen," "Miracles," (This is a great chapter.) "Conversions," "Saul and his Conversion," "Work of the Apostle Paul," "Call of the Gentiles," "What Shall I Do to be Saved?" "Operations of the Spirit," "Missionary Work of the Church," "The First Council," "The Decree of the Council," "Paul at Philippi," "The Thessalonians," "Opposition to Paul," "Paul at Athens," "Paul at Corinth," "The Prisoner of the Lord." In a second book and in the same volume he has short chapters on: "The Assurance of Pardon," "The Proof of Pardon," "The Church of Christ," "Church Ordinances," "The Church Complete," "The Apostasy," "Christian Unity," "What is Implied by Unity?" "Nature of Division," "Denominationalism," "The Uniqueness of Jesus."

The Work of the Women

By Ida W. Harrison

Orphanage Girls at Dinner, Deoghur, India.

On the first Sunday in December, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions not only asks for a presentation of its work and an offering for its support from auxiliaries, but from all the churches of our brotherhood. It has been said that because our board has its own constituency of women and children, who pay a stated sum into its treasury annually, that they should not ask for a collection from the churches at large like our other missionary, educational and benevolent organizations. The annual dues of 10 cents a month from our women and 5 cents a month from our children last year amounted to a little less than $75,000—our expenditures for our various enterprises in that time reached the sum of more than $200,000; so it can be seen that the yearly membership dues do not half cover the yearly expense. Though the women who belong to our societies are generally the active women in the churches, who make offerings to the other organizations on their annual days—so they are also the constituency of the Foreign Society, the American Society of Church Extension, and of all our agencies for doing good.

As long as our enterprises were few and our expenses comparatively small, the offerings of our members were sufficient to support them; but now that they have grown until we labor in five foreign countries with 195 workers in our employ there, and in 39 states and territories in our own land, with a total of 363 workers at home and abroad, the day of support by membership dues has passed.

While much of the growth in our work has come because our Father has prospered us, a large increase has also come because our brethren have felt such confidence in the business principles and economical management of our board that they have turned over some important departments of this work to us. The first of our missions, the Jamaica work, was begun by the American Society, and given to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. In 1900, the work of negro evangelization and education was transferred from that society to ours—and in 1905, the evangelistic work in Porto Rico was also given to our board. The educational work in Eastern Kentucky was passed over to us by our good brethren—and the same has been done in less conspicuous instances. Should these splendid enterprises fail of assistance from our churches, merely because they have passed from one board to another?

There is no problem that looms larger on our national horizon than the race problem—what shall we do for these more than nine millions of negroes in our midst? Their presence here, while it is one of our great burdens, is also one of our great opportunities; it is our chance to minister to the heathen at our very doors. Our mission in the Appalachian Mountain region asks for help from us. It has been shown that the intermittent evangelism practiced by the churches has not resulted in changing ideals of conduct there. The best solution of the mountain problem is Christian education—the mission school with enough money back of it to give good teachers, good equipment, and the necessary help to the worthy poor, is the hope for the permanent uplift of this great and needy section of our country. Those islands at our doors, Porto Rico and Jamaica, have rights to assistance at our hands. The only work being done by our church for them, for educational work in our great mountain section, for the training and teaching of the negro, is being done by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Certainly, the church at large desires fellowship in these noble undertakings, and they can do so by contributing to the offering on C. W. B. M. day.

In addition to this work, bequeathed to us by our brethren, our board has entered certain other fields of its own initiation, where no other agencies of our church labor—in Mexico, in South America, in Oriental work on the Pacific coast, in our Bible chairs at State Universities, and in other lines of work that I cannot pause to mention.

We trust that many besides the women in our membership will share in the support of the great work that has been committed to us on the first Sunday in December—and that churches which have no auxiliary to our board will count it an accepted time and a choice privilege to have fellowship with us in this gracious ministry.

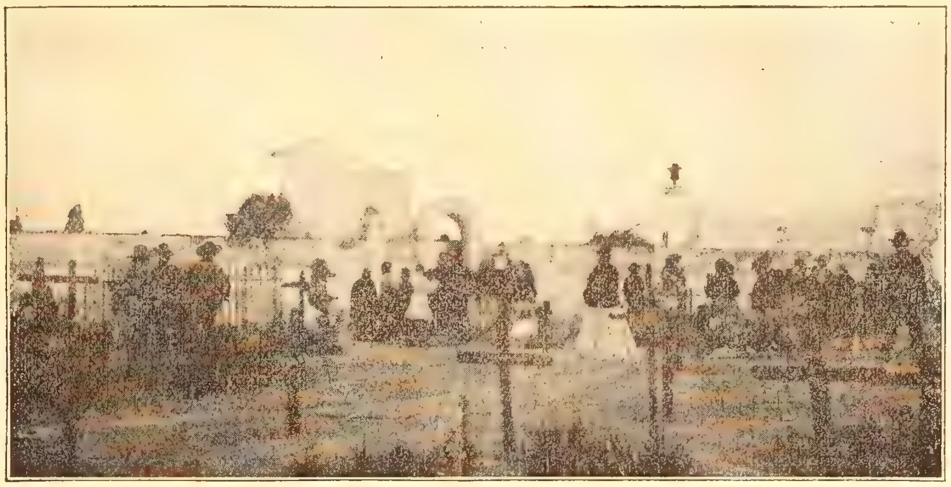
The Old and the New in Mexico

By Jasper T. Moses

Two photographs that I took recently seem to me to be fairly typical of the old and of the new Mexico. The first was taken on "All Souls' Day" at the common cemetery. It is a view looking from the spot where lies all that is earthly of our martyr missionary, A. G. Alderman. All around are the bare black crosses, grim and hopeless, rising out of the sterile ground as if to mock the resurrection hope. The scene is typical of the barren lives, the coldness and neglect that mark the old regime in Mexico. You can almost see the undertaker as, with indecent haste, he whips up his bony horse and the rude wagon jolts over the stony streets, carrying the rough pine box with its once human freight. We hear the rasping tones of the priest as he haggles with the bereaved ones for a higher fee than they are able to pay, and finally ungraciously takes what he can get or hurries off with a contemptuous shrug of his shoulders. If the service is read at all, it is rushed through in a mumbling undertone that seems less gracious than its omission. To cap the climax, if the family is very poor, the body is dumped from its coffin and the undertaker hurries off with the box, to use it over again and perhaps again.



Cemetery, Monterey, Mexico. The Grave of A. G. Alderman is in the Center of the Foreground.

Making Bread (tortillas), Mexico.

The other picture that I have is one taken from my bedroom window looking out on our school playground. How happy and animated is the scene! Here are the boys and girls who are to make this a new Mexico. Do you suppose that after they have spent six years amid happy Christian surroundings, where both their minds and souls have been trained and uplifted they will ever be content to abide such scenes as the one we first presented?

The Mexican people have in them many of the elements of a great nation. Considering the limitations of environment and heredity, it is doubtful if any people have made greater progress in the last quarter of a century. Regarded in some ways, Mexico's great lower class, which we Americans are apt to look down upon, is an economic blessing to the country. No work is too hard nor too menial for the peon. He is more easily made content than even the negro, and is in many ways as good a workman. He has, moreover, the inestimable advantage of being able to rise above his condition. There is no barrier to his social or political advancement except his own ambition and ability. Thus we see that Mexico is free from that great and appalling problem of the American nation, the race question. Some of the greatest of Mexico's statesmen have risen from the Indian class.

Mexico is in a fair way to the solution of her political and industrial problems. She is making a fair beginning in education; but to throw off the shackles of Romanism and to emerge into the glorious freedom of the Gospel is a thing not to be accomplished in a day. This is Mexico's real problem of problems. Were this in a fair way of solution, all else would be simple.

We believe that the best way to overcome and to counteract a bad environment is to supply a better one. This is what we are trying to do in our educational work in Mexico. We have found that no other ally of the Church is to be compared in efficiency with the school. Not only does it give us access to the pupils and an influence for good over them, but it opens unto us their homes, and it gives us standing and respect in the community. But this is only the beginning. The young man or woman who graduates from a Christian school will make a far more efficient and thorough-going disciple of Christ than could his ignorant father or mother. We are not only recruiting for the Church in the present, but we are building for her future as well.

Our one school in Monterey is doing all that could be expected of it under present conditions, but we must enlarge or lose our opportunity. We must have a new dormitory for boarding students, or the work will suffer. Our other stations are calling for schools, and the need in them is as great as it was in Monterey. We dare not let them go long without answering this pressing need. To-day is the day for action in Mexico. To-morrow our opportunity may have passed.

The Day of Salvation and C. W. B. M. Day

By W. M. Forrest

Because the day of salvation has come nigh unto the hearts and homes of our women they desire to observe C. W. B. M. day. They would not be worthy of that salvation if they did not have such a desire. Nor would the men in our pulpits and pews be worthy of such women as the grace of our God has made possible, if they were not anxious to help those women in the celebration of that day.

C. W. B. M. day affords an opportunity to express our gratitude to God for his great salvation. It is the call of the womanhood of our churches to the whole church. In every other work and offering of the year they have had a large share; now at the year's end they call upon men as well as women to help them celebrate their day. The occasion and the object are too important to be crowded into some time and place where all the church cannot be present to hear and to help.

Not only is it a day wherein we are to rejoice and be glad because of the salvation that has come unto us. It is a day that is to make possible the extension of that same salvation unto others. Therein is found its deepest significance and paramount importance. We meet not to thank God that we and our wives and daughters are not as other men and women. Rather do we meet to thank him for the opportunity to help extend the blessings of the day of salvation to others. How many, alas, even in our own land, have not yet seen the dawning of that day. And how great is the multitude in distant lands whose weary eyes have never caught the first glint of light heralding the coming of the day of our Lord.

There is India, for instance. It is claimed that even yet nine-tenths of its 300,000,000 people have never heard of Christ in a way that could make them responsible for rejecting him. About half of that 300,000,000 people are women and girls, too. Never yet have they been touched by the power which of old made pagan people cry, "What women these Christians have!" To this hour they are shackled and bound by the slavery and vice wherewith heathenism has been wont to curse its womanhood. In the pains and perils of motherhood the great physician has not been with them. When the sons of their land have been cruel to them the son of Mary has not come to comfort them. Through the long years of their bitter widowhood, and in the dread hour of death, he who wept with Mary, and said to his sorrowing disciples, "Let not your heart be troubled," and proclaimed for the dying and the dead, "I am the resurrection and the life"—he has not been known unto them.

Then bring an offering, all ye people of the Lord, and come into his courts to praise him. Yes, bring such an offering that the sheen of its gold shall shine afar in the rising of the Sun of Righteousness in benighted lands. And praise him in such wise that we shall speed the day when from the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same his name shall be glorious among all nations. Thus will the coming of the day of salvation for all peoples be hastened by the observance of C. W. B. M. day.

The Theology of Alexander Campbell

By W. E. Garrison

Mr. Campbell had a theology. His was an orderly and systematic type of mind which formed clear-cut conceptions and grouped them according to their relations. If such a mind gives its attention to plants, the result is botany; or if to animal life, zoology; or if to the great truths about God and man and their relations, the outcome is theology. This is equally true whether the material for the science is derived from experience or from books, from speculation or from Scripture.

Most, if not all, Protestant theologians have attempted to formulate a Biblical theology. Philosophy and (as we say) human speculation have had great influence in fixing the doctrines, but the results have always been validated, to the speculator's entire satisfaction, by an appeal to Scripture. With Mr. Campbell the appeal to Scripture was so constant, his criticism of his own previously held doctrines was so searching, and his rejection of his own former beliefs when they were seen to be out of harmony with Biblical teaching, was so unflinching, that it is impossible to doubt the sincerity of his effort to construct a purely Biblical system.

Every thinker whose brain is large enough to hold two ideas at a time finds it necessary to secure harmony between his theology and his general view of the world as he has obtained it through phy. If a man's personal experiences phy. If a man's personal experiences and deepest thinking have convinced him that this is the worst of all possible worlds, and that man is the victim of the higher powers, no amount of zeal for faithful exegesis can prevent him from having a gloomy and pessimistic theology. The text, "God is love," simply cannot become a part of such a man's system though he may profess belief in it.

Mr. Campbell was in touch with the philosophy which was dominant in England in his time—the philosophy of John Locke. It was not the latest word of philosophy up to that date, but it was the latest philosophy that orthodox persons could comfortably accept. Hume was chiefly valuable as a horrible example. Kant was still considered dangerous and the later Germans, Hegel and his contemporaries, were still doing their work and were scarcely yet known in England or America. So Locke's influence was still dominant.

The philosophy of Locke dealt not chiefly with the problem of the nature of ultimate reality (metaphysics) or the principles of human duty (ethics), but chiefly with the problem of knowledge. Assuming that real things exist external to man, and that man and the world are about what they seem to be, how does man arrive at a true knowledge of reality? That was Locke's problem. His answer was that man gets all his materials for knowledge through sensation and organizes these materials into knowledge through reflection. Nothing is innate. Nothing is mystical or mysterious. Only what comes into the mind through the strait gates of seeing, hearing and touching is the honest stuff of knowledge. All else is delusion and fantasy.

This was the theory of knowledge

The Perfect Bible is the
American Standard Bible
Edited by the American Revision Committee
Why is it the People's Bible?
One need not be a scholar to understand the American Standard Bible, although it required many scholars to produce it.
Its accuracy, clearness and simplicity make it eminently the people's Bible. Every stumbling block to the perfect understanding of the word has been removed, so far as lay within the power of the wisest Christian scholarship.

GET THE BEST.

which Mr. Campbell accepted. He was chiefly interested in applying it to the question of religious knowledge. How does man get his knowledge of the world? Through sensation. How does he get his knowledge of God and of the will of God and of the way of salvation and of the fact of forgiveness? Through sensation. It is not a question of emotion, or conscience, or inner light, or any sort of private mystical communication from the spirit of God to the spirit of man, but simply a question of information conveyed through the ordinary channels of the senses.

But how could man, by his senses, apprehend God? In the days of revelation, God appeared visibly and spoke audibly to men. So the inspiration of the Biblical writers was a special and miraculous extension of their sense-perceptions, or a special act of God by which things ordinarily unknowable (because beyond reach of the senses), were brought into the field of knowledge by being brought temporarily within the scope of the senses.

But this process of special revelation is a thing of the past and we are again living in a world where God is utterly unknowable. What saves us then from complete agnosticism? One thing only—the fact that these men of old, who had divine things brought within the range of their senses, left a written record of what was revealed to them. And though we cannot, by sight or hearing, know directly the nature or the will of God, we can, by the exercise of our senses, learn what is written in this record. The record of revelation forms an object for sense perception and through it alone, therefore (without violating the Lockian psychology and theory of knowledge) man can arrive at any idea of God.

From this general view of the process by which man gets knowledge and especially knowledge of God, the working out of certain other positions followed naturally and inevitably.

1. A strict construction view of religious authority, that is, the authority of Scripture.

2. An emphasis (theoretically at least) on the knowing process, almost to the exclusion of the emotional process in religion.

3. A view of faith as the acceptance of the testimony of witnesses concerning matters of which we can never have first-hand knowledge.

4. The elimination of all mystical influences and mysterious emotional communications from God to man, whether in conversion or in giving assurance of forgiveness, or in the nature and guidance of the Christian after conversion.

The great value and strength of this type of theology was its clear, comprehensible and practical nature. It offered men something to believe on evidence, and something to do upon command. Faith in Christ as Saviour was made to appear as easy and natural and normal as belief in George Washington as the first president. In both cases it was merely a question of apprehending the testimony through the senses and digesting it through reflection.

For the time in which it was done, this was an inestimable service. It saved from the torments of uncertainty thousands of persons who were, by temperament, so unimaginative, or so unemotional, or so purely intellectual as to be incapable of being convinced of religious truth by any other than historical evidence. It reduced conversion to a rational process. It convinced men that faith and salvation were within their reach whenever they chose to lay hold upon them by the exercise of the ordinary human powers, which God had given to all men. Although the philosophy from which it sprang has long since ceased to be current and the Lockian theory of knowledge no longer commands the allegiance of the thinking world, these results—the clearing of the air from unwholesome mysticism and vague emotionalism and making the apprehension of religion a normal human process—have remained as an imperishable contribution to the present and the future.

Where Thomas Campbell Preached His Last Sermon in Ireland

By James Small

Six miles from Markethill, a little town of a few thousand people, in County Armagh, is the Lowland of Aghorey, and here in the open country stands this old Presbyterian church erected over a hundred years ago. The present minister, Mr. Kirkpatrick, who stands in the doorway of his "Manse," has been the faithful and honored minister for over fifty years. The Editors of The Christian-Evangelist have had special pictures taken of the old church, session house, and manse there and asked me to write of these which I visited six years ago. This church is only sixty miles from my old home over there. In my conversation with Mr. Kirkpatrick I found out that Mr. Campbell was well and favorably remembered in the community by the old settlers. Some of them remember well his last sermon, which was founded on the words. "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem thou that killest the prophets. * * * How often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth her brood under her wings, but ye would not."

They remembered until even then the strong plea to awaken men to the higher interests of time and eternity. There were funerals, he said, over which angels only wept and deaths witnessed only by God. Jerusalem was dead in faith, in religion and men were in that house in the same condition. Mr. Kirkpatrick took me through the graveyard and showed me the graves of many who were once members of Campbell's congregation. The only knowledge this good old man had of Mr. Campbell was that he had gone to America and there organized a Baptist "sect" (?).

The Church in Ireland where Thomas Campbell Preached.

He listened attentively to the work accomplished by the Campbells as I tried to unfold it to him and remarked that he could agree to nine-tenths of it all himself. He said that the old "fatalistic" Calvinism was never preached any more now; and that the old view was not necessary even for preachers to hold before they were ordained to the Presbyterian ministry.

When asked what his themes were the previous Sunday, he replied that in the morning he preached on: "Israel as a Type," taking their wanderings as a basis

Two or three points were emphasized.

Though Canaan was not a great journey from Egypt, yet the Israelites were kept forty years in the wilderness before they were allowed to enter it. It was necessary for them to undergo a process of education for their future destiny. In this way they got acquainted with God and learned his holy laws. They were schooled to trust him and obey him. So Jesus prayed that the disciples should not be taken out of the world but kept from the evil. Here like the Israelites we are to be schooled for the honors and dignities of the future life that await us beyond the journey.

In the evening he preached on "The Prodigal Son," emphasizing the delusions of the youth and showing that the self-realization to which he came, of need and want, and of his sin against "his father" was the first step in his return.

Thomas Campbell's Home at Aghorey.

The church is active yet in every good work and 400 people attend in the morning and 200 at night.

The old session house which appears in the picture is the one in which Mr. Campbell often met with his elders and officers and the "Manse" is the same residence which Mr. Campbell occupied. The country around is ideal. A few miles from this church John Hall, the noted preacher of New York for many years, was born and reared. Every year he made a journey to the old home and preached in this old church.

Nothing is changed but the pulpit. They have a new pulpit and new furnishings, but "as it was in the beginning, is now and ever shall be," is characteristic of many things besides the old sacred edifices in the old country.

The BRONZE VASE

PART IV.

Chapter VII.

When Raymund and Jack Bellfield returned to Frog Bend in each other's company, they were warmly received by the Bellfields and Willbys. Raymund's sudden trip to St. Louis and subsequent stay in Kansas City had been a surprise to all, but the young man offered no other word of explanation than that he had been very busy. From the instant Mr. Willby's house came into sight, Raymund had been on the outlook for Rhoda. He presently descried her rather shrinking behind the minister as had been her wont during the past few years, at his various returns. As the young man drew near, her face was colored with distress. She anticipated an effort on his part to seize her in his arms in the old time way and bestow hearty kisses upon her lips and cheeks. Formerly her holding back had deeply offended him, but he had not then learned, as she had, that she was not his sister. Now in an odd way, this very shy timidity upon her part pleased him. He offered her his hand so coolly and so casually, that Rhoda in her turn was surprised and hurt. So far from embarrassing her with a show of affection, he seemed hardly glad to see her.

"Raymund," she said reproachfully, "I would not have thought you'd have gone to St. Louis without me."

"Oh, yes," said Raymund with apparent indifference.

"At least," said Rhoda, "I should have thought that after being away from us a year, you would have come here first."

"Why?" Raymund asked.

Rhoda colored deeply. "If for no other reason," she said, "because your friends would want to see you."

"Oh, I didn't suppose my friends were in any hurry," observed Raymund serenely.

"And besides," Rhoda added gently, "you and I had so often planned our trip to St. Louis. We were to go together, some day, and look at the old places where we used to be so happy."

"Why, Rhoda!" cried Raymund. "Come, come! are you going to say that you were happy at that old second-hand store and pawnshop, with Miss Pinns sticking you with every sharp word her tongue could find?"

"Yes, I was happy!" cried Rhoda bravely, "because—" But she didn't finish.

Raymund turned away from her apparently in calm indifference, but in reality to hide the pleased light that he felt must be glowing in his eyes. The others had now gathered near, and Mr. Willby in particular bombarded the young man with eager questions. So Raymund told them about uncle William's death and about the social aspirations of her who had been Miss Pinns. They talked on and on as close friends may, each adding his part to the babel of speech, and few listening to what anybody else said. This was especially true of Brother Bellfield's sister, who held a slip from a newspaper in her hand which she wanted to read to the entire assembly as she considered it timely and interesting. But she never got to read it aloud, though several times she ostentatiously read it to herself to whet curiosity.

When finally most of them had told what was on their own minds, and began to wake up to the consciousness that they had not learned anything from other minds, there came a lull. Raymund had purposely taken a remote seat from Rhoda, but now she crossed over to him and sat down by his side.

"Now," exclaimed Mr. Willby with his customary vivacity, "since Raymund has told us all he has to tell or, at least, all he is disposed to tell, we might as well go on with what we were doing before he came to throw us all out. Which was, to decide between three of Rhoda's poems. The fact is, Raymund, your sister has been requested by a magazine to contribute a poem; no money for it, lad, but immense honor. We are trying to decide. You and Jack cock your ears and help us."

THANKSGIVING.

By Clinton Scollard.

Thanksgiving for God's boundless blue
Above us brooding; for the hue
And perfumed pageant of the year;
For waters singing lyric clear,
And birds in choral retinue.

For all the varied life we view
About us bourgeoning; for the clue
To happiness beyond the Here—
Thanksgiving!

For chance the kindly deed to do
While dawn and dusk their paths pursue;
For hope and its attendant cheer;
For all that's noble and sincere;
For friends—but chiefly, love, for you—
Thanksgiving!

"This," murmured Rhoda, "is embarrassing."

"Nonsense!" cried Mr. Willby, and he read from Rhoda's neat handwriting:

"Just simple living,
Loving and giving,
Home tasks doing
Duty pursuing,
Christ not denying,
Peacefully dying,
Heaven with spirits blest—
You may have all the rest."

"That's my favorite," said Brother Bellfield.

"It's too short," said Mr. Willby decidedly. "Now, I'll read the one I like best:

"Be sure you're right, then go ahead,
Tho' you strew your pathway with the dead.
If men your principles oppose,
Just knock 'em down; perfection goes!
The foolish may to this object.
What do you care? That, you expect.
Be sure you're right—Oh, cheering song!
Ha! everybody else is wrong!
So keep on going, never stop,
Tread others down to reach the top.
Weigh not advice of friend or foe,
You know you're right—away you go!
Turn not aside for weak man's plight—
Run over him—you know you're right.
Don't stop for wounded or for dead;
You know you're right—just go ahead."

"I do not particularly care for that," observed Mrs. Willby. "I don't like irony."

"Irony indeed!" cried Mr. Willby. "The piece is dead in earnest. And it expresses my sentiments exactly. If I'm right, I go ahead; and do I listen to anybody's advice? Not much! I'm too conscientious to be changing my mind! Now we'll have another." He read:

"There is only one road to To-morrow,
And the name of that road is To-day.
What needless heart-longings we borrow
To bridge o'er the ditch of Delay.

Farther on up the road to To-morrow,
There are numerous lanes of parting
There's a time no doubt for sorrow,
But now is the time for starting.

If a wish could bear us to To-morrow,
Who midst life's restless yearnings would stay?
We would pass in a breath from all sorrow—
But the road to To-morrow's To-day."

"That's all of 'em, isn't it?" queried the invalid sister, hopefully. "That's three."

"There's another, I find, mo'm," said Mr. Willby, with some decision, "and I purpose reading the same, mo'm." He did so:

"You spoke a simple word of cheer
When grief my heart did wildly wring,
And then I knew the Father near,
Because his messenger was here—
Yet you call that a little thing!

That day you turned to smile at me
What hope your sunny light did bring!
Blind in my selfish agony,
I thought a friend no more to see—
You call that smile a little thing!

Once, when maligned, in vengeful mood,
I sought to deal out sting for sting;
I melted when I understood
That you, one day, had called me 'good'—
And that, you term a little thing!

Call nothing 'little' that exists
In widest earth or heaven above
That love contains in slightest state,
Because the least of God is great,
And there is God, where there is love."

"Is that all?" asked the invalid sister.

"Yes, mo'm, it is," said Mr. Willby, "but we cannot hear your selection now, because we must decide upon these productions."

In the meantime, Rhoda, with the natural shyness of the poet who hears her poems under discussion, addressed Raymund.

"Raymund, you haven't asked me a word about how I liked my first year of teaching."

"Haven't I?" said Raymund carelessly, "well, how did you like it?"

"And—and you haven't asked me anything about my affairs." Suddenly there was a gleam in Rhoda's eyes. "Raymund! you don't seem interested in me!"

Raymund apologized politely, "Well, there are so many things on my mind."

Rhoda looked at him dumbly, then said with a catch in her voice, "We have what we consider a great piece of news for you. But perhaps you will not consider it of any importance, you seem so changed."

"Well, perhaps not," said Raymund. "You know there are many things we once considered of importance, that are really of very little consequence."

Rhoda's blue eyes stared at him reproachfully.

"Say, old man," spoke up Jack, who had been trying hard to make out his friend's queer behavior, "are you getting to be something of a prig? I never in my life knew you to act such an insufferable cub, you know!"

Raymund grinned. "By the way, Rhoda," he said, "I'm going back to our old home, Crawley, for a day or two. You've never been there since we left it as helpless orphans, have you?"

"You know I have not, or I should have told you," said Rhoda, quietly.

Mr. Willby, who had been gazing at his young friend with amazed curiosity, now spoke up. "That reminds me of news for you, Raymund, and as nobody seems disposed to open the subject—but are you well, Raymund?"

"Quite well, thank you, Mr. Willby."

"You don't seem well. But this is the news. Mr. Omer was here yesterday—left his daughter in Kansas City expressly to see you—didn't know you were in town; he is out on his Crawley farm, to be there a week. If you are going to Crawley you'd better look him up. He wants to see you bad. You don't think you've taken any malaria, do you, son?"

"Quite sure I haven't," said Raymund easily. "It's a wonder Mr. Omer didn't hunt me up in Kansas City last winter. He was on Troost avenue all the time. By the way, Rhoda, how would you like to go with me to Crawley and look over the old haunts—see our dear old home that used to be—drop in on Miss Glory Aggency and Mr. Merlin Aggency? It may be important for me to find Mr. Omer on his farm. Anyway, I'd decided to go, before I heard of his looking for me."

"Do you truly want me to go with you?" Rhoda asked with shy timidity.

"Why, yes, I do," said Raymund serenely. "Of course I do."

Rhoda felt an overpowering desire to see Crawley once more, the scene of her bright childhood and of her mother's love. Still, she hesitated, for Raymund was so odd.

"I am afraid I might be in the way," she hesitated. "You will be going out to Mr. Omer's farm, and you wouldn't know what to do with me."

Raymund faced her and she saw the steady purpose of his eyes. "I will know exactly what to do with you," he cried with sudden energy, "and you couldn't ever be in my way, Rhoda; and I want you to go; very much indeed."

"Now, you're talking!" cried Mr. Willby. "Now, you've said something! That's the way to plunk it down!"

"I will go," said Rhoda with a happy coo in her voice.

"I'll go along, too!" cried Jack.

"No," said Raymund, waving his hand, "you're not wanted."

He grinned at Jack and Jack grinned back at him.

"By the way, Ray," inquired Jack innocently, "when did you get a monopoly on this branch railroad?"

"That's all right," Raymund retorted laughing, "I mean to have a monopoly on Rhoda!"

"Many are willing that God should lead them if they may show him the way. Would you know who is the greatest saint in the world? It is not he who prays most or fasts most; it is not he who gives most alms or is most eminent for temperance, chastity or justice; but it is he who is always thankful to God, who wills everything that God willeth, who receives anything as an instance of God's goodness, and has a heart always ready to praise God for it.—William Law.

A cheerful face, a contented mind, a grateful heart, belong to those who give their confidence and love and loyal service to the Lord Jesus Christ. His true disciples take no anxious thought for the morrow, and are profoundly grateful for today and yesterday. This is true even when yesterday was full of trouble, and today is a hard problem, and the morrow promises a storm. Yes; they give thanks always, for all things.—George Hodges.

A six-year-old lass who has been dwelling in a Chicago flat, was housed up most of the winter with diphtheria. The ugly card in the front window represented to her imprisoning authority.

As soon as she was well, her parents had to carry into effect a delayed plan to move to another location. So the afternoon of the day that she was first able to return to school, she came home to find another great sign—"for rent"—staring her in the face from that front window.

The child ran breathlessly to her mother and wailed, with visions of another "durance vile" before her:

"O mamma, what have I got now?"

I counted up my little store.
Why was to others given more?
Why were their lips with honey fed,
While mine had Labor's hard-earned bread?
A weary, hopeless task seemed living.
I could not bring to God thanksgiving.

There came a poor man to my door.
I shared with him my scanty store;
When, lo! my sense of want had flown,
And rarest riches were my own!
So sweet is Love's divided bread,
I seemed with Heaven's own manna fed.
What blessed joy there was in living!
I brought to God my glad thanksgiving.

DECORATIONS AND GAMES FOR THANKSGIVING.

BY RUTH VIRGINIA SACKETT.

For the clever hostess Thanksgiving offers all sorts of possibilities in the way of decorations. The table done in yellow, intermingled with green, and relieved by a touch of red is a charming suggestion.

An effective centerpiece is to have on a mat of greens a pumpkin carved to imitate a coach, with vines trailing over the sides and laden with golden-hued chrysanthemums. In front, a doll in colonial costume holding yellow ribbon reins and driving as many feathered roosters as there are tots present. These are found at most any toy store, and will make for the youngsters delightfully pleasing remembrances of the day.

Attach to the chandelier above a cluster of yellow and of red chrysanthemums combined with festoons of smilax, the ends reaching to the four corners and there held in the uplifted arms of jointed dolls attired in true Puritan style, close cap and all. It can easily be managed by using crepe paper for the gowns, and the result will be so pleasing that it will fully repay the small amount of labor involved. To carry out the color scheme still further, each place can be marked with tiny gilded baskets filled with yellow and white bonbons.

If there is an artist in the family, a charming idea is to have the guest cards illustrated in color with quaint figures of belles and beaux of a hundred years ago, and on the underside an amusing and appropriate quotation. If these lines are read aloud at the beginning of the repast it will doubtless cause much merriment and thus remove all formality.

Just the thing for an after-dinner aid to digestion, as it so mirth strring, at least for the spectators, is to blindfold two persons, turn them around three times, and then request the couple to shake hands with one another.

A game in which young and old can join is played in this way: The company are seated in a circle, and the hostess begins by asking the one at her right, "What had we for dinner to-day?" and he or she must name something on the table, afterward ask her right-hand neighbor the same question, who mentions the dish already introduced and names another as well. In this manner the questions go around the ring, the menu increasing all the time, and all have to be on the alert, as the edibles have to be cited in the order given. The player who fails to do so has the pleasure of watching the others instead of taking part.

A pastime more adapted to the children of a larger growth is called Pro and Con. Divide the participants into two sets, as in the old-fashioned spelling match, call one division the pros and the other the cons. Start the game by the leader of the cons commencing a story of some kind, every sentence beginning with con, and he must continue as long as possible; but at the least hesitation the pros must be ready to go promptly on with the narrative, prefixing pro instead of con. If a word is wrongly chosen or mispronounced the one making the mistake must leave the game, but when he merely hesitates the story goes the other side and he remains in line ready to take his turn when it comes again. When only two remain the contest becomes intensely exciting. The one who is last to fail is considered the "victor," and he wins for himself, also for his side.—N. Y. Observer.

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING.

FLORENCE I. SAUNDERS.

In these days of abundance and luxury, it is difficult to realize the severe want and many hardships of our forefathers in the earliest days of this great country though we may often have heard of them.

From the early records we learn that on November 9 of the year 1620 the "Pilgrim Fathers" in the ship "Mayflower," landed in a small bay near Cape Cod, and called the place Plymouth. There was formed the "Plymouth Colony."

After ten months of privations and sickness they gathered in their first harvest of twenty acres of corn and six of barley; enough to keep them supplied with food for the coming year.

The record says, "Our corn did prove well, and, God be praised! We had a good increase of Indian corn; and our barley was indifferently good; but our pease not worth the gathering; for we feared they were too late sown.

"They came up well, and blossomed, but the sun parched them in the blossom.

"Our harvest being gathered in, our Governor, William Bradford, sent four men out a-fowling; so we might after a more special manner rejoice together after we had gathered the fruit of our labors."

These men returned with water-fowl, wild turkey and venison, and the governor called the people together for a public expression of their gratitude in a day of feasting and thanksgiving and a week of rejoicing; during which they entertained ninety of the friendly Indians and their greatest chief, Massasoit; and these men, to show their appreciation of this feast, went out and killed five deer which they brought to the governor and his friends.

Thus we have the simple facts of the observance of the first special public Thanksgiving day, which has become for us one of national importance; and in the words of our ancestor, we would say, "By the goodness of God, we are so far from want that we wish all partakers of our plenty."

An Elusive Thanksgiving Dinner.

BY ELIZABETH A. MOORE.

"Laws sakes, if there ain't my Thanksgivin' dinner agoin' over the fence!"

Susan Hillary craned her neck out of the window and groaned.

"Now jest why didn't I clip the critter's wings," she demanded of herself, ruefully. "There that turkey's gone right over into Mirandy Stebbins' garden, an' me tied up here by the foot with the rheumatiz. It jest beats all how contrary things do go by spells."

The fence over which Miss Hillary's turkey had vanished was a tall structure of the variety known as "spite fence."

After Miss Hillary and Mrs. Stebbins had lived alongside each other for years in the closest of neighborly intimacy and companionship, Mrs. Stebbins, in an unlucky moment decided to embark in the chicken business.

The things that Mrs. Stebbins learned in the next few months would fill volumes, and the indignities that Miss Hillary and Miss Hillary's flower beds suffered through Mrs. Stebbins' new means of a livelihood would fill many more.

Miss Hillary expostulated—mildly at first, then with more vigor, for the sale of her flowers did considerable to eke out her own slender resources. Mrs. Stebbins, herself half frantic with the new modes of activity which her chickens were continually developing, replied tartly, and in an incredibly short time those miserable birds had brought about a rupture between the two elderly women who really loved each other as sisters.

After this Miss Hillary expostulated no more, but when the next onslaught on her flower beds occurred, she betook herself to the village carpenter, and, though it was a sore drain on her slender purse, she had erected between the two houses a high solid fence.

After that there was a cessation of hostilities, but the rupture remained. The two old ladies spoke stiffly when they met, but the old intimacy was a thing of the past.

It was the year following that one morning early in November a supercilious young turkey arrived at Miss Hillary's home. As to the donor there was no clue.

Susan regarded her gift with varying emotions. It was, unquestionably, a most acceptable one—but a live turkey, and three weeks before Thanksgiving day!

The next week that turkey led Miss Hillary a life better imagined than described. Josiah, the small boy that did the chores, had captured it several times when it had escaped the coop, only after the most exciting chase. A bed of asters had been ruined entirely, and Susan herself on one occasion, when appearing in a cimson waist, had been put to flight most ignominiously.

"Dear, dear, me," Miss Hillary had sighed to Josiah, "how am I a-goin' to keep that bird two weeks longer, I don't know."

This the bird himself had just now decided very much to his own satisfaction by again eluding the coop and vanishing with a triumphant squawk over the "spite fence."

"If only Josiah would come," wailed Miss Hillary. "I simply can't go after that bird, crippled up as I am, an', besides, I wouldn't go to Mirandy Stebbins' house, anyhow. She'd think I was tryin' to make up with her.

"The turkey's loose again," she screamed at Josiah as he entered the gate. "It's gone over the fence this time, an' goodness knows what it's been doin' all this time. Run, Josiah, an' oh, Josiah, jest say to Mrs. Stebbins—well, jest say as how Miss Hillary is sorry to have to—er—intrude. You understand. Now run."

After a bad quarter of an hour for all concerned Josiah reappeared—without the turkey.

"Mrs. Stebbins says, ma'am, as how she's got the turkey fastened up good an' safe all right, an' as how you can have it when you pays for the truck it scattered out before she caught it. An' there's not much it ain't scratched out, I guess," volunteered Josiah.

"The sassy, impident piece!" exclaimed Susan, wrathfully. "After all I've took from her chickens, too. I'll jest see myself a-doin' it. I'll never, never pay for it, so there! But to think Mirandy would treat me so, she that used to be jest like a sister to me. Oh, dear, dear me!"

As Thanksgiving day drew near the thorn in Susan's flesh rankled more and more fiercely. It was becoming only too apparent that Mirandy Stebbins meant to steal that turkey. Susan blushed for her. But mortification over Mrs. Stebbins' downfall soon gave place to rage. Again and again she tried to form some plan to recapture the turkey, but Mirandy seemed to have it safe this time, and besides, if the truth must be told, Susan was mortally afraid of that rampant, supercilious fowl.

But might there not be other ways to make good its loss. Susan paused suddenly in her limping from the dresser to the stove and clapped her hands triumphantly.

"Of course, it's stealin'," she said, "but if Mirandy Stebbins can steal, why, so can I. It ain't no worse for me nor for her. But, laws sakes, I never thought I'd come to that, an' me a professin' church member these thirty years. Howsomever, I've either got to steal or go without any Thanksgivin' dinner, that's sure, so—I guess—well, I guess I'll jest have to steal."

That night, armed with a large market basket, Susan stole quietly out of her kitchen door into the crisp autumn night. Dead leaves rustled under her feet as she limped down the paths through her flower garden, and the purple Michaelmas daisies along the fence shook their heads reproachfully as she passed.

Her heart beat wildly, but she pressed her lips tightly together and went stubbornly on. She climbed awkwardly over the old worm fence at the end of her garden and then into her neighbor's truck patch.

"Punkins—that's what I'm after," she said, softly. "An' here they be. Oh, what beauties! I reckon I didn't come none too soon, either. Mirandy'd been a-gatherin' these herself in a day or two an' I'd a-missed it all. Now, I'll have punkin pies, anyhow, an' what's more, Mirandy won't unless she buys her punkins. They're big an' they're heavy, but not one do I leave. I guess to-morrow mornin' Mirandy Stebbins'll learn somethin' that'll teach her a lesson. Mean old thing."

From the shadow of a friendly hedge Mirandy Stebbins watched her old neighbor as she plundered her pumpkin vines. Susan had overlooked the fact that it was bright moonlight.

"Poor old soul," she sighed, pityingly. "But it's a workin' all right, jest as I thought. Now, if I didn't know Susan Hillary's conscience better'n she does herself, I'd say good-bye to them punkins. But, good land, I know how it'll turn out without waitin' to see. Dear old Susan."

The next day Susan fairly reveled in Thanksgiving preparations. A delicious air of expectancy pervaded the kitchen, and, as she went on with her work, Susan tried hard to sing the old Thanksgiving hymn:

"Come, ye thankful people, come."

But somehow the words seemed to stick in her throat, and the twinges of rheumatism, greatly aggravated by her last night's exploit in the damp and cold, made her wince as she hobbled around the kitchen. Moreover, she started nervously at every turn and in every sound she seemed to hear a whispered: "Thou shalt not steal."

As she opened the oven to look at the great golden pies within, the delicious odor seemed to float out the tormenting words: "Thief—thief."

Susan shut the oven door with a snap and sprang up.

"I'm not the only one that's a thief, so there!" she said, defiantly. "It's no worse to steal punkins than turkeys." Then she sank into a chair with a groan wrung from her by the sudden twinge to her rheumatic joints.

"Goodness knows, I ain't none too much to be thankful for, nohow," she said, dismally, "what with the drought an' losin' my turkey an' the rheumatiz besides. Now, if I should get laid up entirely jest what's a-goin' to become of me, I wonder?"

Susan pondered over the situation a long while in silence. Her conscience refused absolutely to be quieted and the rheumatic pains grew more and more insistent. Sick and alone, old and poor, at enmity with her best friend and—and —a thief! This was the result of her meditation. She rose painfully and took out the great golden-brown pies from the oven and set them in a row on the table with her other Thanksgiving preparations. Then she hobbled miserably to a couch, and while all around her seemed to breathe out the very spirit of Thanksgiving, she, poor soul, buried her face in the cushions and wept.

Josiah, coming in later, found a strange Miss Hillary that he had never known before. From the lounge she gave him his orders.

"Do up your chores, Josiah, an' then take them punkin pies, every last one of 'em, an' them other things a-settin' there, an' carry 'em all over to Mirandy Stebbins' house. An' tell Mirandy Stebbins, Josiah, tell her—yes, tell her I stole 'em all an' here they be."

Josiah gasped.

"Stole em, Miss Hillary? Why, be you a thief?"

"Yes, I be; an' I might as well own up to it. But so's Mirandy Stebbins. Still, that's neither here nor there. But for me, I'll have a clear conscience if I do go hungry. An' mind, Josiah, that you don't tell her how bad my rheumatiz has got, now remember. I don't want none of her commiseration', that's sure."

When Josiah approached with his load Mrs. Stebbins was working, evidently with great enjoyment over a fat, overgrown turkey.

"Miss Hillary sends her compliments," he began, politely, for to his mind Susan's blunt message was not entirely in keeping with the season, "an sends you these 'ere punkin pies an' things for Thanksgivin', an' hopes as how you're right well. She's real bad sick herself, Miss Hillary is—got worse all of a sudden, jest sence yesterday somehow. But I forgot, she told me I wasn't to say nothin' about it, so I won't. Only I'm afraid she's a little out of her head, 'cause she said as how she'd been a thief an' stole all these things. If I was you, Mrs. Stebbins, I'd go over an' set awhile with her for fear——"

"You would, eh?" Mrs. Stebbins interrupted. "Well, you're a good little boy, an' here's a big apple for you. Now run along with you."

When Susan awoke late on Thanksgiving morning, after a miserable night, a heavenly odor even as of roast turkey pervaded the house, and a voice, presumably an angel's, was singing softly:

"The Lord's my shepherd, I'll not want."

"I guess I must a-died," murmured Susan, contentedly, "an' this is Heaven, I s'pose."

But something in the voice sounded strangely familiar, and Susan suddenly sat up in bed. With a groan she realized her mistake.

"I'm not in Heaven, after all, it seems," she said, resignedly. "I thought it was 'most too good to be true. But I do jest wonder what it all means, anyhow."

A large, cheery-faced woman appeared in the doorway, and a hearty voice, assuredly of the earth, exclaimed:

"Well, Susan Hillary, so you're awake at last, are you? I thought maybe you was a-goin' to sleep all day."

Too astonished to speak, Susan simply gaped at her visitor.

"Humph! You don't seem none too glad to see me, I must say," the intruder went on. "Anyhow, I heard as how you was took sick, so I come over to set awhile an' do for you."

"So it's you, Mirandy Stebbins, is it?" Susan managed to say at last. "I sent you back your old punkins, didn't I? Now, what more do you want, an' where's my turkey? That's what I'd like to know."

"Your turkey's in the oven a-cookin' for dear life, an' glad enough I am it is there at last, what with all I've suffered from that bird sense it flew over the fence yonder. Maybe you know somethin' about that yourself, though."

"Yes; I learned a lot about fowls lately," confessed Susan, grimly. "But I would like to know jest where it came from in the first place, I'll admit."

"Oh, Susan," Miranda's bravado wavered a little, "don't you think maybe the good Lord prompted somebody to send you that turkey so you'd understand—"

"Mirandy Stebbins," here Susan sat up in bed, despite the painful twinges in her swollen joints, "did you send that turkey here or didn't you? That's what I want to know."

"I did, Susan," admitted Miranda, meekly.

"For why?" demanded Susan, majestically, but with softened face.

"Well, I thought maybe as how you hadn't none too much an' might be glad of it. For, Susan, I've never really stopped carin' for you, much as I've tried. It was kind o' mean, but I'll admit too, I did think maybe if you knew somethin' of what jest one of the pesky things could do you might feel little different to me with all I've had to put up with. They've drove me nigh beside myself, there's no denyin'. An', Susan," here Miranda's big heart overflowed at last and her handkerchief went up to her eyes, "I did want you back again so much, for I've missed you so."

"Mirandy Stebbins, I've not spent a happy day sence that fence went up," confessed Susan. "And after that turkey come—well, Mirandy, sometimes I thought of what you must a had to contend with, an', honestly, I did feel awful guilty to think as how I'd helped. I was too hasty, an', Mirandy, I'm real sorry about it, 'deed, an' 'deed I am."

"Bless your heart, don't let's talk about it no more," said Miranda. "I always knew if we once got together we couldn't help but make up. Now that gobbler's done jest to a turn," she added briskly, as they both dried their eyes, "so let me help you get up."

"'God moves in a mysterious way,'" sang Miranda, blithely, as she bustled around among the Thanksgiving preparations. "Chickens is the most mysterious of all, though, I must say. Now, come, Susan, never mind your rheumatiz to-day. It's Thanksgivin', you know, an' this is a proper Thanksgivin' turkey. I picked him out a-purpose, 'cause I knowed he'd make so much trouble he'd have to make peace in the end, an' that's jest what he did, bless his contrary old heart. Have a leg, Susan. It jest does my heart good to carve this bird."—The Criterion.

Tricked by Dyspepsia

The Doctor Couldn't Tell Where The Trouble Lay.

"For the past seven years I have been a victim of dyspepsia and chronic constipation and have consulted the most noted specialists to be found on diseases of this character. None, however, seemed to locate the difficulty or give relief. In addition to this medical treatment, I have resorted to the use of many remedies and have given them faithful trial, but all to no purpose.

Upon the recommendation of a close friend, I purchased a 50c package of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets and in less than five days' notice that I was receiving more benefit than from any remedy I had used before. I continued to use the tablets after each meal for one month and by that time my stomach was in a healthy condition, capable of digesting anything which my increasing appetite demanded.

I have not experienced any return of my former trouble though three months have elapsed since taking your remedy."

We wish that you could see with your own eyes the countless other bona-fide signed letters from grateful men and women all over the land who had suffered years of agony with dyspepsia, tried every known remedy and consulted eminent specialists without result, until they gave Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets a trial. Like the doctor above, they couldn't locate the seat of the trouble.

Dyspepsia is a disease which has long baffled physicians. So difficult of location is the disease that cure seems next to miraculous. There is only one way to treat dyspepsia—to supply the elements which nature has ordained to perform this function and to cause them to enter the digestive organs, supplying the fluids which they lack. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets alone fill these requirements, as is shown by the fact that 40,000 physicians in the United States and Canada unite in recommending them to their patients for stomach disorders.

We do not claim or expect Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets to cure anything but disordered conditions of the stomach and other digestive organs, but this they never fail to do. They work upon the inner lining of the stomach and intestines, stimulate the gastric glands and aid in the secretion of juices necessary to digestion.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box. One box will frequently effect a perfect cure. If in doubt and wish more adequate proof send us your name and address and we will gladly mail you a sample package free. F. A. Stuart Co., 61 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

A Thanksgiving Reminder

By Mrs. Harriet A. Cheever

Mr. Howard Williams was walking from his house toward the "Exchange." His mind was pleasantly employed. The mind of a man is quite likely to be pleasantly employed with whom things have glided along with signal success for eleven months of the year. All at once something shot into his mind causing him to look more deeply thoughtful.

During a sermon of more than usual pungency the previous Sunday, Dr. Willis had said: "We none of us are thankful enough, or show thankfulness in the way we should for God's abounding mercies."

"Why, of course I am thankful," Mr. Williams had said to himself as he listened with ease and satisfaction to the remainder of the earnest discourse. What made the simple sentence recur to him now, he did not stop to inquire. He only walked along reviewing as with a bird's eye glance the prosperity of the waning year, and soliloquized mentally.

"Yes, I am getting pretty well fixed and no mistake! My wife and children are well fed, well dressed and happy. Wife Jennie enjoys the fine outlook as well as I do. Jennie is getting popular in choice circles, I notice. She should, too, for she is bright, intelligent and ladylike. Her paper on 'Moderation in Society,' read at the club the other day, did her great credit. I happen to know. Willie and Susie are well trained. The home is paid for, handsomely furnished and full of comfort. Jennie shall have a seal-skin cloak for her Christmas present. And I am about to join the Croesus Club, a long coveted indulgence, never quite attainable until now.

"Really it is delightful, being able to train with the rich, and feeling yourself one of them! Phew! the 'International' has declared its dividend, and what glory—30 per cent! Now the splendid Thanksgiving dinner we will have, to be sure. We will invite that stunning couple, Colonel Rockingham and wife, now boarding temporarily, also Captain and Mrs. Ludington, who are expecting to be alone in their sumptuous apartments at the 'Buccleugh.' Here it is Monday, the invitations should have been sent sooner, but never mind, we can apologize on the grounds of everything being impromptu and informal.

Mr. Williams had reached a park which he must cross on the way, and it may be his lips moved as he ruminated on:

"I wonder if we could borrow a chef from the club house? Very likely; they say these fellows will sometimes give instructions to the under cooks, and go out for a 'special' if only the bait is large enough. Dear me, how enjoyable it will be: dinner coat, a few favors, flowers, the choicest Havanas. Yes, it is jolly even to think of and plan for."

Just then some one jostled him. A man so breathless with the news he was imparting as to collide with Mr. Williams without actually knowing it.

"Yes, sir, it is true! I heard the president himself talking about it!" The reply was like a hot challenge.

"Impossible! Why, man alive, it has just declared a dividend of 30 per cent. You must be insane."

"I'm no more insane than you are!" was the passionate response. "The report is true."

"But what of its immense capital and assured surplus?"

"Don't know nor care anything about those bogus representations," was the dogged reply. "The 'International' has gone up, and Philbrook and Wetherell have come down like the stick of a rocket."

The excited speakers passed on, and Mr. Williams suddenly trembling as if palsied, sank onto an iron bench near the end of the park. It glanced through his mind, as his hand rested on the back of the bench, that its coldness was in touch with the iron that had entered into his soul. He knew the man well who had communicated the petrifying tidings. A "hanger on" who usually caught early in the day whatever was going "on the street."

He asked himself as in a dream, how the thing could have come about. 'The International!' The very soundest house of its kind in the country! It had been his pet dream to own a good clump of stock in it ever since he had become a man. No mushroom enterprise, no suddenly elevated company was the old and reliable 'International.' It was the summum bonum of many a long-headed, sound business man's ambition to own stock in the fine old concern. A thing by no means easy to acquire. Only the strong, impelling influence of Mr. Wetherell of the banking house of Philbrook and Wetherell had eventually enabled Mr. Williams to avail himself of the handsome shares in the reputedly invincible concern.

How could it be? Mr. Williams ruminated now in the half stunned, half stupid way that people will, when a hard, benumbing shock mercifully dulls the sensibilities for the nonce. "No great Thanksgiving dinner," he murmured audibly, "no call for dinner coat, no favors, no flowers, no chef." Chef! He turned sick at the thought, it all at once seemed so presuming and so shallow.

"I've got the house anyway," he went on, "I'm sure of that. But Jennie can't swell at the club any longer. Great mercy. I hadn't joined the Croesus! Yet Jennie and the children are well. Thank God for that."

Then he thought he might as well go on, and find out how the disaster came about, and what prophecies were afloat as to what proportion of the investments might possibly be doled out in time.

Arrived at the splendidly equipped offices of the 'International,' he was languidly surprised to see things going on much as usual. "Just like their exasperating coolness," he thought bitterly. Mr. Wetherell was just sauntering out.

"What's this about the 'International?'" Mr. Williams asked grimly.

"Great news, isn't it?" answered Mr. Wetherell, voice jubilant, manner debonnaire.

"What news?" asked poor Mr. Williams.

"Why, haven't you heard?" asked the banker, wondering at Horace Williams' rigid appearance.

"Thirty per cent, man! Aren't you pleased?"

"Yes, but about the smash-up? Selkirk was telling just now about the 'International' having gone up."

Mr. Wetherell looked unpleasantly enlightened. "Oh, that flippant loon!" he cried. "I suppose he has confounded the petty failure of the International Coffee House, we were talking of this morning, with this concern. We must stop his mouth instanter before he creates a panic Our 'International' is sound as a nut. But I must wire up Selkirk without delay."

Mr. Wetherell flew over to the "phone" and Mr. Williams walked back to the park. The cool iron bench felt friendly. The relief at heart and soul brought tears to the strong man's eyes. "I'd like to kneel right down by this bench," he murmured, "and pray to God. Oh, thank God!"

Back came the sentence that had dully impressed him on Sunday, and vaguely entered his mind as he crossed the park only a little while agone. "We none of us are thankful enough, or show thankfulness in the way we should for God's abounding mercies."

A season of deep, searching reflection followed. Then the man on the iron bench within the park said solemnly, "I am going home to talk with wife about our Thanksgiving dinner. But neither Colonel Rockingham and wife, nor Captain and Mrs. Ludington will be among the guests. Not that there would be either harm or wrong in inviting them, but a vision sorrowful and devastating has passed before me since I first entered this park—was it only half an hour ago?"

There was a long conference between the husband and wife, contrasting strangely with the buoyant, inspiriting conversation that had followed the arrival of the morning's mail with its splendid announcement. Mr. Williams' account of the after experience was vivid and impressive. It could not be otherwise.

"Oh, dear, how uncertain everything is in this world," said his wife uneasily.

"Don't feel concerned," Mr. Williams replied kindly. "The 'International' is just what we thought it, firm as a rock. But I have been shown what might have been, and I am simply ashamed of my thoughtless ingratitude. My dear girl, not one genuine impulse of true thankfulness entered into my calculations or my heart as I marched along planning what was to be our Thanksgiving feast. As if my own cunning merely, had secured the generous income, I planned and schemed, as it were—with God left out.

"Now let's have a liberal, handsome Thanksgiving dinner, and invite a few friends to enoy it with us, who would have no such feast but for our remembrance."

And they did. A worthy, intelligent couple who had the claim of distant relationship, poor in this world's goods, but of excellent standing in the church, were more than pleased at the cordial invitation which reached them.

A truly happy company sat down to the richly furnished table. The repast did more than mere physical good, both to those who received, and those who were received, on that day of thankfulness and abundance.

"Let us make it a rule," said the good wife that night, "always to have at least one person sit at our Thanksgiving feast, who would not enjoy its luxuries, but for our remembrance. And let us do it as a reminder of the gratitude we owe a kind heavenly Father for all his abounding mercies." The reply came thoughtfully:

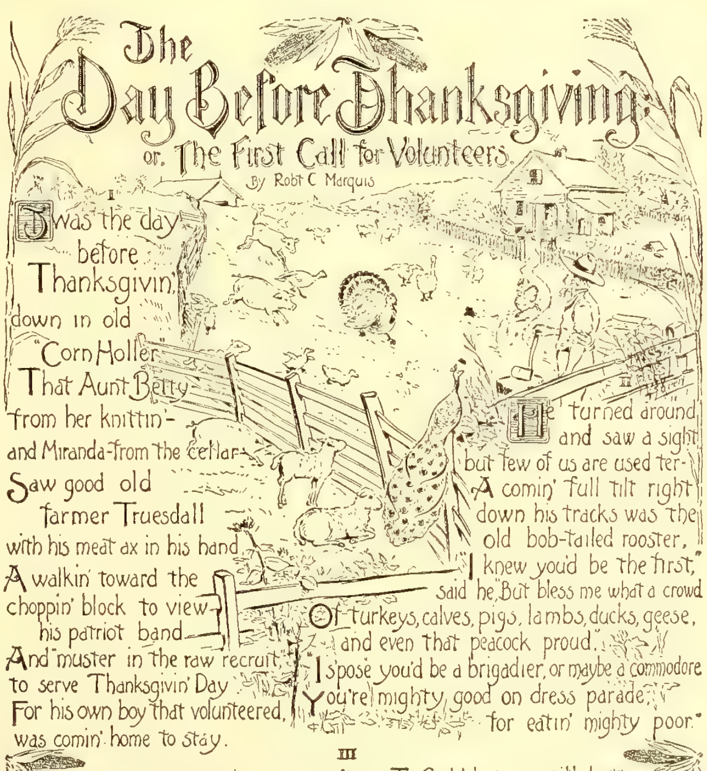
"Yes, we will, wife. And I don't believe I shall soon plume myself again on a prosperous year and an assured outlook for the future, forgetful of my obligations to the great Giver of all good."

He added musingly: "It is a mistaken and venturesome thing to plan—as it were—with God left out."

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

This is our Thanksgiving edition of the Advance Society page for 1906. We are thankful for all those who have taken up our regular reading course, and for the splendid quarterly reports that have come in, some of them carefully typewritten, some illustrated, some tied in our society colors of blue and old gold, some occupying as many as 12 pages, with each day's Bible-reading, each week's quotation, etc., fully detailed. We are thankful for the wide extent of the Av. S., from New York to Lower California, and from South America to China and Japan. We are thankful for the great work of the Av. S., in taking up the disowned child, "Little Joe," paying his board and advertising him until he was adopted into a kind and refined home. We are thankful that orphan Charlie is given into our charge, that we may strive and write and talk and toil until we raise enough to educate him. We are thankful for Drusie taking the Gospel to benighted North China, and that we can help, by contributing to her support, in spreading that best of all Good News that ever came to earth. I, in particular, am thankful for the kind letters I so often receive—letters much too complimentary (I do not say, however, that they are undeserved), to be printed; and for the support from many readers who are not regular Av. S. members. But why do I try to tell all the things that make me thankful? Why! I am thankful just to be sitting here alive, still on the earth. And I am thankful, I must not forget to say, that Felix's picture is finished. That picture would certainly have graced the great Thanksgiving number of The Christian-Evangelist. thus adding a charm and grace that no mere minister's likeness could impart, had not a delay come in the cut. There is trouble about the cut. This doesn't mean that Felix has been hurt. A 'cut' as we literary people use the word, has nothing to do with people pretending not to see you on the street car, because they are riding in a private automobile. It is thus: first we take a picture of Felix.—No, I should say first we chase and catch and hold Felix. Then we take him with a camera. When the photographer finds nothing else to do, and no more street carnivals to attend, he finishes the picture and you pay for it. You take that picture to your editor and ask him to send it to the engraver's to have a cut made. He says he will have it for you in four days. You do not smile at this, you thank him and peacefully wait for the weeks to roll round. We are now in this stage of getting Felix presented to his numerous friends. It is a slow stage, but we are thankful to have any stage at all. However, it is not raining and it pleases me to say a kind word for Arkansas weather whenever it deserves it. It often deserves a compliment. It can't rain to-day, anyhow, for it is both sleeting and snowing and no weather, I care not in what state, can be expected to attend to more than these at the same time. As for Drusie's Christmas Tree, I think it promising. Let us hear from our dear old Av. S. comrade, Harry Buckley of Lawrenceburg, Ky.: "And so it's to be a Christmas Tree? Well, that is a good idea, but I had set my heart on a Birthday Party for Drusie. A few weeks ago a dear friend was speaking to me of the splendid success of Charlie's Social, and said, 'Wouldn't it be nice if we could have a birthday party for our missionery? But I suspect Bro. Ellis has already thought of it, for after he gets through thinking there is very little left.'" (I like that friend of yours.) "But the Christmas Tree idea is all right, and here is a dollar for a present. As I am ignorant of the things a girl would like most to get for a Christmas present, I'll ask Grace Everest to kindly select something from the dollar counter and hang it on the tree for me. May God add His blessing to the Christmas Tree idea. The Bronze Vase is a delightful story, delightfully told, I think..." (It had been suggested some time ago that we have a birthday party for Drusie, I forget by whom, and it appeared a fine plan. But after long consideration, the Christmas Tree appealed to me more. Christmas has always been regarded by me as the very apex or crisis of the year; the time above all other times to eat too much with a good conscience, and to begin on candy immediately after breakfast, and to have relations even including the relations-in-law, to assemble at your house, and blow horns and get every room on the place out of order. I don't see how I could possibly have been happier on my Christmases, unless there had been something like this Tree for our missionary; and yet, I never knew about Santa Claus. There was never a reindeer track on my father's roof, or a midnight visit down the stovepipe. It's all very well to hang your stocking at the big open fireplace or even on the hinges of the coal stove. But it was always with my family quite out of the question that Santa should crawl out of a little door in the middle of a coal stove. All of which goes to show that no real happiness in this world needs a myth or delusion to rest upon, and that if Santa Claus is a dear part in your past life, you would have had just as dear a time if he had been your father or mother; because Youth is the dear time, though not necessarily reindeer. But what has all this to do with Drusie? Why, just this: Christmas is such a delightful season that I want to be in some way the means of making it more delightful for you. And I know that if you help celebrate the coming Christmas by sending an imaginary gift for our missionary, that you will always look back upon this Christmas as a little different and in a sense a little better, than any you have known. Maybe it may seem a little selfish in me to want to have a hand in your holiday. That's all right, you send a present! So you see, this thing isn't entirely a Drusie affair, any more than Charlie's Social was a Charlie affair. No, not near all. It's the joy of giving to a great, noble purpose, the joy of taking something from yourself which could give you pleasure, and give it away where it will do good; something you will miss; something you will feel the want of. That makes a Christmas that is a Christmas! Mrs. J. O. Johnston, Stewartsville, Mo., in writing to my mother, says: "That ice cream social did fine for Charlie! I hope Drusie may have a grand Christmas tree. I hope it may be like the matches, go off in good shape. I did not expect any of my letter about that Social to be printed, but Oliver" (Oliver is her little boy) "was so proud when I showed it to him! He could find his name!" (Well, here it is again, Oliver,—now how many times is that, Oliver?) Mrs. E. A. James, Long Beach, Cal.: "The Av. S. is certainly doing a grand work for the orphan boy and our missionary. The ice cream social was just the thing, though I was not there. But here I come to the Christmas Tree with a box of stationary for the dear girl who will want to write letters to the home folks." ($1.) "I am much interested in our orphan boy, and when he needs more funds I may have a few pennies. In order to go forward, I begin reading the dear Christian-Evangelist at the back, so you see I soon get to the Av. S. pages. I always enjoy reading them so much. Then I soon turn to the Easy Chair. It's all good from first leaf to last. I hope the Christmas Tree will be bending down with good things." Lees Summit: "I enclose $1.25 for Charlie and Drusie; please do not publish my name, but accept the small amount for Christ's sake." Jennie Updike, Bellnap, Ia.: "I send 25 cents for Drusie and 10 for our orphan Charlie. I hope Drusie will be greatly blessed in her work of love and sacrifice in that far-away land; it is grand to have such faith as hers." Pasadena, Cal.: "I enclose $1, half for Drusie, half for Charlie. Plenty hot here for ice cream. The Christmas Tree is a fine idea. I trust every one will be generous. I want to thank you for your remarks about chain letters. It has been such a comfort to drop them in the waste basket without feeling a twinge of conscience. Since reading your opinion, I have felt so comfortable. May the Lord continue to bless the Av. S. work." Ann M. Thalker, Louisville, Ky.: "I am an old lady, 83 years of age, and yet I like ice cream, and you will please send me a dish of



The Day Before Thanksgiving
or, The First Call for Volunteers.
By Robt C Marquis
I
'Twas the day before Thanksgivin', down in old "Corn Holler"
That Aunt Betty from her knittin'- and Miranda from the cellar
Saw good old farmer Truesdall with his meat ax in his hand
A walkin' toward the choppin' block to view his patriot band
And "muster in the raw recruit," to serve Thanksgivin' Day
For his own boy that volunteered, was comin' home to stay.
II
He turned around and saw a sight
but few of us are used ter-
A comin' full tilt right down his tracks was the old bob-tailed rooster,
"I knew you'd be the first,"
said he, "But bless me what a crowd
Of turkeys, calves, pigs, lambs, ducks, geese, and even that peacock proud."
"I s'pose you'd be a brigadier, or maybe a commodore
You're mighty good on dress parade, for eatin' mighty poor."
III
"Your chest expansion's very fine, T. Gobbler's is still better,
His back and front are quite in line, He'll never show white feather"
"You are enlisted, Gobbler, Sir, report at ten for duty.
And for the battle come prepared." "Miranda he's a beauty,
The table next day creaked and groaned 'neath that 'ere turkey gobbler,
And cakes and pies and puddings, and delicious apple cobbler.

Charlie's. God bless Charlie, and all who are kind to him; and may he grow up a good and useful man." Mrs. E. S. Stevens, Akita, Japan: "I am buying a foreign money order; when the notice is received, please send me one Av. S. gold pin. It is to be Henry's Christmas present. He has been very faithful in keeping the Av. S. rules. Please have the pin registered." (So I did; was it received? In printing the foregoing letter from Pasadena, I omitted the writer's name, Mrs. J. H. Byram, who sends a post card with picture of the Pasadena Christian Church as it will look when finished. It is a beautiful structure, of great towers, windows and entrances. In one corner something is growing, which in M'ssouri would suggest a large burdock; but no doubt being in California, it is a palm or banana-tree. No building can be too magnificent for the service of God, unless you sink over your head in debt on account of it; and no building, let us remember, however sublime, is so beautiful as the simple, childlike hearts that come to its portals in love.) Drusie R. Malott, Tai Ming-fu, North China: "My last days have been very busy ones, there was so much to do in preparing to move mission stations and to the city. Besides office work and this extra work, I have been putting up fruit for the station workers who could not do it for themselves,—wouldn't you like some apricots or peaches or apple marmalade" (um! mmh!) "or plum, apple or grape jelly? or watermelon preserves?" (Not m. w. preserves, but I thank you, I know you mean well.) "I am acknowledging the receipt of the books from Mrs. E. M. Rothwell, Moberly, Mo. The papers and cards are just what I desired. You need not send more than 15 papers of the same kind and date, as we have only 15 in our 'American' S. S. We are most grateful for both papers and cards. You may be sure we are glad to have all the cards we can get, for they can be used also in work among the Chinese. Does any one have the S. S. Evangelist to spare? Or the Christian Companion? Inland postage is charged for papers and packages, not because the homeland postage is not enough, but to pay overland expense from Shanghai. When the homeland postage is not sufficient, we have an extra fine of 12 cents Mexican for each half ounce. Your parcels have always had sufficient homeland postage. Our missionaries are about ready to return to their stations for another year's work. Pray the Lord to make this a glorious year of soul-winning. Pray for the gatekeepers, and cooks and language-teachers, that they may all be earnest witnesses for Jesus. And my dear mother misses me; please remember her in your petitions in my behalf. And I am asking the Lord to call my brother and sister into His service. I believe some day they are going to be with me in His work. I acknowledge with grateful thanks the $5-checks received from the Av. S. each month. The best wish I can send you, and them any any one is, that you may have as large a cup of the Lord's grace as I have. Praise His dear name!"

We have a splendid now Honor List this week; not that the names are so many, but nearly every report is very full and handsomely prepared. I wish you could see them. Bertha Beesley, Moselle, Mo. (31st quarter); Dorothy Brown, Medaryville, Ind (7th); Harry A. Stevens, Akita, Japan, (11th); Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo. (11th); Grace Everest, Oklahoma City (8th); Mabel E. Nicholas, 916 W. IN 15 VOLUMES, LARGE 12MO, HALF LEATHER, GILT TOP AND BACK.

These books are of the very best quality in every way. We not only say it, but we guarantee it.

The publishers have used fine paper, splendid and numerous illustrations, and the best, most durable and attractive binding in preparing this work. The set consists of 15 volumes, each containing (on an average) 370 pages. Each volume measures 8¼ inches long, 5½ inches wide, 1⅝ inches thick and weighs about 2 pounds.

If they do not meet your expectation when you receive and examine them, you have the privilege of returning them to us. We want you to understand that you take no chances.

Everybody knows of Bulwer Lytton's writings. They have an acknowledged place in the very front rank of literature. No one's library is anything near complete without them. For originality, for an intimate knowledge of humanity with its moods and fancies, for ability to portray ideas in energetic yet elegant and artistic language, it is doubtful if Lord Lytton has ever been equalled.

THEY ARE A FINE AND HANDSOME LIBRARY OF THE VERY BEST WRITINGS IN THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Do not confuse these books with so-called "cheap" editions. They are of the very highest type of first-class publishers' work. There is nothing poor or undesirable in their construction. Any book case or library, no matter how fine, is not too good for them.

Remember that our guarantee goes with them, and if you are not pleased, you need not keep them.

Our Budget

—"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

—"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

—Let all the readers of The Christian-Evangelist join in thanksgiving to God for his manifold kindnesses and mercies.

—The Christian-Evangelist is grateful among other things for the large increase in the number of its readers, showing that it is growing in favor with the people.

—Our cause of gratitude is that the things for which The Christian-Evangelist stands are growing more and more in favor with the brotherhood.

—Look out for "Our Pioneers" number of The Christian-Evangelist, the first week in January.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Barry, Ill., Nov. 24.—Illinois meeting at Eldora twelve days old; thirty-two conversions, fourteen last night, eight to-night.—W. E. Spicer, evangelist; J. D. Williams, minister.

—George P. Taubman has resigned at Portsmouth, Ohio.

—J. M. Plummer has accepted a call to begin work January 1, at Elk City, Kan.

—The dedication of the church at Litchfield, Ill., has been changed to December 16.

—News of the death of C. C. Boyd, of Covington, Ky., has been received. Further particulars next week.

—George A. Webb and wife, singing evangelists, are assisting S. M. Martin in a good meeting at Red Bluff, Cal.

—William M. Mayfield is being assisted in a good meeting at Dighton by J. B. Mayfield, evangelist, and G. A. Butler, singer.

—F. F. Walters, after his first Sunday in the Central church, Springfield, Mo., thinks the outlook is bright for a successful work.

—E. A. Gilliland has received a call to East St. Louis to succeed W. Henry Jones, whose views on Christian Science led to his resignation.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate the new church at Ottawa, Kan., December 2. The following night he will lecture on his tour through the Orient.

—O. P. Spiegel, who has just been elected state evangelist of Alabama, is to hold a meeting in North Tonawanda, N. Y., early in the new year.

—G. Washington Wise, who recently took up the work at Alton, Ill., thinks the outlook is very hopeful. The Sunday-school has more than doubled since October 1.

—We regret that T. J. Arnold did not, as indicated in our last "Budget," join the Christian church at Marshall, Ark., but commended Brother Rogers' meeting, though he remained a Baptist.

—A. M. Harral, of Sapulpa, I. T., is contemplating spending the winter on the gulf coast. He hopes to leave a capable minister at Sapulpa on his departure January 1.

—A. L. Ward is one of the secretaries of the interdenominational committee which has in charge the union meeting being held in Tremont Temple, Boston, by Gipsy Smith, the English evangelist. It is reported that Boston is being shaken as never before.

—J. C. Howell reports that there are over one hundred young people in the Christian Endeavor Society at Salem, Mo., which is a church organized sixty-nine years ago.

—The church at Abilene, Texas, under Granville Snell is planning for both an education and a foreign missionary rally before long. The cause at Abilene seems to be full of promise.

—The brethren at Detroit express themselves as delighted with Lloyd Darsie, formerly of Chicago, who has been conducting for them evangelistic services both at the Central Church and the Woodward Avenue Church.

—R. E. Callihtan is being assisted in a meeting with his church at Gallatin, Mo., by George L. Peters, who has lately entered the ranks of our Missouri preachers and has located at Joplin. Both Brother Peters and Brother Callithan are good workers and they will be assisted by 300 copies of The Christian-Evangelist weekly. Two other meetings are going on in the town.

George L. Peters.

—J. L. Thompson writes that it is gratifying to the workers in Decatur, Ill., to have N. S. Haynes and J. H. Smart become citizens of that place, for their presence will be a great inspiration to the brethren there.

—A good report has been made by the churches of Mayetta and Jeandale, Kan., where Nelson Gardner is the minister. They exceeded their apportionment for state missions, the former place more than doubling the amount expected.

—L. A. Chapman writes that notwithstanding the difficulty of the overshadowing influence of a Methodist state university our own church and people at Mt. Pleasant, Ia., are making due impression on the community.

—A Bible institute is announced by the Central Christian Church, Jacksonville, Ill., November 20-December 2. The school of this church is in competition with those of Paris and Akron. Each school has now made five points.

—George L. Snively's unusual success in securing funds for religious purposes is keeping his services in continual demand. Next Lord's day he will help Ivan Agee liquidate an old indebtedness hanging over the church at Atlanta, Ill.

—We received an invitation to the reception given by the First Christian Church of Pittsburg, in honor of Pastor W. G. Winn and wife, which occurred Friday evening. We need not say we would have been delighted to be present.

—Harlow and Harlow began a meeting at Newman, Ill., November 25. The church there has averaged one addition a Sunday since January 15, at the regular services, and since that date the average attendance of the Bible school has been doubled.

—C. E. Chambers and the Davis Street Church at Ottumwa, Ia., are doing a good work together. There have been fifty additions and a debt of $750 paid off since Brother Chambers began his ministry there that April. Every missionary apportionment has been reached.

—To the very great grief of his large congregation at Paris, Ill., Finis Idleman has accepted a call to succeed H. O. Breeden at the Central Church, Des Moines, Ia. Brother Idleman has done a great work at Paris and is much beloved by the people there.

—B. G. Hostetter is pastor of the church at Loraine, O., and not C. Manly Rice, as appeared in some of our prints. Brother Hostetter's ministry is being greatly blessed. He has just concluded a revival with the assistance of Evangelist E. E. Violett, with 104 additions to the membership.

—R. B. Briney, minister at Lexington, Mo., was called to Louisville, Ky., last week, by the death of his mother, Sister J. B. Briney. We deeply regret to learn of this great loss to Brother Briney, and he and his family have our sincere sympathy in their bereavement of a faithful and loving wife and mother.

—T. Alfred Fleming, of the Miles Avenue Christian Church, Cleveland, O., is assisting Earl Wilfley in a good meeting at Crawfordsville, Ind. Brother Wilfley is a fine worker and we are not surprised that with a true and loyal following so many fathers and mothers are together taking their stand with the church.

—Mrs. Lee J. Harris writes of the encouragement which the little band at Moscow Mills, Mo., has derived from a visit of R. B. Havener, one of the Missouri state Bible school evangelists. He won the hearts there and $52 were contributed to the Bible school work and new life has been put into the congregation.

—Roy Linton Porter, who closed his work at Lake Charles, La., September 30, is at Chaneyville for a temporary stay, hoping to build up his health again, which he hopes to be able to do in two or three months so as to take some permanent work. The Lake Charles church gave him and his family a farewell social and remembered them with some things.

—J. D. Hull has been unanimously asked to remain the third year in the pastoral care of the church at Kendallville, Ind. The local newspaper not only speaks well of his effective work, both in and out of the pulpit, but gives a column and a half report of his sermon on Sunday evening under the title, "What is This New Doctrine?" The theme was, "Christianity from the Bible Viewpoint."

—C. M. Mahin, who has just closed a second meeting at North Vernon, Ind., says the church there is in need of a minister for half time and the prospect is they can employ him soon for full time. It is one of the best fields in Indiana, and is ripe for an earnest, consecrated man. G. B. Baird, who has gone to China as a missionary, was the last minister. Correspondents may write to Capt. J. D. Hudson, enclosing recommendations.

—C. M. Schoonover, of Gainesville, Texas, who has been doing successful work in Texas as pastor and evangelist for the past six years, has come north and will evangelize in the states adjacent to Chicago while his wife takes some special work in music in the city. They are at present in a successful meeting at Boston Chapel, near Girard, Illinois.

—We do not know whether it was our fault or the sender of the news paragraph, but we reported last week a reception given to J. W. Reynolds and wife at Clinton, Ill. It should have been Saunemin, Ill. Brethren should be very careful when combining two or more news items to make perfectly clear the place and time and to write names very distinctly. This would save our office force a great deal of time and the probability of making an error.

—W. J. Kimbrough writes us from Richmond, Va., that B. H. Melton has begun his fifth year with the old Marshall church, under very favorable circumstances. During his four years' pastorate the church has doubled its power in every way. The building has been greatly enlarged and improved and the congregations are among the largest in this city of 100,000 people. The church is in the midst of a revival, he says, all the time, and the Lord adds members at nearly every service.

—We do not know who had charge of making known the program of the Texas Christian Lectureship. We regret that no communication was sent to The Christian-Evangelist office. The Lectureship was held last week at Palestine, Texas, the chief speaker being Dr. H. L. Calhoun, of the Bible College, at Lexington. Brother Calhoun passed through St. Louis on his way to Texas and we had the pleasure of his presence at the mass meeting of the Disciples of Christ at the Odeon.

—One of the most perfect church buildings ever erected in the south is fast being completed at Atlanta, Ga. When completed the property of the First Christian Church will be valued at not less than $100,000. It is the idea of pastor and congregation to make it the social headquarters and religious home of the young people of their congregation and of the city. For this purpose the institutional idea has been considered in the planning of the church building. King Pendleton is the pastor.

—W. H. Bagby, whose excellent address delivered before the Texas Christian Lectureship, appeared in our two last issues writes that the work at Missoula, Mont., is moving along nicely. He writes: "Old Nick has a strong grip on this region, and the church feels his squeeze, but the tide of civilization, morality and religion follows in the wake of the star of empire. No frontier can be too remote for it to reach nor too rough for it to revolutionize. We are waiting and working for its coming to this fair and great but far northwest."

DR. J. G. M. LUTTENBERGER,
Room 403 Century Building, ST. LOUIS, MO.

—Frank L. Van Voorhis is now on his new field at Shawnee, Okla., where he reports every one standing by the work with him. He has preached twice for a sister church at Tecumseh only four miles distant, and reports it will engage a minister soon. He has started a little monthly paper to cover the local field in the way of news announcements. We note that the motto suggested for the church is "Work." Brother Van Voorhis received the best kind of commendations from the church at Okmulgee, which he recently left to take up his present charge.

—"The Lucha," a Cuban American paper, published in Havana, announces that Rev. Lowell C. McPherson who has returned to that city after several months' vacation in the states, has announced his purpose to remove to Wellsville, N. Y., where he will reside in the future. The "Lucha" adds: "This news will be received with genuine regret by every person in Cuba who has met him. Americans and Cubans alike regard him not only as an able and devoted Christian worker, but as an upright gentleman and a warm and steadfast friend. Mr. and Mrs. McPherson came to Cuba with the first army of intervention and the extent of the good he has done can not be bounded by the imagination, for he labored with Americans and Cubans alike, working in the church, charities and educational fields. The best wishes of all will go with them in their new home."

—The congregation at Bedford Ind., has just had an enthusiastic meeting, it having been announced that $5,000 has been raised towards an aim recently decided upon to remove the present mortgage on the property, which is just double that amount. The church has been burdened with a very large debt, but the hearty co-operation of Pastor E. Richard Edwards and his people has enabled the congregation to pay off between $7,000 and $8,000, independent of the current expenses. One member of the church having agreed to assume the liabilities of interest and repairs, amounting to nearly $1,100, on condition that the other members of the church raise the mortgage, has led to the goal being half way reached.

—Aims for 1907: At least, 1. Four hundred in the Bible school. 2. Four hundred readers of Christian papers. 3. Four hundred givers to take pride in the finances of the church. 4. Seventy-five at the prayer-meeting. 5. One hundred accessions. In short, a membership who love the church and the Lord and one another. "The best is none too good." The above aims were found on a card the size of a calling card. On the reverse side there is printing to certify that the bearer is a member of "the four hundred" of the Central Church of Christ, Dayton, O., of which I. J. Cahill is minister. Each member agrees to help in some way to accomplish the aim set forth above. We will be glad to hear from a great many of our preachers what definite aims they and their congregations have for 1907. If replies to this invitation prove worth while, we shall be very glad to publish them in our first issue of the new year, and we cordially invite contributions that may be helpful and that will show definite work planned by different churches.

—It is a remarkable record that the East Dallas church has. It stands in the very forefront not only in Texas but throughout the country in the amount of money it raises and the work it does, considering all the facts of the case. The third anniversary of the church has just been observed. During the past year there was raised more than $7,900, of which more than $2,800 went to missionary causes, partly itemized as follows: Home Missions, $438; Foreign Missions, $350; Church Extension, $150; Benevolent and Education, $1,500; State Missions, $350. The Ladies' Aid Society raised $1,791 for the new building. With a membership of seven less than 300, with no wealth, and worshiping in a low, flat roofed frame building, this is a remarkable financial statement. The secret of the fact that this congregation not only contributes to all good causes but is soon to erect a $30,000 building, is in its deep consecration and the fact that some of the members are tithers. During H. R. Ford's pastorate of twenty months there have been added 240 to the membership and sixty-five at regular services during the past year, though the net gain during the twelve months was only twenty-five. Brother Ford will begin his third year's pastorate January 1.

His Favorite Steed.

I received the copy of "Christian Union." I generally find it very difficult to get time for a reading of a book sent for review, and run over them enough to get a pretty good idea of them. But this was on a theme which lies very close to my heart. I have a pretty good stable full of well groomed hobbies, all of which I ride occasionally. My favorite steed from these stalls is Christian Union. You can, then, understand me when I tell you that I sat down soon after the book came, and read three-fourths of it before putting it down. I took it home with me and finished it before I slept! I can not tell how I enjoyed it, nor can I make you know how my soul was enriched by reading it. The Christian world would feel indebted to its author if only the book were read as I wish it were. The book evinces no little research in the data it contains, but the best is the Christ spirit that runs through the whole book.
the whole book. G. A. FARIS.

Gloria in Excelsis.—The New Christian Church Hymnal.

We have many song books, but this, as I view them, is the best. It is arranged to meet the needs of the entire church under all her varying conditions. The arrangement of this hymnal is the finest and most complete of any I have ever examined. It is progressive, orderly and easily accessible. The hymns have been selected not for the music only, but for the dictional value of each hymn. The wording of many has been changed to make them more perfectly in accord with the teaching of the Word of God.

The arrangements of the hymns which teach of the Christ illustrates this excellence of the book. The author begins with "The Incarnation and Advent;" then "The Life and Ministry of Jesus;" next "His Suffering and Death," "His Burial and Resurrection" and "His Ascension and Coronation." Then in order comes the hymns on "Christ's Reign and Mediation," and this part of the book closes with hymns of praise to Christ.

The next division of the book, "Hymns on the Holy Spirit," is perhaps the most distinguishing feature of the book. Here the author and committee take the largest liberty with the original poems to bring them in accord with the teaching of the word of God. The fact that they have chosen only fifteen hymns from the large number in this subject indicates the carefulness of selection. There could be a few more verbal changes to profit. But the fact that the subject is presented in a prominent way, is commendable. If we are under the guidance of the Holy Spirit and labor in His dispensation, if He abides in us and is our helper in time of need, if it is His mission through the Word and through the church to bear witness of Christ, then we as a people have not made enough of his ministry either in sermon or song. This collection and revision of hymns is not perfect, but it is a beginning in the right direction. It is a breaking away from that unscriptural custom of neglecting the Holy Spirit in our praise service and that spirit which would advise a young preacher not to preach on the work of the Holy Spirit for at least ten years. We had better make some mistakes than to neglect Him entirely.

The gospel of atonement is set forth in the same orderly manner. First are songs indicating "Our Need of Salvation," then "Salvation Provided" and "Salvation Offered." These constitute the songs of invitation while those of "Salvation Accepted" are arranged under the sub-headings of faith, repentence, confession and obedience. The same fine and scriptural analysis is followed under the general headings of "The Church," "The Christian Life," "Time and Eternity."

This hymnal furnishes songs and hymns suited for dedications, missionary meetings, ordination of officers and preachers, farewell services to ministers and missionaries; conventions, Thanksgiving and national celebrations; temperance, philanthropic and reform meetings, and special prayer-meetings. Indeed, I know of no place where songs are wont to be sung which this hymnal does not anticipate in select readings and songs.

The complete edition is some larger than we have been accustomed to, but not so unwieldly as the standard hymnals of other churches. The abridged edition presents the main features of the hymnal and is a beautiful book of convenient form and size. Since this is our greatest song book, it should have the greatest sale and have an influence to unify the worship of our people in the best hymns of the church.

—To our collection of Campbell photographs we add this week some more. On another page will be found some connected with the early days of Alexander Campbell. Here we print a picture of Mr. Campbell, made from a daguerreotype taken in Mt. Vernon, O., in 1857 or 1858, and now in the possession of F. M. Rains. The other picture is from what we believe to be the last photograph ever taken of Mr. Campbell. This was taken in 1866, and as he died on March 4 of that year, there is every reason to regard this as his last portrait. It is in the possession of Mrs. A. J. Thompson, New Albany, Ind.

Kentucky District Conventions.

We have just held the first series of district conventions that our people have ever held in southern Kentucky. We have reached fully five hundred people who had never attended a convention of any sort presenting our work. We have effected an organization in every district and selected time and place for the next convention. I give a list of the organizations.

(18) President, R. H. Crossfield, Owensboro; vice-president, F. W. Berkshire; secretary and statistician, H. B. Self. Next convention, Calhoun, October 22-23, 1907.

(19) President, S. B. Taylor, Beaver Dam; vice-president, Robt. Frazier; secretary and statistician, C. P. Austin. Next convention, Central City, November 9-10, 1907.

(20) President, W. T. Wells, Bowling Green; vice-president, J. U. Potter; secretary and statistician, H. Wade Hampton. Next convention, Russellville, November 7-8, 1907.

(21) President, J. W. Ligon, Corydon; vice-president, S. F. Fowler; secretary and statistician, S. L. Jackson. Next convention, Madisonville, October, 1907.

(22) President, John C. Gates, Princeton; vice-president, John S. Crenshaw; secretary and statistician, W. H. Jones. Next convention, Cadiz, October, 1907.

(23) President, R. O. Hester, Mayfield; vice-president, W. K. Hall; secretary, Henry Hazotte; statistician, Miss Jessie Hay. Next convention, Paducah, November, 1907. R. M. Hopkins.

Big Returns From Small Investments.

That is just what people are looking for now. That is exactly what you can get from an investment in the work of Kentucky missions. If a man's soul is worth more than all the world—what is the value of many souls? During the first sixty days of our new year's work 528 have been added to our numbers through the labors of our workers in the Kentucky state mission field. One of the great missionary organizations set as its goal last year 1,000 souls added. They spent about $200,000 to accomplish this and it is considered well spent. You will note that more than half that number were added in two months in old Kentucky and at a very small cost. We believe a Kentuckian is worth as much as anybody on the globe. The writer believes that, and he is so unfortunate as not to be a Kentuckian—except by adoption. This work is a case of big returns from small investments.

WANTED—One hundred churches to take the state missionary offering in Kentucky at once. Will yours be among the number? The November offering has begun well—let us go unto perfection. H. W. Elliott, Sec.

Kentucky Centennial Convention.

While all eyes are turned toward Pittsburg for 1909, let us not forget that our state conventions will be held in that year. There are thousands of earnest Disciples who for various reasons will not be able to attend the Pittsburg convention, and to those who go, a foretaste of the good things in the state convention will not come amiss. Many states are undertaking some special Centennial enterprise and they shall want to come to their state meetings to complete their undertakings and prepare for the Pittsburg convention.

In no state will it be more appropriate to hold a state Centennial convention in that year than in Kentucky. Here Barton W. Stone's work was done, and here much of Alexander Campbell's labor was expended.

After some careful consideration, the Bible school executive committee would like to sound the cry, "A Great Kentucky Gathering in 1909." Shall we have it, brethren? Let us hear what is thought about this. We ought soon to select the place for this Centennial convention, and possibly there is but one fitting place. We ought to prepare a program that would be appropriate for such a significant gathering. We cannot do too much in honor of our centenary.

Louisville, Ky. R. M. Hopkins.

A Most Remarkable List.

Bro. T. J. Clark has a record to be proud of. He has had just two pastorates in a ministry of thirty-five years. For twenty-two years he was with the church at Vincennes, Ind., and is now serving his thirteenth year as pastor at Bloomington.

One of our friends writes to us in the following strain:

"Brother Clark has just delivered to the publishers of The Christian-Evangelist a trainload of new readers—107 regular, bona-fide, one year, $1.50 subscribers; the kind that pay full fare and expect in return the best things—a ride in the 'Garrison coaches,' where the best articles are served regularly and in up-to-date style, with the sort of seasoning that strengthens faith in God, brings peace to the brotherhood, and inspires men to labor for precious souls.

May this substantial and commendable example of Brother Clark's cause many other pastor-conductors to say 'all-aboard, to their people and assist them into the great 'Union Train of Progress,' The Christian-Evangelist, whose engineer, firemen and brakemen are safe and sane. Every passenger is personally conducted through the brotherhood fifty-two times a year for $1.50. Purchase tickets before entering train. Day coaches only. Stops made at every Christian home. For additional information address Christian Publishing Company, General Passenger Agents, 2712 Pine street, St. Louis, Mo.

—From a Buffalo daily we make the following excerpt:

> "Authority of Religion in the Plea of Our Fathers" was the subject of a very scholarly address delivered by the Rev. B. H. Hayden, of Buffalo. "The first question in religion is, What is right? If we succeed in finding this we shall have found the seat of authority. Conscience can not be an ultimate tribunal, for to make it a seat of authority would be to make each a law unto himself. The same is true of both the inner moral sense and the inner light theory. The written Word of God, as his will revealed objectively, is alone the ultimate in religious authority. Without this we have no revelation of God that the savage 5,000 years ago did not possess. The sufficiency of the Scriptures as the ultimate in religious authority has from its inception been the plea of the restoration movemnt to which the Disciples of Christ are committed."

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Another District Convention in Oregon.

The Southwest District is the third to hold a convention in Oregon. It was held at Roseburg, November 6-8. While not so large in numbers, it fully equals our other district conventions in the quality and character of its work. Its committee on nominations and future work has in view: that the district considers itself as a force auxiliary to the state organization; that the representatives to the Turner convention be authorized to select, at said convention, the district president for the ensuing year; that time and place of our next district convention, be left in the hands of the executive board; that the Southwest District put an evangelist into the field, a dollar - league being formed in each church to provide the needed funds; and that the selection of the evangelist, and the time of service be left in the hands of the Executive Board, provided, however, that no debt be incurred; that the executive board establish the work in Marshfield and Oakland, and strengthen the weaker churches, it being the policy of the district to establish the cause in one field before taking it up in another; that each of the stronger churches undertake the establishment of a mission, in a nearby needy field, with a view of establishing the work—looking forward to further evangelism; that as a convention, we endorse the action of the state committee on benevolence in planning for the location, at Eugene, of a "Home" for old people and that we pledge our co-operation in its support.

This report was unanimously adopted by the convention. All western Oregon is now in line.

Ohio.

L. G. Walker has been holding his own meeting at Centerburg, with F. H. Cappa as singing evangelist. Brother Walker has preached for Centerburg for several years.——Bowman Hostetter, of Dundee, is holding a meeting at Tappan in Harrison county. This is the "Home church" of President Cramblet, of Bethany.——Ohio preachers still get married. This time it is W. H. Oldham, of East Liverpool. The happy bride was Miss Lyda Davidson, of Edensburg, O. Verily, he that getteth a wife getteth a good thing and obtaineth favor of the Lord.——John A. Armstrong, of McMechen, W. Va., has taken the church at North Eaton lately vacated by Robert Chapman. Alanson Wilcox, of Cleveland, supplied the North Eaton pulpit in the meantime. ——Oliver McCully has been compelled to give up the work at Lancaster on account of ill health. He is seeking restoration in Colorado.——O. L. Cook will assist Dr. S. M. Cook in a meeting at Weston this month. One of the most pleasant recollections of this scribe's ministerial life is a meeting, the second he ever held, with Dr. Cook at Mungen. It is a benediction to any man to work with Dr. S. M. Cook for a month.——An offering for Ohio Missions will be in order any time this month if it has not already been taken. In fact, it is always in order any month of the year.——J. W. Kerns, of Massillon, has been holding a meeting at Homestead, Pa. The Massillon pulpit has been supplied by Prof. Wakefield, et al., during Brother Kern's absence.——John Mullen has returned to his first love, and again located with the church at McConnelsville. His sojourn in Texas restored his health.——The Ohio letter is written this time from Lovington, Ill. Our meeting here is two days old and two strong men have confessed Christ. This place felt the influence of the great meeting at Sullivan—only eight miles away. Lovington is a fine little town of 1,000 people. It is not over churched. The disciples who were first called Christians at Antioch have a splendid meeting house here, and a fine lot of people. J. R. Parker is the faithful and much loved preacher. But his health causes him much anxiety and he may soon go to the southwest. This is the boyhood home of Finis Idleman, the efficient preacher at Paris, Ill. We have a promise of a visit from him during the meeting. Moultrie county, Illinois, of which Sullivan is the capital, and in which Lovington is situated, has no saloon within its borders. The new court house was dedicated at Sullivan yesterday and Charles Reign Scoville made the dedicatory speech.——We feel a great personal loss in the death of G. L. Wharton. Earth is poorer and heaven richer in the death of such men. May the Lord comfort his family.

Painesville, Ohio. C. A. Freer.

North Carolina.

The North Carolina Christian Missionary Convention met with the church at Dunn. There was a large attendance, and the delegates were delightfully entertained. My host was a good Baptist brother who did all he could to make me feel at home, and said that personally he wished we all were one.——The amount needed to pay interest on the bonds of Atlantic Christian College was pledged by churches. It was decided later in the convention that the corresponding secretary of the state should spend four months in the year in canvassing for the college.——A. B. Cunningham was made president of the state board and W. G. Walker, corresponding and field secretary. Brother Walker has been state evangelist the past year, and had a good report. Next year the convention goes to Bel Haven, and 500 delegates are expected. The feeling of the convention was for a greater move forward. Prof. J. C. Coggins spoke in the interests of the school at Black Mountain.——The state convention of the W. C. T. U. closed in Winston-Salem on Tuesday night. The principal attraction was the addresses of Mrs. Nannie Curtis, of Texas. She is a power on the temperance question. She will remain in the state until Christmas making temperance addresses. J. A. Hopkins.

Kansas City Notes.

Many friends will learn with regret that Bro. J. A. Dearborn, who has been failing for many months, is now nearing the close of this life. He has awaited the summons with patience and with unwavering hope and trust.——Meetings already held here this fall with the results therefor are as follows: Jackson Avenue, W. J. Lockhart, evangelist, 308 added; Sheffield, E. V. Bond, pastor and evangelist, 4 added; Ivanhoe Park, E. A. Gilliland, evangelist, 26 added; Budd Park, Mrs. Sarah McCoy Crank, evangelist, 40 added; Independence Boulevard Church, James Small, evangelist, closed with 240 added; South Prospect Church, J. H. O. Smith, evangelist, 52 added to date.——The Budd Park Church, B. L. Wray, pastor, has just closed a four weeks' meeting. Forty were added. Sister Sarah McCoy Crank, of Paragould, Ark., the evangelist, made a very favorable impression upon the community. She has done a great deal of evangelistic work, having baptized more than a thousand persons with her own hands, but this is the first meeting she has ever held in a church that had a pastor. Her work has heretofore been in new fields. The Budd Park church has been greatly strengthened. ——Meetings yet to be held here this season are as follows: Linwood Boulevard, James Small, evangelist, commencing Sunday, November 18; Forest Avenue, H. E. Wilhite, evangelist, commencing November 18; First, R. H. Crossfield, evangelist, commencing January 13; Hyde Park, John L. Brandt, evangelist, commencing in January.——The tenth annual convention of the Missouri branch of the International Order of the Kings' Daughters and Sons, was held at the First Church, November 6 to 9.——The preachers of the Churches of Christ of Kansas City continue to meet Monday mornings at 10 o'clock. Visiting brethren are always welcome. Among those present this morning, were J. H. O. Smith, of Valparaiso, Ind., Geo. T. Walden, of Sydney, Australia and W. J. Lhamon, dean of the Bible College at Columbia. Each of them addressed the meeting.——The monthly meeting of the preachers held on the day of the state board meeting was last time addressed by James Small. "A New Sermon on an Old Text" was his subject. His remarks assumed the form of a model sermon, in form, unity and matter. He was greatly enjoyed by all the brethren present, some of whom can but rarely hear a sermon delivered by another since their own pulpits require their presence continually.——Not least among the items of interest under "Kansas City Notes" is the mention of the work being done to increase the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist. Bro. J. M. Harris, accompanied by one after another of the pastors, is calling upon the members of each church in turn, beginning with the First. This campaign means much for the cause in Kansas City. It is succeeding even beyond expectations. One hundred and twenty-five names were secured in the First Church in addition to about 75 already on the list and the canvass goes on in the other churches. Barclay Meador.

Kentucky University Notes.

Our college circles have been greatly saddened by the resignation of President Jenkins. After five splendid years of service, we have been forced to give him up. Probably no man ever connected with Kentucky University has enjoyed the esteem and admiration of so many local admirers. The popularity of President Jenkins is by no means confined to the local community, but whereever he went he made friends by the score for the institution over which he so honorably presided. Aside from his splendid scholarly attainments, President Jenkins is endowed with an unusual degree of personal magnetism and power. Thousands of earnest prayers are being offered for his complete restoration to health. He has for some time been at San Antonio, Texas, where he will remain during the winter.——Prof. Thomas B. McCartney, who has been connected with the university for several years as principal of the preparatory school of the university and assistant professor of Greek, has been elected to the position of dean, and until the president is chosen will perform the inside duties of that office. He has the confidence of the university faculty and of the entire student body. He is a man of splendid scholarship, a diligent student, and is thoroughly in love with his profession.——We expect soon to begin work on the foundation of the science building, in order to have it ready for the fall term of 1907, by which time it is purposed to have raised a fund of $50,000 with which to endow and equip the scientific department of the university. With such a building, endowment and equipment, our scientific department will be second to none in all the south.

WALTER M. WHITE,
Secretary of Kentucky University.

Hiram College Notes.

The return of Prof. Charles T. Paul to Hiram, after a year in Nanking, China, has given fresh impetus to the mission study class. He is lecturing on the various countries through which he and Mrs. Paul and Justus passed on their journing on the various countries from a missionary standpoint. The majority of the student body are regular attendants and it has become necessary to use the auditorium to accommodate the audience. The deep missionary interest at Hiram is significant of great things for the church.——The warm sympathy of the whole Hiram community is with the bereaved wife and children of Brother G. L. Wharton, who was for several years the beloved pastor of the Hiram church. On his final return to India Mrs. Wharton and the children remained at Hiram. All three children are now in attendance at the college. At the special chapel service held on Tuesday, November 6, Professor Dean spoke in loving memory of his life and work. At the same chapel service, Professor Colton paid a tribute of respect and affection, in the name of the college, to another warm friend of Hiram, Capt. C. E. Henry, for many years a member of the board of trustees, and for some time president of the board. Capt. Henry gave much time and effort to the service of the college, and was one of its most loyal and enthusiastic supporters. Judge F. A. Henry, of Cleveland, his son, has been for a number of years a member of the board of trustees of the college.——Mrs. Norton, mother of F. W. Norton, '87, for many years pastor of the church at Irvington, Ind., passed away on November 15. The funeral was held November 17, Prof. G. A. Peckham officiating.——Students from four foreign countries are this year in attendance at Hiram. The majority are ministerial students. Churches desiring pulpit supply will do well to address the president or secretary.——The series of vesper services, so successfully inaugurated last year, are to be continued this year. E. B. Bagby and R. H. Miller were the first speakers and a number of prominent preachers will, during this term, give of their best thought to the Hiram community.

Entering the Battle at Wakefield, Neb.

We begin a meeting Sunday with Evangelists Putman and Miss Egbert. The decks have been cleared and we are ready for battle. The evangelist has been ordered to leave the "Blue Mantle" at home and to bring all the sunshine possible. The expense of battle has been provided and the armor has been brightened. We have thoroughly canvassed the field and every thing loose has been marked. Each soldier in our army will be given his man and we will fight it out in a hand to hand fight. The clouds will all be pushed back toward Norfolk, the snow banks will all be melted, the lips of tattlers will be sewed up, and we will endeavor to strengthen all the weak points —(Monday nights). In the first engagement the soldiers will cast the net on the right side of the ship while the captain fires over their heads at the enemy in the rear. If when the smoke clears away and the net has been drawn in and we have caught and killed nothing, we will say it is a hard field and it was impossible to do anything.

The City by the Sea.

Leaving New Orleans the last of May we passed through Shreveport, the city of Bro. Claude L. Jones. I use the expression advisedly, for there is probably no more prominent, certainly not a more influential, man in Shreveport than our Claude L. Jones. He has been pegging away there for more than half a dozen years and to-day he is the pastor of the largest Church of Christ in Louisiana. Shreveport is one of the prettiest hustling, bustling towns in the south.

At Joplin, visiting with relatives and friends we spent about a week. At Bro. W. F. Turner's request I spoke to the First Church on Home Missions in the South. I have the honor of being the "living-link" representative of this church on the home field. By the way, why should not the home society "echo" the foreign in this matter of "living-links." The more "living-link" churches at home the more there will be abroad. If the chains or links are not so big or long they are nevertheless important. Let such echoes sound and reverberate through our whole country.

Along the way to Charleston, riding along the beautiful French Broad river, and wondering how the mountaineers could possibly cultivate the vertical fields of corn which stood like green walls here and there, we got acquainted with a stranger, who was not a stranger, J. T. Boone, of Jacksonville, Fla. He had been visiting his mother in Tennessee and convalescing from an attack of typhoid fever. Brother Boone was once pastor of the First Church in Joplin. Everyone knows of the great work he is doing in Jacksonville.

C. E. Smith, my predecessor here, was one time located at Webb City, a suburb of Joplin. Counting Mrs. Ely Joplin has thus given this southeast region at least four workers. Brother Smith is now our state evangelist.

Yes, we are still in the Sunny South. 'Tis the sea that makes this city—Charleston—the beautiful! Charleston—the city rising out of the sea!—Old stone and brick and iron fences inclosing old colonial mansions give to it the name of Charleston the quaint. New Orleans was to a great extent a foreign city. Charleston is thoroughly American. Charleston is the typical southern city with the aroma of the times "befo' de wah" and the revolutionary period still in its atmosphere. Charleston is the city of Owen Wister's "Lady Baltimore" and the Lady Baltimore cake which his novel has made famous. Perhaps no other city in America has endured such terrible sufferings and no people have fought more bravely for what they believed to be the right. Charleston may be a little slow, but she is "getting a move on." The last six months have seen rapid strides forward. The U. S. Government is building a great navy yard here. New railroads are being projected. New steamship lines are being established. Just now the city is agog over the arrival of the North German Lloyd's immigrant ship with 476 European immigrants on board. This is the first time in 50 years that an immigrant ship has landed its passengers at the port of Charleston. It is expected that these immigrants and those that follow will help solve the labor problem in South Carolina and develop the marvelous resources of the state. South Carolina and the southeast now becomes the strategic center for the work of the American Christian Missionary Society. If the tide of immigration is turned toward the south where it is most needed then the churches of Christ should be prepared for the great opportunity which opens before them.——The Calhoun Street Church of Christ of Charleston (not Baltimore as one of our papers printed it) has a membership of about 100. They are mostly wage-earners getting from $5 to $18 per week. Not more than one or two have an income of $100 per month. But we have some splendid people and some who "seek first His kingdom." On October 14, we began the work of paying off a debt of $1,900 due the Church Extension Board. $1,700 of the amount was raised in a few moments to be paid by June 2, 1907. Over $350 has already been received by the treasurer and one note taken up and the people's free-will offering to Church Extension in September was $50. On account of our debt-raising I was unable to get to Buffalo. But on November 5, by means of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and "Christian Standard," I was able to give for our people some stirring "echoes" of the convention. Some of the audience thought surely I had been to the convention. But I told them I had been to our papers. By the way, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST seems to have "scooped" the "Christian Standard" this time on convention news and addresses. We are glad that the convention goes to Norfolk next year. The brotherhood is hereby invited to go via Charleston.

Oregon Churches and Oregon Missions.

Already one church that made no offering last year, has sent in its gift. One brother, the offering from whose church is not yet in, writes: "Sunday we got two new life members and seven annual members, and a cash offering of $5.25." This church already has six life members. Life members pay $5 per year for five years and annual members pay $2 a year. If the other ministers and churches do likewise, and in proportion to their ability, there will be no question about the successful issue of our work in Oregon. May our vision of the field be continually enlarged, and may our gifts grow with our vision of the work to be done.

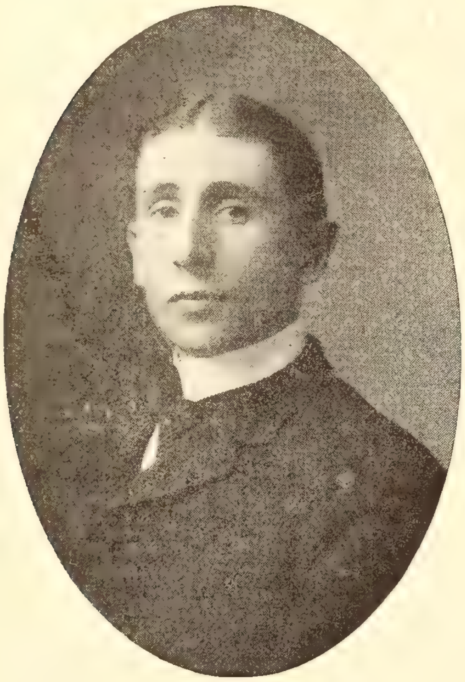
The Christian Church in Carthage, Mo.

Set upon the Ozarks in a rich land, surrounded by the most lavish gifts of God, Carthage, a city of 15,000 people, is beautiful in appearance and cultured in its life. With lead and zinc producing districts and towns on every side, Carthage is the resident town, the city of homes.

Many years ago the Missouri State Board of Missions established a church in Carthage. The site of the first church house was on the ground now occupied by the Grand Opera House. Outgrowing its first home the congregation sought more ample accommodations a quarter of a century ago, and in that building they still worship and here a meeting is now being held by W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky., as evangelist, and F. H. Cappa and wife, of Louisville, Ky., in charge of the music.



Newell L. Sims.

The present membership of the church is about 400 and it includes many of the best families in the city. One of the church's deacons, and the former superintendent of the Bible school, was elected to congress from this district at the last election. The Hon. Thomas Hockney is the kind of a man needed in public life.

The church has launched out into larger things during the past year. It has lead the churches of Jasper county, excepting the First Christian Church of Joplin, in sending its own missionary, Dr. W. C. Widdowson, to Africa, and it is now working for a new $25,000 edifice which is to be built on the present site.

The congregation has been served by several able men as pastors, among them, W. A. Oldham, now of Kansas, and J. T. McGarvey, now of Warrensburg, Mo. The present pastor is Newell L. Sims who is in his second year's work. The meeting began November 18 and is to run at least one month. Extensive preparations have been made on the part of the church for a great revival. The aim of the congregation is to double its membership by 1909, at which time the Christian churches celebrate their Centennial Anniversary. The watchword of the Carthage church is, "The Christian Church the greatest church in Carthage. At least one hundred souls for Christ in this meeting, and a new house by 1909." We trust that all these aims will be more than realized and we wish the brethren in Carthage great success in their work.

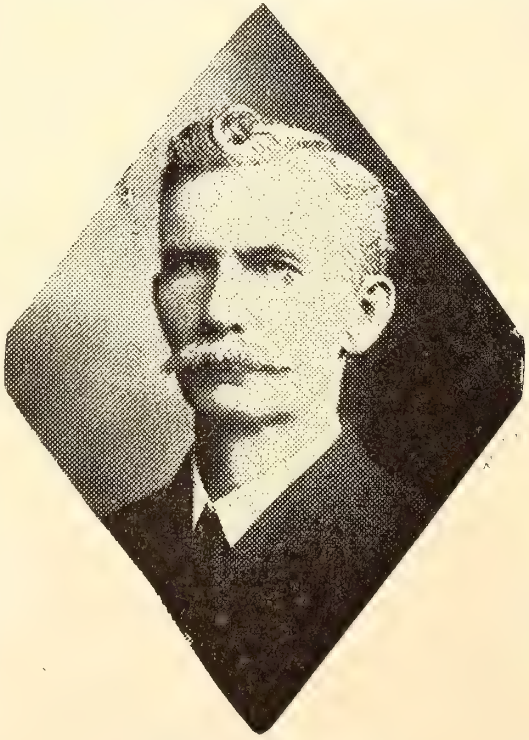
A Great Day at Christian University.

To celebrate the clearing of the $15,000, already reported in the Christian-Evangelist, and to rededicate the Christian University, November 16 was set apart at Canton, Mo., as a gala day. All business in our little city was suspended from 2 to 6 p. m. At 2 o'clock all the church bells rang the glad joy that our college was free from debt. In the afternoon speeches were made by O. C. Clay and A. D. Lewis, both of Canton, and by Cor. Sec. T. A. Abbott, of Kansas City. All of these gentlemen are alumni of the institution. President Carl Johann also gave a concise synopsis of recent struggles. Professors Buxton and Sears participated. Preliminary to the evening session the crowd was treated to a display of fireworks managed by B. S. M. Edwards of the student body. The evening session was the climax of interest and enthusiasm. The first speaker was Prof. S. C. Barber, of Denver, Ill., a former member of the faculty and a firm friend of the institution. He was followed by former president J. H. Hardin. Then came Congressman J. T. Lloyd, a Christian University alumnus, a great favorite with us and one of our best friends. A pleasing feature of his remarks was the presentation at the close to President Johann of a handsome solid gold watch, the gift of the friends of the college as a token of their love and esteem.

The committee in charge had secured the finest easily obtainable, but there was remaining over, the sum of $45 which was also presented in gold coin. Pres. Johann for a time was speechless. Amidst the singing of the doxology, the room darkened, the veteran educator struck the match, and as the flame from the burnt mortgage smouldered out, the dedicatory prayer was offered by the writer. With social converse and delicate refreshments served by the ladies of the College Aid Society, a historic day for Christian university drew to a close.



President Carl Johann.

Thus, up out of ashes, overcoming many an obstacle, we now have an excellent new building, modern in every respect, the best in the brotherhood, absolutely free from debt. Too much can not be said in praise of President Johann and his part in this. At a meeting of the ministerial association of the university, resolutions of Centennial ideals were adopted and the same were unanimously ratified at the evening session of the celebration. The resolutions look to a gymnasium, two new dormitories, $100,000 additional endowment, and 500 students, 150 of whom shall be ministerial students.

When You Take Cold

One way is to pay no attention to it; at least, not until it develops into pneumonia, or bronchitis, or pleurisy. Another way is to ask your doctor about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. If he says, "Just the thing," then take it. Do as he says, anyway.

We have no secrets! We publish the formulas of all our preparations. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Pioneering in Wisconsin.

For two years a voice has been coming to me from the wilderness of Burnett county, the extreme northwest county of the state, saying, "Come up and preach the Word to us." It came from Brother and Sister H. L. Radabaugh, of Moro Postoffice, who have been there on a homestead for six years, and have been leading their neighbors in Bible study and worship. It is a very sparsely settled district, in which were nine Disciples, most of whom Brother Radabaugh baptized.

I went up to them, the last 30 miles of the journey being made with team and wagon. I took with me W. L. Anderson, of Cameron, who has had training and experience in evangelistic singing, and who is a devoted Christian, and we held a 12 days' meeting, which resulted in 23 baptisms and five others added, unifying the neighborhood, forming a more complete organization, and making a start toward a house of worship. Most of the people of the vicinity are in the church, and they are a responsive, large-hearted people. The spirit of the Christ seemed to prevail throughout. H. F. Barstow.

The St. Louis Campaign.

The special simultaneous campaign in which eight of the St. Louis churches have been engaged, will have closed by the time this rep reaches our readers. Weather conditions were bad the first part of last week and only churches continued, and Compton Heights closed on Wednesday night, W. E. Harlow giving a lecture. As we write (Saturday) we understand that the Fourth and Hamilton Avenue churches may continue until Thanksgiving. F. M. Rains and C. M. Chilton are the speakers at the Sunday afternoon rally in the Odeon theatre. We shall in our next issue give fuller reports.

The total additions reported on Saturday morning were:

	By Confession.	Otherwise.	Total.
Union Avenue	37	33	70

Good Workers at Lebanon.

The church at Lebanon, Mo., has closed a four weeks meeting. Harold Bell Wright, the pastor, did the preaching. The series of sermons was from the words of Jesus. The text was, "Heaven and Earth Shall Pass Away, but My Words Shall Not Pass Away." At the suggestion of Brother Wright, and by his hand, a number of mottoes were painted from the words of Jesus, and hung on the walls of the church, and a large banner printed in red, bearing the words, "What does Jesus say about it?" was hung across Commercial street, in the business portion of the town. This attracted the attention of the people. Smaller notices containing the same words adorned the windows of most of the business houses and many of the dwellings of the city. Brother Wright handled the subject in a masterful way, entirely new to most of his hearers, and he attracted the people until the capacity of the house was taxed to its utmost. Brother Conrad Kundson, pastor of the Lebanon Baptist church, led the music and sang a solo every night, adding much to the effectivenss of the services. There were 29 additions, of which 25 were by confession. The introductory services of each session were conducted by the members of the church and all entered into the work heartily. The church has been strengthened and built up during this meeting, and all look forward to a year of successful work for the Master. T. B. Burley.

JESUS ON THE CROSS.—Luke 23:33-46.

Memory verses, 42, 43.

Golden Text.—Father, forgive them: for they know not what they do.—Luke 23:34.

The amazing thing about the record of the crucifixion is the simplicity of it. There is no indignation, no passion, no excitement on the part of the writer. There is no attempt to convey any impression of pathos or horror or sympathy or conviction, except such impression as will be made by the simple facts simply stated. This same self-restraint characterizes all of the gospels throughout, but nowhere is it more conspicuous or more effective than here where the temptation to give the narrative a strong emotional quality must have been greatest.

The journey from Pilate's judgment hall to the hill of Golgotha was by a route which has come to be known as the Via Dolorosa. The records give us no information about this mournful journey except the carrying of the cross, the compulsory service of Simon the Cyrenian, the following of the triumphant mob and the lamenting women, and the warning addressed to the "daughters of Jerusalem." Catholic tradition has elaborated this simple outline with many beautiful but unauthentic legends such as the story of the veil of St. Veronica and the meeting of Jesus with his mother and has systematized by the nine stations of the cross.

The place of the crucifixion, Golgotha or the place of the skull, received its name either because of its accustomed use as a place of execution, or from the real or fancied resemblance of the low hill to the shape of a human skull, or (according to the pious imaginings of some of the fathers) because of a tradition that the skull of Adam, having been preserved by Noah, was buried at that place.

The most momentous fact in history is stated with all possible simplicity: "There they crucified him and the malefactors, one on the right hand and the other on the left."

The recorded sayings of Jesus on the cross are seven. In their probable order, they are:

1. "Father, forgive them." (Luke.)
2. "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." (Luke.)
3. "Woman, behold thy son!" (John.)
4. "My God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. and Mark.)
5. "I thirst." (John.)
6. "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." (Luke.)
7. "It is finished." (John.)

It will be observed that no evangelist reports more than three of the seven, and only one of the seven is given by as many as two of the gospels. Such passages where the gospels neither corroborate nor contradict each other in details furnish a strong evidence that they were written in good faith as historical documents. If the fourth gospel, for example, were a second century forgery, written after all the other gospels were in general circulation, its author would scarcely have dared to omit the four sayings given by the others and give three new ones of his own.

"Father, forgive them." The keynote of the life of Jesus was forgiveness. It would have nullified all his teaching if, in his own hour of supreme agony, he had not risen above thoughts of revenge to the plane of forgiveness.

"Save thyself," said the mocking Jews. That was just what Jesus could not do without being false to his mission. He did not come to save himself, but to sacrifice himself to save others. The cry "he saved others, himself he can not save," had more truth in it than its cruel authors knew.

We are not called upon to philosophize about the process or degree of salvation in the case of the penitent thief. The case was clearly exceptional. One thing it may fairly be taken to exhibit, and that is the boundless love of God which is ready to accept a penitent sinner whenever the sinner will truly turn to him.

WORDS FROM THE CROSS.—John 19:25-30; Luke 23:34-46; Mark 15:34.

DAILY READINGS.

M. A Prayer.	Luke 23-34.
T. A Promise.	Luke 23:43.
W. A Charge.	John 19:26, 27.
T. An Exclamation.	Mark 15:34.
F. A Request.	John 19:28.
S. A Declaration.	John 19:30.
S. A Commitment.	Luke 23:46.

As sunshine follows after the rain, so because of unfaltering loyalty, "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit" follows after "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" So may it be with us. If not before, at least in our closing days, may all the storms have rolled away and an aurora of perfect trust and unalloyed joy suspend over every child of God.

Paul's thesis that suffering with Jesus necessarily precedes our glorification with him has an illustration in the relations of the dying thief and the crucified. Of that convict it may be said, "No cross no crown." While Christ's mercy to one who had so lately reviled him is conspicuous in the incident we should be no less impressed by its suggestiveness that through the shadows of the cross we must all pass to attain unto the gates of paradise.

Jesus not only seemed to suffer but actually endured all the pangs of dissolution in one of its cruelest forms. "I thirst" reveals to us that the pitiless irons had transformed his blood into molten fire for whose extinguishment every nerve was pleading. But he thirsted not in vain. Remembering how he thirsted for our sakes has helped his followers of every age to curb thirst for gold, place, power and all things that would lure us out of the straight and narrow way.

Christ's strange doctrine was, "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, bless them that curse you, pray for them that despitefully use you." When the supreme test came his doctrine was also his practice. At the moment when those disciples who still had faith in him believed that with full proof of the criminality of his foes manifest to all the world and ages he would destroy them from the earth, with divine benignity he prayed "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

If there is one earth-born in heaven to whom Jesus accords more honor than another it must be the gentle Mary. She who was in such affectionate memory on the cross can not be forgotten from the throne. If there are yet others to be chiefly blessed among women in heaven, it must be those mothers who have reared sons to be most like Mary's. When Jesus said, "Behold thy mother," he was for all the ages proclaiming filial affection to be one of the most beautiful gems in the diadem of true manhood.

If there has been anything lacking to convince us that Christ was tempted in all points like as we are, it is supplied by this cry of anguish from the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" The spirit that could stand hunger and smiting and rejection by men might easily be broken under the impression of divine abandonment. Through that state our Savior goes true; though apparently forsaken he would not renounce the Father. But there was only darkness intervening. Above the clouds, as always over us when in sorrow, was the compassionate face of the Father looking down upon his Son.

Notwithstanding the malignity of his foes and the instability of his friends, Christ's work was complete when he yielded up the spirit. The Savior's "It is finished" was the inspiration of Paul's "The time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." So may it be our inspiration to tasks completed and our assurance of awaiting approval and rewards.

SANATIVE SHAVING.

A New Method Which Makes Shaving a Pleasure to Men with Tender Skins.

Cuticura Soap (Medicinal and Toilet) is a luxury for shaving. It possesses in a modified form all the emollient sanative, and antiseptic properties of Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, while supplying a firm, moist, non-drying, creamy, and fragrant lather. This up-to-date method of shaving dispenses with the shaving mug, prevents irritation and inflammation of the skin and hair glands, is most agreeable and comforting, and makes frequent shaving a pleasure rather than a discomfort. Full directions wrapped around each cake of soap.

THE WORK OF CHRISTIAN WOMEN.—Phil. 4:3.

"Inspired with wisdom from above,
And with discretion blessed;
Displaying meekness, temperance, love,
Of every grace possessed:

"These are the ones we seek of thee,
O God of righteousness!
Such may thy servants ever be,
With such thy people bless."

One can not enumerate the heroes and martyrs of the sacred cause of temperance without reciting the names of Francis E. Willard and her colleagues. "In fact, call the women away and where is the great and holy empire in the world to-day that would not at once fall into ruin?"

A Christian star of the first magnitude now coming into ascendency is Sister M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, recently elected corresponding secretary of our C. W. B. M. We call upon all Disciples everywhere to co-operate with this gifted woman as she organizes and leads our forces for the conquest of all this world for Christ and his church.

Phoebe, deaconess of the congregation at Cenchrea, had no husband, but did have a great mission that kept her from living unto herself alone and fully redeemed her life from the commonplace. What a tribute Paul pays her: "For she herself also hath been a succorer of many, and of mine own self." When questions as to the scripturalness of women office bearers is raised, be it remembered Phoebe was a deaconess in an apostolic church. She is a representative of the unmarried but useful servants of our Lord as Priscilla is of those who also had family cares.

Mary never thought her act of adoration in anointing her Lord for his burial would be a memorial of her wherever his Gospel should be preached. Neither did Dorcas know the garments she made for the poor and all the good she did would be plead as reasons for a miracle raising her from the dead. They simply did their duty as they had light to see it and committed all the consequences to him who takes note of all things. So let us proceed, regardless of self, doing what we can in holiness for the saving of men through the upbuilding of the church and God will not only raise us from the dead, but memorialize us and signally honor us among the angels.

Even under the old dispensation were characters that to this day are part of the glory of the world's womanhood. Conspicuous among these was Hannah, wife of Elkanah a dweller of the hill country of Ephraim. To her was born little Samuel. Taking him to the great priest Eli in the holy temple she said: "For this child I prayed; and Jehovah hath given me my petition which I asked of him; therefore I also have granted him to Jehovah; as long as he liveth he is granted to Jehovah." This child thus dedicated unto the Lord became the first of the great prophets of Israel, one of the most helpful and sublime characters of history. O, the needs of the world are calling upon the ranks of motherhood for Hannahs to come to the altars of the Lord and consecrate sons to the ministry of prophets, priests and saviors of the race.

Among the most picturesque early Christians is Priscilla, wife of Aquila. Paul finds them in Corinth whither they had fled when Claudius banished the Jews from Rome. Paul abode with them a year and a half working at their common trade of weaving tent cloth. When Paul returns east, they accompany him as far as Ephesus. When the golden-mouthed Apollos comes to Ephesus knowing only the baptism of John, they took him and taught him the way of the Lord more perfectly. In Romans 16, we learn they have returned to Rome and their house is the assembly of Christians, and they are said to have endangered their lives for the apostle. In the first references to this couple Aquila is named first, but afterward Priscilla has the pre-eminence, indicating that she is the more energetic and devoted of the two. How different her life and glory from those of millions of her sisters of that and succeeding ages whose time and energies have been devoted to the rounds of fashionable idleness!

QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS

BY S. D. GORDON

The author of "Quiet Talks on Prayer" (now in its 55th thousand), and "Quiet Talks on Power" (now in its 80th thousand).

Cloth, 12mo. 288 pages. Net 75c.

"QUIET TALKS ABOUT JESUS" is an attempt to group up in simplest Anglo-Saxon English the statements of the entire Bible regarding Jesus. The purpose is wholly practical, that one may get at a glance, for his own thought and heart, the swing of the Bible from end to end on its central theme. Mr. Gordon's life work has been leading up to the theme of this new book.

TOPICAL ARRANGEMENT

FIRST—The purpose of Jesus' coming; the plan of his coming; the tragic break that occurred in the plan; the surprises that worked out of that break.
SECOND—The Person of Jesus from three points of view: the human; the divine; the winsomeness of his personality.
THIRD—The seven great outstanding experiences which reveal Jesus: the Jordan Baptism; the Wilderness Temptation; the Transfiguration as an emergency unusual; the Gethsemane struggle; the Victory of Calvary.
FOURTH—Study Notes. One of the most important features of the book, making it possible for the earnest reader to follow for himself Mr. Gordon's essential methods.

TRAVELS IN CLASSIC AND BIBLE LANDS

By THOMAS WALLACE, A. M.

beautifully illustrated and contains nearly 850 pages, bound in heavy cloth with pictorial designs, and gold letters on back and side. Postpaid, $3.00.

ARTS AND INDUSTRIES

ancient and modern historic sites, ancient land marks, decisive battlefields in the world's greatest wars are described as seen. Many out of the way places are also described where there are no laws to protect, people without intelligence to direct and religion founded on fatalism without power to reform.

LIVING AND DEAD CITIES,

are also described including Paris, Rome, Naples, Alexander, Cairo, Constantinople, Athens, Corinth, Jaffa and Jerusalem. Troy, Carthage, Ephesus, Memphis, Pompeii, Herculaneum, Jericho and other cities renowned in history.

FINE ARTS AND ARCHITECTURE

In this field the most renowned paintings, statues, pyramids, tombs, catacombs, cathedrals, temples and the mightiest monuments of the Old World are fully described.

IN NATURAL SCENERY

The grandeur of the Alps, the desolate wilds of Sahara, the devastating eruption of Vesuvius, the fertile valley of the Nile, the almost enchanted lands along the Bosphorus and among the fabled isles of the Aegean sea with the sacred hills, plains, seas, and prophetic places of Palestine are all included, together with the trials of travel met with in the sand storms of the desert, the monsoon of the orient and the sirocco of the Mediterranean sea.

Why Silent?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I few days ago I was called to the country to see a sick member of my church, a fine young man and county superintendent of schools, who was thought by his physicians to be at the point of death. The young man had recently been received into our membership and came from the Brethren Church or Dunkards. When I arrived at the home I found three elders of the church who had been called together with myself for the purpose of anointing the young man. The elder, an excellent man and citizen, approached me saying, "Brother, we have been sent for to anoint this young man in the name of the Lord." Then turning to James 5:14, 15, he said: "Do you believe that Scripture?" Telling him that I did, he replied: "I can't understand why you people do not practice it." After assuring him that I believed the Scripture read, we proceeded to anoint the young man, who is to-day well. Was I not right and Scriptural in this, and why do our people believe it and not practice it? If "where the Bible speaks we speak," why are we silent on this passage that promises such a great blessing?

A Bit of History.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Since the organization in western Pennsylvania of the movement known as the "Disciples of Christ," the organization has never been without a coterie of brethren who have acted as a committee of safety. They are distinguished for the anxious solicitude which they manifest for the purity and safety of the church and a strange lacking of confidence in the mental ability and Christian integrity of brethren who do not sympathize with them in their doubts and fears. Indeed they have indulged these feelings until they have become possessed with the idea entertained by an old Quaker who thought "everybody was queer but Jane and me, and sometimes thought Jane was a little queer." With this feeling in their minds and in their anxious solicitude for the purity and safety of the church, these brethren are ever on the lookout for signs of heresy, and ready to prevent its introduction into the church, by ambitious and designing men. Another virtue possessed by these brethren is their profound veneration for the teaching of the Fathers, correctly interpreted, but particularly for the "declaration," which reads: "Where the Scriptures speak we acquiesce, and where they are silent we interpret." There is, however, just one thing in which these brethren are a little "queer." It partakes largely of the nature of an hallucination. They are possessed with the idea that in the opposition they have made to every movement towards perfection that has been proposed in the church, they represented the brotherhood, as against a few ambitious and unscrupulous men, when, on the contrary, it is a fact in the history of the Disciples that every such measure of prominent importance, notwithstanding this opposition, has been accepted by the brotherhood and is now in approved and successful working among all of the churches. Notably among these measures may be mentioned the introduction of Sunday-schools; co-operation with the Society of "Evangelican Alliance;" admission of women into active work in the church; introduction of instrumental music into the worship; the organization of, first, the Home and later the Foreign Missionary Societies. These all met with the same opposition, that is now urged against the present movement of the entire Christian world, to hasten by concerted action, the concentration in one body all of God's people; a condition for which Jesus so fervently prayed, and the accomplishment of which he declared would be the crowning evidence that would bring the world to acknowledge the divinity of his mission. That a movement with such an end in view could meet with opposition from any Christian people is almost incredible, but that it could exist and find expression among a people whose boasted mission and purpose was this end is simply inexplicable.

The history of the introduction of these measures into the Christian church, as special means for the general purpose, is interesting, marked as they are by indications of providential directions and confirmed in every instance by marvelous success.

THE NEW TEXAS-CALIFORNIA. — The Gulf Coast and Rio Grande Valley of Texas is the most attractive region known to us for both the Home-Seeker and the Investor. It is the home of the Citrus fruits, English walnuts, Figs and Grapes. The truck-farmer puts his products on the market from four to six weeks earlier than from any other portion of the country. He is 1500 miles nearer to the great markets than California. Our organization is especially trying to interest members of the Christian Church, so that the settler will have the advantage of his accustomed religious influence. —Extra copies of this superb number for sale while the supply lasts—5 cents a copy, six for 25 cents, $2.00 per hundred.

—As well a farmer succeed without plows as preachers without books. We sell any book published on either side of the Atlantic, and at lowest prices.

—The Garrison Library—A reconstructive theology: "Helps to Faith," "The Holy Spirit," "Christian Union," Most helpful of devotionals: "Alone with God,"' "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," "The Heavenward Way." These great books by a great Christian man for $5.00.

—The pink subscription blank you will find in next week's paper is not a reminder of your delinquency (the yellow label tells the time to which you are paid) but an invitation for you to take part in the "each one win one" festivities of our friends. If this can be accomplished twice, we shall have passed the 100,000 mark.

—For one new subscriber before Jan. 1, 1907, we offer as a premium a large long primer, cloth bound New Testament. For two we offer the American kitchen set of six pieces, or a stereoscope and 50 scenic cards; or a seven piece Gold Coin initial fruit set, very beautiful. For five, half dozen quadruple plate silver teaspoons. These premiums will make excellent Christmas presents.

—In addition to our already large number of readers from Brothers Richardson's and Cupp's Kansas City congregations came a list of 152 new subscriptions at $1.50 each last week. We are advised "there are more to follow." To all appearances there will soon be a Christian-Evangelist in nearly every Disciple's home in that city. Among other things this will guarantee our enterprising churches in that remarkable city will suffer no retrogression in faith and all good works.

—Notwithstanding the increased cost of labor, paper and other publishers' requisites, it is our intention to continue The Christian-Evangelist at the popular price of $1.50 per annum. Will not our friends aid us in this by doubling our present circulation. Greatly inferior denominational papers are being sold at $2.00. Patronizing our Bible school literature and book departments will greatly assist us in keeping the paper at a price easily within the reach of all.

—We much prefer having new Bible schools come to us from denominational publishing houses rather than from others of our own brotherhood in building up our rapidly growing business in this line. Any Disciple publications are better for making mature Disciples of Bible school children than are colorless inter-denominational teachings. And yet when our schools select from our own literature, why not get the best—which is a common name for the W. W. Dowling series?

—Many approving comments on the numerous evangelistic reports and editorials freight each day's mail. Terse, concise, scriptural articles on the various phases of Christian evangelism are highly prized by our editors and readers. We wish to be of the greatest possible assistance to all our evangelists, both by fostering zeal for conversions in the hearts of all Disciples and in helping them to growth in grace and the knowledge of the Lord Jesus when the meeting is over. Evangelists, make use of The Christian-Evangelist.

—300, 500, or 1000 Christian-Evangelists judiciously distributed each week in the vicinity where a revival meeting is in progress will insure not only a full house, but a large congregation of prepared listeners. Without extra cost we send with the first shipment a lot of pink circulars containing the pictures of pastor and evangelist and suitable local announcements. Concerning their use Frank W. Allen, of Odessa, Mo., writes: "Let me say how delighted I am with the plan of using The Christian-Evangelist during a meeting. It stimulates interest and adds a dignity to the local work."

—We have been fortunate enough to secure Miss Eva Lemert, formerly Geo. H. Combs' assistant in the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, to assist in our Bible school department. Among her activities will be the direction of a school of methods in practical conduct of schools—a realm of usefulness in which she has been signally successful. "Our Young Folks" will have the benefit of her personal contributions on these important themes. This paper will continue its present low price of 75 cents per annum. Thousands of teachers and officers should have the help of Sister Lemert's writings.

—Each week for many months we have published a list of clubs of new subscriptions received at the unvarying price of $1.50 each. When the clubs fall below the average the symmetry of our growth is usually preserved by an unusual number of new subscriptions coming by singles and twos. We can not be said to be "booming" for there is nothing spasmodic or over-reaching about our growth. We have already passed many widely known journals and are pressing the leaders of circulation and believe that soon The Christian-Evangelist will be the most widely read church paper in America. Here are last week's clubs:

Kansas City, Louis S. Cupp, pastor	4
Englewood, Kan.	4
Washington, Pa.	10
Lexington, Ky., I. J. Spencer, pastor	17
Niagara Falls, N. Y., J. A. Wharton, pastor	21

—In gratifying numbers the readers of the "Southern Evangelist" are sending remittances to continue their membership in The Christian-Evangelist family. The ideals of the "Southern Evangelist" can in no wise be likened to a "Lost Cause." In The Christian-Evangelist they will be presented to a vaster constituency, and through these columns Brothers Shelnutt and Adams will continue to fire the Southern heart with appeals for the chivalric defence of the faith once delivered, and the triumphs of primitive Christianity through all that fair region of our common inheritance. We hope to soon hear from each of these new members adopted into our family through our affiliation with the "Southern Evangelist."

THE ANALYSIS OF CHRISTIAN UNION
